"Crazy."

That's our cat's name. Its a curious name, but she earned it when a kitten by her activity and antics. As I came into the house a few evenings since, she lay on the stand by the stove (she is quite a privileged character), as I opened the door she lazily opened her eyes, gazed upon me for a moment, and closed them again. She saw me and knew me, and so continued her doze. But when strangers come she is always uneasy.

As she closed her eyes with a satisfied look, like a flash the thought came into my mind,—What was it saw me from the table? Was it mere matter? Can matter perceive, recognize and distinguish persons? What was it saw me? It was not the eye; for I have had dead eyes before me often that could not see. There is a nervous membrane, however, in the eye, which reaches back from it in a cord called the optic nerve. This nerve extends to the brain. If it be severed, however perfect the eye may be, "Crazy" cannot see. Her eyes must be connected with the brain in order for her to see me. Now does "Crazy's" brain take cognizance of objects by means her eye, or is there a something back of the brain, or in it, or about it, that uses the eye through the brain as an organ of sight? If "Crazy" took cognizance of my presence by means of an impression conveyed through the eye and the optic nerve to the brain only, then it is demonstrated that matter organized by Deity for that purpose can perceive other forms of matter. But is perception a quality of matter?

But further: "Crazy" not only saw me, but she thought. She heard me come in, opened her eyes to see who it was, saw it was me, knew me. All this demonstrates thought and mental action, and exercise of will power and intelligence. Where in "Crazy" does this intelligence reside. In her brain? Then matter may be so organized as to become intelligent. Now if a cat by her brain can perceive, think, will, and manifest intelligence, why may not my brain serve me the same purpose.

But that is materialism.

Well suppose it is. We won't quarrel about names now, its the facts we are after. It is asserted that matter (no qualifications are made) cannot think: only immaterial spirit can think. Very well, then, "Crazy," You have an 'immaterial spirit' within you. (Crazy lazily opened and shut her eyes, as if in wonder at such sentiments.) No, Crazy, this immaterial body that I stroke, this ear that I playfully pinch, and that tremulous tail that warns me not to pinch too hard, or there will be a new movement and an unsheathing of claws in self-defense, this beautiful coat of tortoise-varied fur; these are not the real cat that perceives, loves, hates (dogs), is jealous of babies (a fact): this is all the work of an immaterial "Crazy" within you. You possess "a DUAL nature." And as what is immaterial is indestructible, it follows that you are immortal. Your material organism is mortal, and must die; but your immaterial spirit must live forever.

I suppose somebody will say I am proving myself no better than a cat. Not at all. I am only proving that if God could organize a thinking cat out of the dust of the ground, he could organize a more perfect being, of vastly higher order from the same, and that immaterialism is not a necessity. And, also, proving that if it be impossible for the Maker of all to organize matter in a form in which it can exercise intelligence; that if an immaterial substance is essential to thought, then our "Crazy" has an "immortal soul!" And if it be averred that the immaterial "Crazy" will perish at death, then it follows that an "immaterial substance" is destructible, and the soul may perish in spite of the efforts of theologians and philosophers to keep it alive.

A Diluted Gospel.

Much is preached for gospel at the present day that somewhat resembles gospel, containing just enough to give it a coloring like gospel, just as milk and water resembles the pure milk, though it may be three quarters water. It is bad enough to water milk, but still worse to water the gospel, for God's people need the "pure milk of the word, that they may grow thereby;" but they will grow poor on the water of tradition and error. Salvation is preached, but it is the salvation of ghosts, and not of men. A kingdom is proclaimed, but it is a kingdom for disembodied souls, and not for physical men, besides preceding the judgment, with a physical King over immaterial subjects —a resurrected Jesus reigning over disembodied spirits. It would look more in harmony with reason, as well as Revelation, to have the subjects possess real bodies like the King, but in order to have this the case, an entrance into the kingdom must be deferred till the coming of Christ, agreeing with Paul's statement; "Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. (Phil. 3; 20, 21.) The supposition that we may reign while in the kingdom without bodies, and then leave the kingdom, to obtain bodies to talk back to the kingdom again, is an unfounded conjecture. If bodiless men are to be saved, we must have bodiless subjects in the kingdom; and then, to have an adaptation of things, we ought to have a bodiless King over them. But if physical men are to be saved, we must have physical subjects, under a physical King; but in order to have physical men saved and ushered into the kingdom, we must wait till the resurrection comes. A diluted gospel differs from the pure gospel in these, and many other particulars; (1) it proposes to save bodyless men, thus making the resurrection needless; (2) it proposes to save them before the judgment, thus rendering the judgment a useless arrangement; (3) it proposes to save them in a realm never promised to the saints—in a kingdom beyond the skies, instead of "the kingdom under the whole heaven" (Dan. 7: 27.) or "the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world" (Matt. 25: 34.) Rather let us hold up the pure "gospel of the kingdom." WM. SHELDON.

If you are God's wise men, the world will count you fools.

RELIGIOUS DIGESTION.

That sly and old talker, "They Say," Proclaims, for our Sabbath-day rest,
"One short, good nice sermon a day,
Is all we good folks can digest."

"Especially short! yes, be short!
Be short in the sermon and prayer;
Or hearers will surely be short,—
Be short at the grave and elsewhere.

"As brevity's the soul of true wit,
It's the soul of devotion, the best!
O come, hurry up! and do quit,—
But little the people digest.

"A seat in the churches of God
Is nice, if a splendid choir sings;
If not, the tired concourse will nod.
Be short, for the people are kings.

"True, Jesus and Paul preached long,
And seats were quite scarce in those days;
But now, if you'd call out the throng,
The less for digestion's what pays.

"A twenty minute sermon will do,—
Two more—if your timeists don't sleep,—
They shut down their swallow on you,
They're only a half an inch deep.

"The men are so wearied from gains,
The women from fixings and frills,
The children from stuffing their brains,
Long preaching is useless—it kills!

"Besides, it is often too warm:
The parlor 's luxuriant and cool;
We dread cold like a northeaster storm:
Be short! or set down as a fool.

"Progression's fast life must be right,
Be quick with the preach and the sing!
Though amusement may take a whole night,
You know that's a different thing.

"It take's time to drive a good trade—
To be most exquisitely dressed—
With hours for a good time we are paid,
A minute for a Scripture digest.

"'Tis true, we don't all quite agree—
Digestion may be somewhat wrong;
But this on the sermons [illegible],
The shortest's a little too long."

MORAL.

Men relish the novel through weeks,
Their pleasures and fashions for years;
The great thoughts of God which he speaks,
Digestion that's bad never hears.

Digestion in physical health
Has relish for plenty of food;
Without it, old Death comes by stealth,
And gives us his short house of wood.

We need spirit-good to give breath,
To drink from God's spiritual cup;
Or, souls find a spiritual death,
And worms of the world eat us up.

Advent Times Sermons—No. 3.

"The stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed time; and the turtle [dove] and the crane, and the swallow observe the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of their God. (Jer. 8: 7.)

In our text the stork is mentioned first; and it is a fact that of all the migratory birds it is the most regular and punctual in observing "the time of its coming." Her arrival in Palestine is quite regular on the 22d of March. In the fall she departs for the South again. Many other birds make similar migrations, and with great regularity travel north in the spring and south in the fall. Now it must be evident that they are governed as to the time of these, often very long journeys, by the signs of the change of seasons which appear on the face of nature: changes in the length of the days and nights; increasing heat or cold; the swelling of buds or the withering and dropping of leaves; the springing up of herbs, or the ripening and fall of fruit; a chill in the air, or the diffusion of "etherial mildness." These and other "signs of the times" they always recognize, and promptly obey their voice.

Nor do the signs which God has given them as signals for their semi-annual flights every fall. I remember once, in northern New York, a snow storm in April. It covered the ground, and was, perhaps, two or three inches in depth. A friend having occasion for a ride before the storm broke, came upon a large concourse of robins, occupying the fences and roadside in an opening, a hundred or more in all. They were chattering to each other, in evident distress, and perhaps of the opinion that they had made a blunder, and summer was not "at hand," after all. They might have thought that the "signs" which they had obeyed had deceived them: but if so, they soon discovered their mistake. Soon the clouds broke, the sun came out, and the snow disappeared in hurrying rivulets. The fact of a late snow storm—a disappointment no doubt to the birds—did not prove the signs of spring false, or that the seasons had forsaken their ordained course.

God's lesson, then, in this reference to the migratory birds, is, that his children may know, at least something about, and make preparations for impending events, by observing "signs."

2. Has God given his people "signs of the times." Yes, in every age. In the day when, and especially for which the text was written, the signs of impending judgment were thick on every hand. They held their houses and land by a covenant. So long as they continued obedient and righteous, all the powers of earth combined could not destroy the one or remove them from the other. But the covenant read that disobedience of God's law and neglect of his ordinances were the doors through which their enemies would surely enter and despoil them.

What, then, were the signs of that time! Injustice, oppression of strangers, the widow, the fatherless and the poor; idolatry; murder; adultery; theft; backsliding; lying; neglect of God's law; and prevalence of false doctrine, or "trust in lying words." (See ch. 7.) These were not secret sins, but were offensively prominent, and they loudly called for the threatened judgment. Doubtless some concluded that because vengeance was not speedily executed that God had forgotten, and would not bring the judgment announced. The stork knew, though the autumn presented some beautiful days that tempted delay, that "delays were dangerous" winter was at hand. But God's backslidden people could not see the winter of wrath that so justly impended; they wilfully closed their eyes. Suddenly the judgment of God overtook them, and there was no escape.

3. Passing over other eras in the history of the church, where it would be deeply interesting to observe how their prominent signs were noticed by the faithful and carelessly or wilfully ignored by the masses, let us glance for a moment at our own times. What are its signs? What are the events indicated? We have seen the scroll containing the story of prophecy within, nearly filled up without by the record of its accomplishment. Only a few more entries, and the record will be filled full. All the great earthly powers spoken of in prophecy have arisen—in short nearly all that was to occur before the God of heaven should set up a kingdom, has occurred. The establishment of that predicted kingdom, and the judgment are everywhere in Scripture depicted as synchronal or related events.

Do God's professed people know this judgment and kingdom are impending? or must they feel—if not past feeling—the keen edge of the Lord's rebuke by Jeremiah? "The stork,....the crane,....the swallow, ...know....but my people know not!" What do we see? We see a backslidden church. We see false doctrine. We see departure from the literal word by spiritualizing interpretations. We see desertion of first principles. We see idolatry (covetousness). We see spiritual adultery, the church defiling herself with the world, and not ashamed. We see gorgeous edifices with extravagant finish and furniture, and to pay for these the church ministering to "the belly-god," to "the lusts of the eye, and of the flesh, to the pride of life, and the love of pleasure, by various sorts of festivals, fairs, dinners, suppers, exhibitions, together with gambling, baby-shows; and all this to raise the money their sins have made indispensable.

In the midst of these scenes, with damning general confessions of sin, but unaccompanied by works meet for repentance; with mournful admission of lack of power, and absence of the Holy Spirit; the popular priests scribes and prophets of to-day cry, "Peace and safety!" and assure us that the millennium is at hand; that soon all will be converted, all turned to the Lord. And lacking warrant for this untruth in the condition and progress of the church, they point to the worlds progress in science, art, philosophy, and all human wit, knowledge, and invention, and hail these as tokens of an approaching triumph of the church, and a reign of righteousness. God set forth these very things as tokens of approaching judgment. But the prophets prophesy falsely, and the people love to have it so. What the end will be, none con mistake. As surely as winter succeeds fall, so surely the judgment is coming on. Let us learn a lesson of the birds, and carefully observe the signs of our time, lest the judgment take us unawares and unready.

He is Coming.

Yes, the same Jesus that ascended to the right hand of the Father, more than eighteen hundred years ago, has promised to come again. Christ says: "If I go away, I will come again." He will come "in like manner as" he ascended. Then the "dead bodies" of the saints will be raised, and the living righteous will "be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and both caught up together in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; so shall we ever be with the Lord." "Seeing we look for such things let us be diligent that we may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless, unto the appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." He is coming speedily to take vengeance on them that know not God and that call not upon his name. "Behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also that pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him.

He is coming to set up his kingdom on the earth. "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and the government shall be upon his shoulder,....Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end."

The time of his coming is near, for all the signs given by our Savior in Matt. 24, are in the past except "the sign of the Son of man in heaven." We read—"This generation shall not pass away till all these things be fulfilled. "If this be so, where are we? We are nearing the judgment. The fact that we do not know the exact time when Christ will come, renders it very needful that we should "watch," lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping. "Watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is." "What I say unto you, I say unto all watch." If we are his children, watching and praying, we shall be found of him in peace when he comes. Let us "watch, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." G. E. M.

THE MORNING WITHOUT CLOUDS

The Lord will come—away we go,
Earth's burdens left behind;
Death, sin, and pain, and every wo,
No place with us can find.

The Lord will come, whose precious blood
Has wash'd our souls so clean;
Clothed with the righteousness of God,
We stand complete in him.

The Lord will come, his saints arise,
The rallying trumpet sound
Each resting one beneath the skies
The wakening shout hath found.

The living, too, at once made fair,
With these are caught above,
They meet the Savior in the air
(Rich trophies of his love.)

The washed, the saved, now fully blest,
Made like unto their Lord,
Enjoy forever God's own rest
According to his word.

No more to die, no more to fade,
No more to shed a tear;
No more to know the faintest shade
Of sorrow, death, or fear.

No more of need; not e'en to pray,
But gladsome notes they raise;
Dwelling in God's eternal day,
They yield him endless praise.

One Baptism. What is it?

Nearly all Christian sects believe and practice water baptism in some form, and many have esteemed this an act so essential to salvation as to administer it to the infant of but an hour. Other some practice trine immersion in the name of the Holy three. And there has been for many years a good class of people called Friends, who discard water baptism in any form, but advocate the baptism of the Spirit. My attention has just been called to this question by an article in the Herald of Life of Nov 9. The positions taken are (1) that John's baptism was Jewish and limited. (2) That Peter and others did not understand all the truth when they practiced water baptism after the gift of the Holy Spirit. (3) That the Spirit baptism, and that only is demanded of believers in this dispensation; and some argue that none but those who enjoy this great blessing will ever have a revival from Adamic death. Now, "Mr. Press, of THE TIMES," with your consent, as you seem to be fond of talking, let us chat over this baptism question.

1. John's baptism was

NOT A JEWISH WASHING,

such as Paul mentions in Heb. 9: 10, nor one of the carnal ordinances imposed on them until the time of reformation, but was gospel, new and prophetic. That it is something new proved by the excitement it created. See Matt. 3: 1,10. But, friend Press, we must give the proof texts entire; for you know, as well as I, that but few will take the trouble to look them up, so here they are forthcoming:

In those days came John the Baptist preaching in the wilderness of Judea,
And saying, Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.
For this is what was spoken by the prophet Esaias, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.
And the same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins; and his meat was locusts and wild honey.
Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan,
And were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.
But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Saducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?
Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance:
And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.
And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

From this we learn that confessing penitents were in vast multitudes baptised; knowing that being the children of Abraham would not now save them, but the fruits of [illegible]ntance would. See what Jesus says [illegible] John and his work, in Matt, 11: 7, 11.

Jesus began to say unto the multitudes concerning John. What went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken with the wind?
But what went you out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft clothing are in kings' houses.
But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet.
For this is, he of whom it was written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.
Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist: notwithstanding, he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he.

This immerser is, then, the messenger of the prophets, and his acts were gospel. So says the testimony. (Luke 16: 16.)

"The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it."

And Mark 1: 1–4:

The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God:
As it is written in the prophets, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way, before thee.
The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.
John did baptise in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentence for the remission of sins.

Here, then, is proof most positive that John's wilderness cry and his water baptism were gospel, and the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST;

and Jesus by his own request was baptised by John in Jordan. John's acts then were gospel, not Jewish ceremonies. 2. It is claimed that Peter and Paul did administer water to believers before they had been guided into all truth, but finally relinquished the practice. This claim rests on 1 Cor. 1, where Paul says:

"I thank God that I baptized none of you but Crispus and Gaius. And I baptized also the household of Stephanas; besides I know not whether I baptized any other.
For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: not with wisdom of words lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect."

These texts are the only ones referred to by the writer to prove that Paul after becoming thoroughly enlightened stopped this washing with water, and believed in the Spirit immersion only. But why did he quote v. 14, 16, and and 17, and leave out v. 15. Let us have that, also, in its connection:

I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius. Lest any should say that I had baptized in mine own name."

Is this the reason why? Yes, just the reason exactly and no other is given. Not that John's message and acts in dipping many in Jordan were not gospel, but lest men should say he baptised in his own name instead of the name of Jesus. Did Peter ever learn better than to bury people in the water. I think not. If he did, he was very still about it; for as long as we have any account of his doings, as recorded in the Acts, or the practice of the Apostles, he was pretty freely, and this was some twenty-five years after the miraculous reception and baptism of the Holy Spirit, which was to lead them into all truth.

USING THIS ORDINANCE

"These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you. But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you. (John 14: 27)

This promise of the Comforter who was to teach them all things, was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, in the year 33, and we have the apostolic history until A. D. 26, and they had not yet learned that water baptism had become obsolete. Surely they were not very apt scholars or they might have made greater progress under such a perfect teacher!

We now come to the third point in the argument, which is this. The baptism of the Holy Spirit is the only one required of believers of our times. What saith the word? It gives us three or four instances of Spirit immersions. The first at Pentecost.

And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where th[illegible] were sitting. And there appeare[illegible] ven tongues like as of fire [illegible]on each of them. And they we[illegible] filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance (Acts 3: 14.)

The whole house is filled with the Holy Spirit, and the effects are tongues of fire and miraculous gifts, which caused the vast and wondering multitude to cry out,

"Men and brethren what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptised every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call"

Mark Peter's instruction to the multitude which inquired of him—"What shall we do?" (1) Repent, (2) be baptised, and next ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. The next case is the conversion of Saul, and he went through about the same process, and the

WONDERFUL GIFTS FOLLOWED,

The third instance is given in Acts 10, concerning the introduction of the gospel to the Gentiles, Peter being the chosen one to tell them of the way of life opened through Jesus:

While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptised in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days."

Here is believing, receiving the Spirit, the gift of tongues, and then "can any forbid water, that these should be baptised?"

How similar are the effects produced in these three instances. It is a law of nature that like causes produce like effects. Do we have the gift of tongues, now? We do not. Are there any among us who can impart the gift of miracles by laying on of hands, as those could who had been overwhelmed by the promised Comforter? Do we know of any overwhelmings of the Holy Ghost since the apostles. I think not, or the effects would follow. What then is the one baptism of Scripture. It is a covering, planting, burying in water, in likeness of death, and rising from the water in likeness of Christ's resurrection from the tomb. This is the mode Jesus commanded his ministers to carry out until the end of the world, or as long as the gospel should be preached.

And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

Note this one point: men, or teachers are to baptise the taught what with? Not with the "Holy Ghost," but in the name of the Father Son and and Spirit. Not with the Father, not with the Son, nor with the Holy Spirit, but in the name of all three. Philip understood the meaning of the commission pretty well, it appears, when the Spirit taught him to go south of Jerusalem, and join himself to the Ethiopian eunuch's chariot, wh[illegible] enquired of him about Jesus, as foretold in Is. 53.

Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus. And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water; and the eunuch said, See, here is water: what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, if thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the Chariot to stand still; and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more; and he went on his way rejoicing."

This is another instance of believing and going into the water, all testimony of scripture harmonizes in making this water death the first, yes the very first act of the repenting believer.

"What therefore God hath joined together let not man put asunder"

We have another account of Paul's labors at Corinth, which, according to the Bible chronology was in A. D. 54, some twenty years after the remarkable gift of the unerring Guide; What was done here?

"And Cryspus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized."

We have still another account of Paul's visiting Corinth, some two years later, in Acts 19:

And it came to pass, that, while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts came to Ephesus: and finding certain disciples, He said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. And he said unto them, Unto what then were you baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus. When they heard this they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them: and they spake with tongues, and prophesied. And all the men were about twelve."

Here again is the water, and then the Holy Spirit given to twelve men by the hands of Paul, and the gift of tongues, as a consequence followed. Have we any instances of man's imparting the wonderful gift of the blessed Spirit since the apostles?

NOT ONE.

Then the conclusion legitimately follows, that Christ when he was giving his last commands to his beloved children couched in the language of Mark 16: 15,16 had direct reference to water baptism, and that only.

"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

By referring to other scriptures we learn that the form of the one baptism into the one body by the direction of the one Spirit by which we come into Christ and put on Christ, is a water burial, and planting in likeness of Christ's death.

"Blessed the sign which thus reminds me
Savior of thy love for me;
But more blessed the love that binds me
In its deathless bonds to thee;
Oh! what pleasure!
Buried with my Lord to be."

But the inquirer says are we l[illegible]t [illegible] destitute of the good Spirit in these last days? Certainly not. We can enjoy the earnest of the Spirit, be spiritually minded, and serve Christ in newness of Spirit, walk in the Spirit and we shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh.

Come, gracious Spirit, heavenly dove,
With light and comfort from above;
Be thou our guardian, thou our guide,
O'er every word and step preside.

To us the light of truth display,
Help us to know and choose the way;
Plant holy fear in every heart,
That we from God may ne'er depart."

The Wounded Head.

And I saw one of his heads, as it were, wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast. (Rev. 13: 3.)

The subject that I am about to introduce is one that appears to me to be but very little understood at the present day. If our premises be wrong our conclusions also must be wrong. The fourth great monarchy (or Roman kingdom) is illustrated by various symbols in order to bring out the many features it bears in its relations to the Church. The dragonic feature appears to be the first, and is to illustrate a period prior to the leopard beast or Justinian's day. It is said to have had seven heads and ten horns, or kingdoms. That proves, to my min[illegible] [illegible]hat the seven heads existed prior [illegible] great Roman apostasy of Christendom. But in Rev. 13 a leopard beast is seen to arise out of the sea. It seems that a power came up a little previous to the establishment of Popery on the eastern division of the Roman empire, or ancient site of the seat of Alexander's Grecian kingdom. Hence the body of it is like a leopard. There seems to be a transfer of the same heads and horns to the leopard beast. The dragon (Rome of the West) gave this beast of the East his seat, power, etc. I will here quote from Br. Brewer's Last Warning Voice, as he has cited from history.

The unfortunate Augustus (the last Roman Emperor) was made the instrument of his own disgrace. He signified his resignation to the Senate, and that assembly, in their last act of obedience to a Roman prince, still affected the spirit of freedom, and the forms of the constitution. An epistle was addressed by their unanamous decree to the Emperor Zeno (of the East.) They solemnly disclaim the necessity, or even the wish, of continuing the imperial succession in Italy, since in their opinion, the majesty of a sole monarch is sufficient to pervade and protect at the same time both the East and the West. In their own name and the name of the people, they consented that the seat of the universal empire shall be transferred from Rome to Constantinople. Thus the Greek Empire came to the dominion about A. D. 476.

In Rev. 17: We have a scarlet colored beast brought t[illegible]w, to illustrate this same fourth kingdom. The heads and horns seem to be transferred back to Rome again. When Justinian came on the throne he proved to be a rigid Roman Catholic, and issued stringent edicts to establish that religion and punish all opposers as heretics. (Rev. 13: 5.) "There was given unto him a mouth speaking great things." This mouth-piece was evidently the Bishop at Rome in his advice to the Emperor, and that mouth continued forty-two months, or 1260 years, and went into captivity in A. D. 1798. The Pope was taken by the French general to fulfill v. 10—"He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity."

But the leopard beast was of short duration. It was subsequently swallowed up in the Turkish empire. It only served to establish Popery at Rome, and the Pope afterwards looked in other directions for aid. And now the reader may be able to comprehend Rev. 17: 8. "The beast that was and is not, and yet is." The short absence of the seat of government from Rome seems to answer to the expression "is not."

In relation to those heads, I think them to represent seven forms of the Roman government prior to the civil rule of Popery. (1) Kings, (2) Consuls, (3) Dictators, (4) Decemvirs, (5) Military Tribunes. (Rev. 17: 10.) The expression that five are fallen and one is, represents that in St. John's day, about A. D. 96, five of its heads had passed away, and the one then in power was Imperial. But in the decline and fall of the Roman empire this head receives a deadly wound by the sounding of the four first trumpets of Rev. 8. But the time came when the anarchy ceased, and a seventh form of government was established in Rome for a short space before its transfer to Constantinople. (v. 11.) "And the beast that was and is not, even he (Popery) is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition." The present state of affairs in Rome indicates its speedy downfall. Rev. 13: 11–18 brings to view a two-horned beast, which is none other than the eighth head above mentioned. The two horns represent the spiritual and temporal authority. The dreadful wound inflicted on the beast between A. D. 356 and 483 was fully healed by the establishment of this eighth head or two-horned beast, and during the dark ages all the world has wondered after the beast. This eighth head, or second universal dominion, has exercised all of the power of the first beast, or sixth head. And although the Pope has claimed to be a spiritual ruler, yet he has caused the earth and them that dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed.

In Dan. 7, the Roman kingdom is proved to be the fourth on earth. But we find it to be a complicated affair, and it takes many symbols to illustrate the whole thing. But we are certain of the fact that it is to be destroyed and given to the burning flame, and the time is to come when the saints will take the kingdom, and the kingdom and dominion will be given to the saints of the Most High, and that the Lord Jesus Christ will be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

Christain Unity.

Perhaps one of the greatest and grandest truths which the Bible reveals to us, is the unity of Christ and his church as illustrated by the human body. Every member of the body has its special work assigned to it. The head is the principal member, and is placed highest of all on the body, and by it the whole body is governed. It is from the head that all thoughts and purposes emanate, but the head of itself could not carry its purpose and intentions into execution, but it telegraphs them by means of the nerves which ramify through the system, and whose center is the brain. So when the brain has determined upon some operation, it immediately telegraphs to the other members of the body, and the work executed by them. Frequently, however, the members of the body are not in a condition to carry out the purposes which originates from the brain, owing to disease, or other causes. In such a case all the members suffer, and then is a constant sympathy existing in the body until that member is restored to its usual health and strength. If the connection between the brain and the different parts of the body is severed, there is inactivity and uselessness resulting from this condition. But if the nerves and fibers which run in all directions through the body are reunited, then harmony and action are restored.

Now if we as Christains and members of the body of Christ break the connection with Christ, we are useless and of no help to the body. Christ says, John 15 : 5—"Without me ye can do nothing." If we are carrying on the great work which Christ as the head of the body has originated we will be diligently keeping all his precepts, and walking in the Spirit. The Holy Spirit of God represents the nerves, by which we know if we are walking according to his word. If we are obeying God's word as revealed to us by his Spirit, then we are in sympathy with the great Head, and also with the other members of the body. The connection which we have to the Head is through the Spirit, and until we get the Spirit of God into our hearts, we do not know nor do we realize our connection with our blessed Christ in heaven.

In the normal condition of the Church of God every member must of a necessity love the other members, or there is certainly some disease which must be healed before a perfect connection can be had, and the design of our Head be carried out. We are united to Christ by our Spirit, and therefore believers in Christ who have really believed from the heart, are, as the Apostle says (Eph. 5: 30) "members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones."

Let us try to realize our position in being thus exalted and made to occupy a position as members of Christ's glorious body, being the head of all things. Let us in these last days "Walk in the Spirit;" and let us not forget to nourish and cherish all the members of his body, and by so doing please our glorious Head who is in heaven. Bless the Lord for this glorious truth which brings us unto such close communion with our Savior. Let us be guided by the Spirit, and when he comes we will be glorified together.

"And they cast him out." (John 9.)

Bender tells us of three degrees of excommunication among the Jews. The first was called "casting out from the synagogue," which was a separation from all the accustomed religious privileges for thirty days. If the offender manifested his sorrow by repentance, the time might be shortened. But if he persisted in his course after the thirty days, he was again excommunicated, with the addition of a solemn curse. This curse was a great terror to the Jews, and was commonly considered equivalent to delivering the offender over to Satan. The offence was published in the synagogue, at which time the lamps were lighted, but as soon as the proclamation was over, they were extinguished, as a token that the sinner was shut out from the light of heaven. His goods were confiscated, his children denied the rites of the church, and if he died while still under the ban of the church, a stone was cast upon his bier, to express that he deserved stoning, and his friends were not permitted to make the customary solemn lamentations over him.

The last degree of excommunication was called "anathematizing," which was inflicted on obstinate offenders, who had long scorned the power of the courts. It was frequently followed by heavy punishment, and even death itself.—S. S. Times.

Work of prejudice.

There can be no doubt that the translators of our Bible in their rendering of episcopous in Acts 20 : 28, by overseers instead of bishops, contrary to their uniform practice in every other case, were influenced by dogmatic prejudice, by a desire to avoid the inference that there might be a plurality of bishops in a single church. This is shown by the fact that they do not indicate in the margin the propriety of a different translation, though Coverdale's Bible, which preceded theirs, has in this verse bishop instead of overseer, thus making his translation self-consistent, whereas theirs, as it now stands, is notoriously inconsistent with their own practice.

There is another example of the same kind of dogmatic prejudice in John, 10 : 16. These two different Greek words of very diverse significations, aule and poimne, are translated by the same English word fold. It is the first of these words only that means fold, the other means flock—the one is the sheep-pen, the other is the sheep themselves. As our translation stands, it implies that Christ recognizes but one external church organization for all his true disciples; correctly translated it implies that there may be different church organizations, and the members of each are equally members of Christ, different sheep-pens for different portions of the same flock. Let us read the verse as it ought to be translated to correspond with the Greek original.

"And other sheep I have which are not of this FOLD [sheep-pen]; them also must I bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one FLOCK [not one sheep-pen] and one shepherd." The matter is so plain that the translators must have seen it. Moreover in this place Tyndale has the right translation—won flocke and won shepheerde.—Prof Stowe.

"And the Lord was with Judah; and he drove out the inhabitants of the mountain, but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron." (Judg. 1:19.)

If the meaning of the auxiliary verb "could," in this passage be understood by its construction with the negative to express "prohibition," any further explanation is unnecessary, even though this verb does not occur in the Hebrew, because the prohibition "not" is here expressed by the most positive of the Hebrew adverbs of negation (vide its employment in the decalogue), and the conjunction rendered "because," is a conditional particle, elsewhere rendered "though" and "although," as in Josh. 17 : 8 ; 2 Sam. 23 : 6 ; Exod. 13 : 17 ; Ezek. 11 : 6 ; Hab. 3 : 17. Read it as follows, then, the import of the passage is plain, and the infidel's objection refuted—"The Lord was with Judah; and he drove out the inhabitants of the mountain, but not to drive the inhabitants of the valley, although they had chariots of iron." Compare this with Deut. 7 : 22.—Edward Poulson.

Our Young Folks.

The Dark Day.

May 19, 1780 so called on account of a remarkable darkness that day extending over all New England. In some places persons could not see to read common print in the open air for several hours together. Birds sang their evening songs, disappeared and became silent; fowls went to roost; cattle sought the barn-yard; and candles were lighted in the houses. The obscuration began about ten o'clock in the morning, and continued till the middle of the next night, but with difference of degree and duration in various places. For several days the wind had been variable but chiefly from the south west and north east. The true cause of this remarkable phenomenon is not known.—Webster's Dictionary.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

The 19th of May, 1780, was a remarkable day in the annals of New England, on account of the thick darkness that overspread the land, like a funeral pall. It was a day long to be remembered and talked of by those who witnessed the strange, and that time fearful phenomenon. There was much writing upon and discussion of the subject at the time and afterward, but I believe no satisfactory conclusion was ever arrived at as to its cause. There were some who thought that it must have proceeded from a total eclipse of the sun, that had for some cause escaped the calculation of mathematicians and astronomers, but that was easily shown to be impossible by the facts and figures.

THE DARKNESS INCREASES.

The father of the writer was then a boy of thirteen years, and was at work with his father and brother, planting or preparing the ground. It was a dull, hazy morning, and as the time passed it gradually thickened, and by ten o'clock the increasing darkness began to be quite apparent. They kept on with their work, and as the gloom increased they observed that he would pause once in a while and look intently all around the horizon and over head, but made no remark until he directed the oldest boy to go to the barn and turn the horse and all the cattle that were inside out into an open lot, and to close and secure every door and window. It appeared that he was apprehensive that some sudden or furious gust or squall would soon manifest itself, and then the animals would be in less danger out in the field than inside the building.

Still the darkness grew thicker and deeper, till presently he said they might as well quit work for the present.

HOURS OF GLOOM.

On reaching the house the mother and sister were about their usual duties, pale and silent. Little was said, except an occasional remark or direction in a low tone.

No one seemed inclined to conversation or demonstration of any kind. Soon dinner was ready, with candles lighted the same as at night, but not a morsel was eaten. A dead silence seemed to pervade all nature, broken only by the occasional bleating of a lamb, or the distant howling of the kine, which wandered about restless and uneasy. The domestic fowls seemed inclined to come to the conclusion that if it was not night, they could put no other construction upon it; so, after clucking over the matter for a while, they went to roost. And thus the long and dreary hours passed away. Along in the afternoon the veil was lifted in some degree, and at the time of sunset it was about the same as in an ordinary dull and cloudy day.—Cape Ann Advertiser.

THE DARK NIGHT.

The night which followed was, it is said, as dark proportionately as was the day. It was the perfect "blackness of darkness." Not the faintest outline of any object could be discerned against the sky. A light would penetrate it but a little way, and then seem to disclose but a solid wall of blackness around.

Thus was fulfilled the prediction of our Savior when he said, "the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." (Matt. 24 : 29.) Though many seek to do away with this prophecy or interpret it to mean something else, we find by the foregoing that it has been literally fulfilled, and the fact is now placed on record by Webster and others who admit that the true cause of the dark day and night is not known. It can not be accounted for. It is one of the signs of the coming of Jesus, and let us be ready to welcome him when he appears. There will be another dark day and night when the wicked go down to the second death, from which there will be no resurrection to life and light.

E. T. HIMES.

MY CAT AND BELL-ROPE.—I have a white (nearly true bred) Angora cat, about four or five years old, which, being a great pet, is in the habit of sleeping in my bedroom, and is let out every morning as soon as the servants are up, about seven o'clock. One morning, some three weeks ago, having been at a ball the night before, I was sleepy, and did not hear [illegible] servants, or the cat scratch, as he usually did, at the door. There is a bell-rope at the bed head, near the door. The cat, finding his scratching of no use, must have stood upon his hind legs (for the rope is some distance from the floor) and caught at this. At all events he pulled the bell with such a clash that I heard it; the maid of course came, and the cat was let out. This was probably accidental, but the curious thing is, he has rung the bell every morning since, and on more than one occasion twice when the first pull has failed. It is a considerable effort for him to do so, as he has to stretch up at full length, (I watched him without his being aware of it;) he then gets the tassel between his paws and lets himself down with all his weight, and generally clashes the bell so that it is heard all over the house.—Corr. "Land and Water."

The General Western Conference.

At the next session of this Conference the following questions will be brought up for discussion:

1. The heathen theory of future life.
2. The Jewish theory of future life.
3. The Bible theory of future life.
4. Church government.
5. Church order.
6. Redemption.
7. The Restitution.
8. Future Retribution.
9. The proof of Jesus' Messiahship.
10. Why preach the coming of the Lord near?
11. Should we be a distinct people?
12. Signs of the times, and the periods.
13. The ancient and modern theories of a resurrection.
14. The future home of the saints.
15. The various theories of immortality.
16. What is the soul and spirit of man?

The meeting will probably be held sometime in February. Time and place are yet to be arranged. Any who can attend will please select one or more of the above topics, as subject for essays to read at the Conference. Thirty minutes will be allowed for the reading of each essay. Those who choose topics will please signify their selection to Eld. Wm. Sheldon, Brodhead, Wis., by letter.

The Congregational Review for 1871. One year ago this Review was transferred to Chicago, and placed under the proprietorship and editorial conduct of Rev. Samuel C. Bartlett, D.D., Prof. Chicago Theo. Sem., Rev. A. L. Chapin, D.D., Pres. Beloit College, Rev. G. F. Magoun, D.D., Pres. Iowa College, and Rev. G. S. F. Savage, D.D., Chicago. The transfer was made with little preparation, and under great disadvantages. But the brief and imperfect experiment has proved satisfactory. Our readers have been addressed by Presidents Sturtevant, Mahan, Gulliver, Chapin, Magoun; Professors Pond, Mead, Lawrence, Emerson, Fisk, Bartlett; Drs. Post, Barrows, Rankin, Walker, Patton, Patterson, Guernsey; Revs. Means, Tucker, Tenney, Whiton, Love, Caverno, Ross Bissell, Cross; Senator Patterson, Dr. H. W. Lyman, and others, on a variety of the most important and timely themes. The Review has received a warm welcome, high commendations, and a considerable increase of circulation.

But we propose greatly to improve upon the past. Our ideal is far in advance of our attainment. We contemplate a wider and higher range of discussions, and the addition of some important distinctive features. The field is ample; the whole Congregational territory outside of New England has no organ of the kind. The range is clear; there is a call for comparison of views from a broader area, more active regions, and a more central point. There is need of utterances for and from the laymen, as well as the ministers. Our scope will include theology, ethics, æsthetics and metaphysics, exegesis and philosophy, science in its relations to religion, church polity, church history, and Christian life.

We shall also give special attention to the living questions of the day, thus daily combining themes of permanent and of current interest. The careful and trustworthy criticism of books will also occupy a prominent place. It will be the aim of the editors to make a national religious magazine; a channel for the best thought of the East and West on the highest themes.

Clinging stoutly to the principles and polity of the Puritans, we hope to have a Congregational Review, while we also maintain a truly liberal course towards Christians of every name.

To realize this ideal will call for a large increase of the subscription list. The four editors have been obliged to assume the entire responsibility of the Review. They have given their time and labor without the slightest pecuniary return for what they believe to be the general good. May they not ask for an active effort on the part of their brethren to secure them such a circulation as will make the magazine thoroughly effective for its purpose.

Terms: The Review will be issued once in two months at three dollars per annum, in advance. To Missionaries and Theological Students, two dollars. Any or all back numbers supplied at fifty cents a number, or two dollars a year.

All contributions should be addressed to Editors Congregational Review, Chicago, and all business letters to Rev. G. S. F. Savage, 84 Washington street, Chicago.

THE BIBLE BANNER!

This paper will be issued monthly, at 240 Broadway, New York City, beginning with the coming year. The first number will appear early in December, to facilitate the work of securing subscribers. It will be neatly executed in double quarto form, and in other respects as worthy of your patronage as we have ability to make it. THE BIBLE BANNER is designed to elucidate the fundamental features of Bible truth, in the various departments of Doctrine, Prophecy and Practical Piety. Special attention will be given to the Nature of Man, Atonement of Christ, the Signs of the Times, the Coming of the Bridegroom, the Resurrection of the Dead, the Destiny of the Wicked, the Redemption of Earth, and the crowning of Christians in the Kingdom to come. We shall use our best endeavors to make THE BANNER an able expositor of "Bible Doctrine," and a stirring advocate of experimental and practical godliness. It will ring out the clarion notes of truth on the living issues of the age, and seek to merit the respect of intelligent Christians everywhere.

The whole enterprise will be placed on a thoroughly missionary basis. The editors have no stipulated salaries. The expenses of clerks, office rent, etc., will be paid by private donation; so that the income may be appropriated to enlarge the circulation of the paper. By this arrangement we expect to scatter gratuitously a goodly number of copies, every month, in the various literary and theological institutions of the country, and to introduce the truth of God on these subjects into many new and destitute fields. We hope thus to set in motion a current of influence that shall eventuate in the salvation of many who would otherwise perish. Some of us can never be too grateful for the timely aid afforded us, while groping in darkness and grappling with difficulty. Nor can we better express our gratitude than by proffering a helping hand to others, who, in turn, may become efficient workers for God. In doing this, it is neither our desire nor our intention to infringe upon any existing publications devoted to the promotion of Bible Christianity; but, on the contrary, to increase their efficiency—to add another voice for the right—to re-enforce the army of the living God! We think we speak advisedly when we say that we have both the power and the disposition to increase, rather than diminish the circulation of such existing papers as we believe to be faithful exponents of God's truth. We expect to do this, (1) by a system of "exchange advertising, which only a portion of our readers will fully understand. We expect, (2) that our sheet will pioneer its way into many a vacant field, to bear its message of mercy, and prepare the way for other messengers—both papers and preachers. We earnestly advise all to continue their present papers. We hope to make our monthly so thoroughly good that you will be glad to add it to those which already bring light and comfort to your household.

While we spread our BANNER to the breeze, and launch out in the name of our glorious Captain, we earnestly desire your prayers, your pens, your names, and your hearty co-operation. SHALL WE HAVE THEM? Let the response be emphatic and prompt! Roll up a liberal list! Begin at once. We shall try to give you the worth of your money. Canvass your neighborhoods, and send us the results as soon as possible. Shall we not have five thousand subscribers to commence with the year? If it suits your convenience, you can communicate with any of the editors; but as a standing regulation all letters should be addressed to the "BIBLE BANNER," 240 Broadway, New York City.

TERMS.

THE BIBLE BANNER will be mailed to subscribers at ONE DOLLAR a year, payable in advance if possible, but always within three months.

A Book Free.

Knowing the power of valuable books in making effectual impressions of truth, and the ease with which agents form large clubs for a paper when they can offer a book free to each subscriber, we have concluded to publish in the first number of THE BANNER a list of books, by our best writers, mostly on prophetical and doctrinal subjects (prices from 25 to 50 cents, in paper covers), and send the choice from the list post-paid, free to every yearly subscriber.

"The Banner" for Free Distribution.

We will furnish THE BIBLE BANNER for free distribution at 40 cents a year, or a few samples by mail, with or without price, to all who will send us their address.

THE BANNER AND THE TIMES.

Any subscriber to THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES who has not paid for the year 1871, by remitting $2 75 to THE TIMES office, will receive both papers during the year. Any person who has not been a subscriber to THE TIMES, by remitting $2 50 to THE TIMES' office, shall receive both papers for the year 1871.

"The Bible Banner" Free.

Those who devote their time and energies to the gospel ministry can have THE BANNER free by sending us subscribers, and any person who will act as our agent and send us five or more subscribers with the money, can have THE BANNER free or retain 25 per cent., or select a premium from our large list of valuable articles which will appear in the first number of the paper. We hope to be able by the issue of the first number to announce a system or plan, by which all who have willing hands and hearts may do much in the good cause.

Oh, let us wake up, trim our lamps, and let the world hear the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." We hope all who love the truth to which THE BANNER is specially devoted, and can take the paper or work for it, will subscribe at once and send for prospectus and sample copies.

Money by draft, or postoffice orders on New York, made payable to H. A. King, may be sent at our risk. Address:

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... Editor.

Tuesday Afternoon, December 20, 1870.

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

Within the last week we have received letters from three persons who have become interested in the Advent doctrines from reading tracts, or a single copy of the paper. In one case the tract was of only two pages. Many will read a tract or paper who would not look at larger works unless first interested in their doctrine. We are not doing half enough with tracts.

We have found one ally in opposing the dogma of endless misery from the scriptures, with whom we would not enlist. We mean a correspondent of the (Kansas City) Christian. When a man interprets Matt. 24 and 25 as all fulfilled previous to A. D. 75, in order to disprove eternal suffering, he is merely setting up a very serious error against a worse one. The best way to oppose an error is with truth. Future punishment is everlasting, or eternal, but it is eternal death or destruction, not ever-during existence in wo.

The little sheet started by us in Rochester nearly thirty years ago has passed through another change of form and name. No longer to be known as the Herald of the Kingdom, it is now called The Restitution, and will be issued weekly. It is a neat sheet—its looks being much better than its doctrines. One correspondent asserts—"The Spirit has done its work, in bringing the Scriptures to perfection." A theology without the Spirit is like the body James mentions without its spirit. We don't wonder it allows salvation to those only who accept its behests.

The following item comes to us bearing as a title—A Beautiful Inscription:

The following inscription, it is said, may be found in an Italian grave-yard: "Here lies Estella, who transported a large fortune to heaven in acts of charity, and has gone thither to enjoy it."

—Can an untruth properly be called beautiful? God's saints no more go to heaven to enjoy the treasure they may lay up there, than citizens "retire" to enjoy their competency in the banks where their means are deposited. They don't go to live in a savings bank because they have a fortune deposited in it.

A brother in New York last year ordered 20,000 questions on immortality. The cost was trifling; the entire result we know not. But only a little while since we received a letter from Br. Okerlind, a Swede in New York, in which he could hardly express his gratitude and delight that that little two paged tract, Questions on Immortality, fell into his hands, and awakened him to think upon and investigate this subject. Now he wants it published in Swede; for the benefit of his countrymen. We shall have it translated and printed as soon as possible. And we pray God to furnish means to enable us to fill the multiplying calls for publications.

An exchange quotes "one of the religious papers" as saying concerning "the present fondness for prophecy:"

"It seems to be forgotten that contemporary events are magnified to our sight by their nearness, and assume far greater dimensions than they will when viewed in the distant perspective of history."

—We wish that paper would inform us at what period in the history of the world "events" will appear so natural in our sight that we shall be able to distinguish them, whether they are prophetic or not, and thus be able to fulfill the Savior's injunction to "know" our whereabouts upon the stream of time, and whether we are "near" the kingdom of God.

The Christian Observer endorses as "scriptural" a funeral sermon by the Rev. Mr. Humphrey, in which the following passage occurs:

The soul of the righteous no sooner leaves the body than it enters into heaven in the consciousness of perfect blessedness....The faith of the pure church in all ages is to this effect: "The souls of the righteous, after death, being then made perfect in holiness, are received into the highest heaven, where they behold the face of God in light and glory, waiting for the full redemption of their bodies."

—If this be true, and so scriptural, then one of two things follows: Either David is not numbered among the righteous, or else the apostolic church was not "pure;" for Peter says "David is not ascended into the heavens."

The Interior says, and we believe it to be true—

The glory of the Scriptures is their simplicity, their being open to the comprehension of unlearned persons, composing so large a proportion of the race. These who really understand what the will of the Lord is, and all that is essential to the saving of the soul, and to its comfort and joy in the journey from world to world. They who do this will, as thus understood, shall know and prove the doctrine received from Christ to be indeed divine. It is a wondrous and precious provision which is thus made in the Scriptures for enlightening the eyes, strengthening the hands, and establishing the way of these earnest, lowly seekers after life—Christ's "little ones" indeed, who knowing little of this world's learning, are wise in the lore of the skies.

—Now will the Interior tell its readers how "unlearned persons" could ever have found out that "Ye shall surely die" included death of the body, moral death, and everlasting life in torment; that "life" means happiness or happy life; that "death" means wo, or life in anguish; that "everlasting destruction" means preservation forever. In other words, if God does not in his word use language in its common sense, how are the "common people" to understand it?

The Advance noticing a recently published work on the future punishment, and advocating restoration, says the "book is worthy of regard as a sign of the times, showing, as it does, the side of truth which needs explanation and guard, and that souls of genuine Christian experience have their trouble, and need wise help, in this direction." Our orthodox friends will do well to wake up to this fact. The received doctrine of future punishment is exceedingly detrimental to the advance of Christianity. Men are sure "there is a mistake somewhere." Calling those who reject orthodoxy "infidels," will not quiet thought or stop investigation, neither will simple dogmatic assertion that Jesus taught eternal torment settle the question. "Souls of genuine Christian experience" are in trouble concerning this question. Orthodoxy cannot help them. Universalism they cannot believe. Our views are just what they need—being the simple Bible truth of the matter. But a jealous orthodoxy has so covered us with reproaches of skepticism, that many are hindered from approaching us by false ideas of our position. But the stream of Adventism is flowing wider and deeper and stronger; and the efforts of all its opponents cannot long stay the current.

The New York Methodist Preachers Meeting has been, of late, discussing the necessity of preaching the fundamental doctrines of Christianity "more vigorously." The four "fundamentals" were defined on Monday week "in one of the most able addresses" delivered on this theme, to be: (1) Total depravity; (2) Atonement by Jesus Christ; (3) The operations of the Holy Spirit on the heart; (4) the everlasting punishment of the finally impenitent. He did not like to hear preachers "rasp away" on the latter doctrine; thought it pleased Universalists and others too well. But what are they going to do about it? They say eternal misery (for that is what they mean by eternal punishment) is fundamental to the good news of Jesus Christ, and yet the mass of the ministry touch upon it lightly, glide over it, present its "alleviations;" for they must feel, what we are sure is a fact, that every sermon which fairly presents the dogma of eternal wo weakens the popular faith in future punishment. But it is not so with Advent, or rather the true Bible doctrine. Every man must instinctively feel that if he fails to be what God designed he should be, he has no cause for complaint if God eventually blots him from existence, makes him "as though he had not been." The means being provided, if we refuse to fit ourselves to live forever, obviously we should not live forever. Universalism does not thrive on the preaching of the extinction of sin and sinners: but orthodoxy fears to declare what it believes to be tremendously true, for fear it will make restorationists.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

Before leaving Carlinville, Ill., I visited the new Court House, for Macoupin county. It is a fire-proof building—not a particle of wood in it, except the furniture. It is constructed and finished in a more costly style than the capitol at Washington. It has cost the county about two millions of dollars! This extravagance was the work of a few unprincipled men in office, against the will and wish of the people, who were willing to spend two hundred thousand dollars only. Very heavy taxes are now levied upon the people of the county, and a protest has been entered against them, and some want to repudiate the debt. Fifty thousand dollars would have given them a Court House sufficient for all practical purposes. What a fast age we live in? And what fast men we have in every community, who carry out their plans at the expense of more industrious and worthy citizens.

At night I returned to St. Louis, and Tuesday p. m., Dec. 6, came to Kansas City, about three hundred miles. Here I missed connection with the western train, and had a day to look about the city. It was a small place before the war, but in the last four years has increased twenty-four thousand! This is unparalelled growth. It is destined to become one of the largest cities in the interior. It is built on the bank of the Missouri River, among the bluffs, the most uneven ground on which I ever saw a town or city located. The inhabitants are mostly from the East, and very enterprising and prosperous. They have about twenty congregations of all sects. And at the present time the Orthodox churches are holding union revival meetings, with some success. I attended one of these in the third Baptist church. About fifty persons were present, and some who spoke and prayed seemed to feel the weight of the cause. But the interest as yet is not deep, or extensive.

I called upon Br. D. P. Alger, who introduced me to Eld. G. W. Lougan, editor of the Christian, a weekly paper just started here in the interest of what is called the "Campbellite" sect. I had a cordial reception, and an interesting interchange of thought on the past and the present. They are working faithfully to spread their views of truth.

Wednesday, Dec. 7. Took the cars for St. Joseph, Mo. On the way I had an interesting conversation with Mr. Nugent, a benevolent English gentleman, who is on a visit to this country to arrange for the immigration of some of his poor countrymen. He brought over some fifty boys and girls to Canada, and had them put out in good families. He said there was much suffering in England among the poor. And, besides, there was much crime. In London there were one hundred thousand boys and girls that had no means of an honest living. They resorted to beggary or crime. In Liverpool there are twenty-five thousand in a similar condition.

In looking about St. Joseph to learn something of its material and religious interests, I find that religion is at rather a low ebb, and the churches have their feasts and festivals, as further east. I find an interest to hear, and I may return and proclaim the truth to them. This is a wealthy city, and the people industrious and enterprising. It has a population of about twenty thousand. The climate is healthful, and the soil in the vicinity rich and productive. I like the climate and country.

I arrived in Maryville late in the evening, and was welcomed by Br. Hink, who had everything in readiness for the meeting.

MARYVILLE, MO.

Friday, Dec. 9. This is a young and flourishing country-town. There are several good chapels, of which the Methodists hold two, the one North and the other South. We are to have the Methodist chapel, South, for our conference. The pastor is very liberal and kind. We have but few Adventists in town, but quite a number in the surrounding region. As yet we are a weak and small people in this region, but growing. And God is with us.

Since my visit two years ago, there has been a wonderful change in numbers and strength. The movement is healthful and onward.

At night I spoke on the prophecies relating to the first coming of Jesus. The minister was out to hear with some of his people. Brn. Cate, Kent, Collins, Bilmire, Patton, McClure, Dugger, and others, were present, in good cheer. We had warm greetings. None can realize how blessed it is to meet old dear and tried fellow-laborers as can those who are scattered over a wide field, and seldom meet each other, except at the Annual Conference.

Saturday, Dec. 10. The Conference met at 9 a. m., and organized. The minutes will be given by the Secretary. I was pleased with the unanimity and zeal of the brethren. They are of one heart and one soul in their work. The elements are of an intelligent and reliable character. The preachers are mostly farmers, who support themselves and help the cause besides, and mean to see it sustained in all that is practical and useful in this life: and aid in preparing a people for the coming of Jesus, and the life to come.

At 11 a. m. I spoke on the fullness, objects and uses of the prophetic word, for the good cheer of the saints. Many of them spoke of their faith and hope, thanking God and taking courage from this hour. At night I spoke upon those prophecies that are being fulfilled in our own time, especially those that relate to the fall of Anti-Christ, and the near approach of the kingdom of God. I have hardly ever witnessed a deeper solemnity or realization of the truth.

Sabbath, Dec. 11. We had the best sort, and the thinking class of citizens out to hear us to-day. All seemed interested in prophecy, and the signs of the present times. I explained the image in Dan. 2: 31-35, and answered the question, "Where are we?" The next great event will be the smiting of the image, and this may occur at any hour. At night, my theme was, the kingdom under the whole heavens, and the whole earth filled with the glory of God.

As our brethren are scattered about the town in the families of other denominations, they have many questions propounded respecting the faith. And through these inquiries and conversations we find there is much conviction, and many are favorable to the truth. Br. Hink has prepared the way for us. He is much esteemed, and exerts a happy influence. What we do here will not be lost, but gathered for permanence and good.

THE CONFERENCE.

The Conference closed its sessions in good cheer. The prospects are good for growth. Calls for meetings multiply. There are many more than the ministers can attend to.

The Conference Territory is about equally divided between Iowa and Missouri. The climate and soil are good. Land is held at reasonable prices, and those in moderate circumstances can, with diligence and economy, soon acquire good homes. As things are now, the country new, and all struggling for homes, the people are not able to give that support to ministers that they need and ought to have. But the preachers feel that they are living in the last days of this dispensation, and the world must be warned, and souls saved, and so, in general, they provide for the support of their own families, and proclaim the gospel of truth free of charge. But there are instances of noble liberality among brethren, who have this world's goods, to help those who preach the gospel. As things are in the Western field the greater part of our ministers have, like Paul, to work with their hands to supply their temporal wants. But many among us feel the importance of relieving some of our able preachers from worldly care, that they may give their whole time to the ministry of the word.

Monday, Dec. 12. Last night and to-day we have had to take the parting hand with dear and beloved fellow-laborers. Each one goes to his field of labor with a heart full of hope in the work, and that Jesus comes soon to give us our reward.

AN INCIDENT.

To show how some "Orthodox" men feel towards the Advent preachers in this region, I give the following letter; but will just state the fact, that Mr. Richards did express his wish for a debate, though he denies this in his letter. Full proof was given of his expressed desire, before Br. Cate addressed him. Br. Cate then assured him that he was ready to discuss the following question: "Does man possess an immortal entity called soul or spirit?" Br. C. denied, and asked him to affirm. To this request he received the following reply:

THE LETTER.

W. W. Cate: In answer to yours of the 28th ult., I would say (1), that I never expressed a desire to debate with you or any of your class.

2. If you have no soul or spirit you belong to a different order of beings from myself. I am human. If you are not, then you had better seek an opponent among those of your own class. You have horses, cattle, and dogs enough on your own farm. You may carry on a discussion with either of them at your leisure, and according to your own arrangement. They have no souls, and as you say you have none, you must be of one grade. I would rather discuss with one of my peers.

3. I am commissioned to preach the gospel. If I should spend my time chasing skunks or other unclean beasts, I may be charged with neglect of duty, as Peter Cartwright said.

4. You have Moses, the prophets, Christ and his apostles. If you will not believe them, neither will you believe if one should arise from the dead.

I intend to preach the gospel there next Sabbath, no preventing providence.

Your wellwisher,

Memory, Iowa, Oct. 2, 1870.

He went to the appointment as stated in his letter, and made a miserable failure. Such men will have to learn that in order to meet the Adventists they will have to be well posted on Bible testimony. And another thing they may learn, if they meet them, that they are gentlemen, as every Christian should be, and are not to be harmed or put down by ridicule.

At night I spoke to an intensely interested audience, and the good work is progressing.

GOOD WORDS FROM O. R. FASSETT.

In a recent note to me, Br. Fassett, in view of the fact that I have been afflicted with a cancer on the face, and fearing the uncertainty of a permanent cure, says: "You have my sympathies and prayers for your recovery, and permanent cure from that terrible disease. What new and rich blessing is there in store for you, that you should be thus afflicted? May the Lord, in the 'form of the fourth' reveal himself to you in the furnace. Trust in the Lord, and take courage. There is a blessing in this for you, and perhaps to the church through you, from it."

REMOVAL OF THE OFFICE.

He then adds: "I hope the time is not far distant, when from that great inland city and center there shall go forth our Advent publications, from our office, which, like the heart, shall send its vital power all through the land, North and South, East and West. Is the Western Association to do this work? Or who is God to raise up to do it? It will be done, I think. Who has the means to accomplish it? Who the wisdom to plan? Who the heart and energy to take hold and accomplish it? 'The Lord will provide.'"

These are stirring and significant questions; and I give them that the friends of Christ and the great Advent movement may read and ponder them. Some of God's servants have duties connected with a more extensive proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom.

The Western Association is ready to do the work. It has the machinery, or agencies ready for action, and could do twenty times the work it is now doing. It only lacks the means for the removal. We have thus far done what we could. Beginning in weakness, in a small town, where some expenses and rents were small, it has done a great work. It is still doing nobly, but there is room for enlargement, and we say with Br. Fassett, "The Lord will provide." Who of us will he honor by a share in so great and good a work?

Those who find it irksome to do good to the unkind, the unthankful, the unholy, will do well to remember that Christ washed Judas' feet. Cannot you do do as much, and do it as heartily?

Review of Roman Catholic Creed on "Hell."

Dear Mr. Editor: I promised in a late number of your widely circulated paper to review three small pamphlets on "Hell" which have lately issued from a Roman Catholic firm in Dublin. In fulfillment of that promise I now send you a first letter bearing on the subject. I shall not touch on the doctrine in this letter, but simply make a few general and

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

It was quite by accident—to speak after the manner of men—that I heard of the works which will occupy my attention. I have for a long time seen the truth of life eternal only in Christ, and being a printer and publisher by trade, I had opportunities whilst residing in England to make known the truth by means of tracts and larger works, which have been scattered by the hundreds and thousands throughout the length and breadth of the British isles. The success of the truth was always a matter of deep solicitude with me, and I have watched its progress in Great Britain with much interest, and pleasure. Often has the silent prayer gone up that the word of the Lord would run into fresh regions and honest hearts and there "be glorified." That prayer I have seen answered in many instances.

Some time ago I saw it announced in the 'Christian World,' one of the leading orgnas of the denominations in England, and respected for its fearlessness, that three letters were to be written on each of the three following subjects: Life only in Christ, The Restitution Doctrine, and the Prevalent Belief of Eternal Torments for the Damned. I of coruse, obtained extra copies of those papers, and eagerly read them, that I might see what could be said on the three points. But as I am not writing on this subject now, I may be allowed to pass the letters sent to that paper in silence. These contributions sent the issue of that religious weekly up to 5,000 copies extra; and letters poured in in such a stream from all parts that contributions had to be declaimed However, some short time after, a gentleman of London got in a brief talk on the subject, in which he referred to three small works published in Ireland, making such extracts from them as served to raise my curiosity to see what farther these works contained. He headed his article and after your readers have heard them I think they will give their approbation to that title.

In this article I will inspect the books generally, and describe the cuts. The tracts make no pretensions to size, that is number of pages, but their doctrines are many sizes too large to be true. The first book I shall speak of is entitled—"Hell opened to Christians." This is an illustrated pamphlet of 48 pages, and a fragment of "Catholic divinity." The object of the book we are told is to caution them (i. e. Christians) from entering into it; and if anything can be done by frightening, I imagine it is well calculated to do the work intended. The writer in the Christian World told us he simply showed it to a friend, and a look of sickened horror—a blank, cold look—was the expressive answer. Extracts being read from the three works at a meeting I am informed made a little child cry, and it could not be pacified till it was assured that the facts did not justify the description. Hell opened to Christians, is a translation from the Italian of the Rev. F. Pinamonti, S. J. On the green paper cover in which it is wrapped we get the first cut. The likeness of a man is drawn, placed in mid air—a kind of an aerial imagination—with streaks of glory radiating from his head, and a cloud of splendor surrounding him. I suppose they mean that for Christ. And kneeling around him, lifting their hands and looking up, as in the attitude of prayer, are a number of men whose heads together are twelve. I suppose that means the twelve disciples. Turning over to the title page we get a quotation from the Psalms (Ps 54: 16). "Let them go down alive into hell." I turn to Ps. 55: 15 (the differences in ch. and v. are to be accounted for from the fact that Catholic writers quote from the Douay Bible, and we from King James' version), and there I read—"Let them go down quick into hell" [the margin says grave.] So that all the Psalmist wished was that his enemies should not live long on the earth; but go down into, not a burning hell, but the grave.

The second is, "That they may not go into it when dead." St. Bernard is the given authority for these words. But what are we to understand from these words? As we are not told who the "they" are, and the "it" is I leave your readers to guess. I suppose "they" refer to the wicked, and "it" to hell. But I should like to direct the attention of St. Bernard's successors to the passage which speaks of him who after he has killed has power to cast into hell; and get their definition of the words.

Underneath these two mottoes, we have, Illustration, No. 2. We have a baby's face peeping out of the clouds on each side of the head of the picture—meant doubtless for angelic visages. Then we have the Romanist's true emblem, the Virgin, placed in the center of the scene and as "the mother of God"—audacious presumption and vile blasphemy that dare say so! She, of course, is surrounded with celestial glory, and supported by three cupids without bows! A black ball is near her; but whether it means this lack-lustre globe or no I cannot say positively. I should think not, because there is sky, land, trees, and water beneath. However the artist has dressed the virgin in a moderately neat attire; for he seems to have had an eye to effect—such miserable effect as it is—in preparing the block.

We will now hear what the editor has to say to us in his preface. Amidst some sensible remarks he tells us that through an excess of zeal, wished she could place herself in the mouth of hell, to block up its passage, that no more souls, redeemed by her beloved Spouse, might fall into it." But our editor owns to having less devotion than this "saint." He says of himself "I who have not so much fervor, intend at least to lay this little book in your way, begging of our Lord, from the bottom of my heart, to give it so much force, as to shut up to some one or other that immense gulf which is never tired of devouring. "He then goes on to wish his readers to find some little time every morning to read and reflect upon his considerations. He says that they might do it more easily, he had "divided the work into as many considerations as there are days in the week, and each consideration into three points, that this division might render them more clear and less tiresome." Then referring to the illustrations he says: I have therefore prefixed before each consideration a picture representing in some kind; the infernal torments, by which the eye and mind might be employed, and the discourse helped, rather than hindered. At first, therefore, fix thy eye very attentively on it, and imprinting it in thy mind, say to thyself. if this, which is only a bare sketch of the painter, be so frightful, what are these torments which are originals made by the hand of God?

ST. CATHERINE OF SIENNA,

After telling us of his daring act he pretends to believe we "cannot think them exaggerated," but in case we should, he ventures to tell us that the torments of the other life are supernatural and therefore, not to be explained by human understanding, assuring us that "neither eye, ear, nor heart can conceive a true idea of the punishment which God has prepared for those who offend him." Then here comes a question to my mind: If heart cannot conceive a true idea of the punishment for those who offend God, the editor of the Hell Opened to Christians cannot conceive a true idea, and, on his own grounds, his own pictures must

EMBODY FALSE IDEAS.

This is only a just conclusion. Then we must beware of his pictures, seeing that they do not represent the truth: because no heart can conceive a true idea of the punishment.

An admirable proof text is pressed in here! Reader, take notice. To prove that the glory of the saved and the suffering of the lost are beyond conception Eccl. 1: 2 is pressed into the service—"Who hath measured the hight of heaven, and the breadth of the earth, and the depth of the abyss." Do you think that is proof of the assertion.

But St. Augustine is brought in, and he will substantiate the statement. "Saint" authority is made equal to the Scriptures. Rather than yield to the foolish persuasion, says our anthor "that the things represented here exceed the truth, endeavor to conceive such a fear as may render you secure." How much fear, Mr. Editor, will render a man secure? I always read "By grace are ye saved, through faith;" and even when we are told to save some with fear, the apostle does not tell us to bring before them exciting and horrible pictures.

Now we get the sum total—the grand acme of the advice of the Romish agent. Hear it; and you will believe that after it, nothing is too bad to be expected, and remember the words—"Birds of a feather flock together." "In order therefore to receive a due impression, recommend yourself by some short prayer TO THE HOLY GHOST, TO THE BLESSED VIRGIN, and TO YOUR ANGEL GUARDIAN," and in the closing sentences of the Preface that beautiful exhortation of Christ in connection with the events which take place at his own coming, is brought in—"Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." These words are applied to the eternal damnation of the lost, instead of being connected, as Jesus connected them, with the signs of the "Kingdom of God nigh at hand." (Continued next week.) WM. In the Press Room.—No.3.

WHAT I THOUGHT AND HEARD THERE.

I have just had (Saturday night) another conversation with the Press It always, I notice, takes evenings, when we are all alone, for conversations.

Press. Have you heard from those bills, yet?

W. Yes, or from some of them.

P. I should have supposed every one would have answered before this, in some way. I have a curiosity to know what replies you get. How is it? Are they pleasant to read?

W. Some are, and some make me feel bad.

P. What makes you feel bad.

W. There are kinds of replies that make me sorry; those from the poor and afflicted, and those where we have made mistakes.

P. So you make mistakes sometimes, do you.

W. Yes, I am sorry to say we do. And although I would not excuse mistakes, still I think it is no wonder that they occur. It is not with us, as with some offices that are well established, and sustained where they have, a man for every department; else I should not be, here "feeding" you. When one has to see to press-work, proof-reading, or mailing, binding and a thousand and one things that arise, and turn from one to another department rapidly and at a moments notice, it is, I say, no wonder if they sometimes make mistakes or blunders, is it?

P. Well, I should think not. I notice in changing from one "form" to another it always takes a little while to get the "tapes," and "impressions," "register," and all these things just right; and a few of the first sheets are apt to be spoiled, anyway.

W. And that is not all. We are greatly preplexed by the form in which business comes to us. Some forget to sign their names, and then scold us afterward for not sending the paper or crediting their money. Some want the paper changed from one office to another, and only tell us where they want it, and not where they have been taking, so it we know not where to find their names. Sometimes out of forty letters twenty will have a defective P. O. Address—either the State omitted (most common,) or the township given instead of the Post Office, or the whole omitted. Then again there will be an appointment, an order for books, payments on THE TIMES or Quarterly and a communication for the paper, all on the same sheet, and written on both sides so that there is no possibility of cutting the sheet and putting each department by itself. I hope some day we shall be able to have more help, and then we can do better. Still we make mistakes as well as our correspondents, for which we are sorry, and we do all that can be done to correct them when pointed out.

P. Well, how about that other class?

W. The poor? Why one of the first to answer our bills was a poor widow who washes for a living, and has a hard time to get along and support herself and children. We would'nt have sent her a bill if we had understood it.

P. Poor woman. She probably felt bad not to be able to pay. But it seems to me that every one who has the paper free, or who gets behind, ought to write—least once a year, and tell you the facts, and how they feel about the paper. Then you would know just how they were situated, and could favor them accordingly.

W. That is so. Letters from brethren and sisters in poverty or suffering from misfortunes with kindly words for the comfort derived from the paper have often gladdened our hearts. But some seem to feel that they need never say a word, save when there is an occasion (it may be just, too,) to find fault.

P. Now suppose you propose, that all who receive the paper free, or have not paid up do write the office at least once a year, expressing their feelings concerning it, and whether they still desire its weekly visits.

W. I will do so. But I was going to tell you of some other instances. Here is a brother, away West, himself a cripple, and two of his children invalids from birth. Another's health has failed, and he has had to change his business, find new work, such as he is not used to, and hence sees hard times. Another has had his barn, all his grain, and some of his stock burned up. Another was nearly killed in a well, and has been laid by for months, and not yet able to work. Another has been kept out of their just dues by others. Another has been overwhelmed by wave after wave of affliction in sickness and distress, still they have well nigh sunk under the trials. These all love the paper; indeed its letters from the brethren and sisters abroad are their chief comfort.

P. I am glad I print a paper for such folks as that. The poor and afflicted need the gospel, and should have it.

W. That's just the way we feel And such letters stir us up to stint ourselves a little more, and make the expenses a little less, so that all such may have THE TIMES free. I would like to print some letters I have received the past two weeks; but many of them feel delicate about having their want displayed so publicly.

P. I see some pay 25c., 50c., and $1 "extra" on their papers. This helps to pay for the poor brethren's papers, does it not.

W. Certainly: only not much comes in in that [illegible].

P. [illegible] are not all the responses [illegible].

W. [illegible] no Some say—I never wanted [illegible] paper anyway, and refuse to pay for it.

P. If they didn't want it, why did they take it?

W. That's what puzzles me. How a man can take a paper from the post-office week after week and carry it home, and use it, and then refuse to pay on the plea he didn't want it, I can't conceive. When I don't want a paper, I refuse to take it from the Post-office. Then I am clear. Another class send on their dues and say—I have been careless—didn't think of it. Another class write and say—If you can't trust me a dollar or two you needn't send any longer. We don't like to be dunned. Stop my paper.

Just here we heard Albert coming to help me take off and wash the forms, and the conversation ceased. For some reason the press only talks when we are alone.

But let me add, that of all the subscribers—sick, poor, free, paying, or what not, the man who pretends to love the appearing of Jesus, and with from ten to twenty-five or more thousands of dollars worth of property in his hands stops his paper under the plea of hard times—he is to be pitied. Some have done this within the last three months who were abundantly able to send THE TIMES free to from ten to a hundred thirsty souls, and would have blessed others and been themselves blessed in the gift. And a double blessing is good enough enjoyment for this world. Nowhere is there so much solid comfort, and in nothing do we become more like our Master than when we in his name, and for his sake and for love of his cause and his people make sacrifices or practice self-denial. Let us get nearer to God by practicing both even more than we have. WILLIAM.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

The New Hampshire Conference received seven members during the past year by ordination. The lete session at Concord was a meeting of deep interest. The cause in the old "Granite State" seems to be flourishing. —— An item in the Chicago Tribune asserts that Mrs. E. Tupper Wilkes is to be the Advent preacheress in Rochester [Minn.] at a salary of $2,000 per annum. We are glad if there is an Advent society able to pay a preacher that sum. We wish they could all receive a like salary. But inasmuch as we never heard of an Advent church in that Minnesota city, or of "Mrs. Wilkes" as a preacher, we doubt the report.——A sister in Iowa says: "My husband commenced to read to see 'if these things were so,' and I to refute his arguments. The result is, our neglected Bibles are familiar hand-books, thanks be to God. And it came about through your paper, and a dear brother who came here preaching and whom I would not then go to hear."——Br. F. H. Kenny has removed from Manchester to Iron Hill, Jackson Co., Iowa, which will be his P. O. address for the future. He writes that the Lord's blessings attend every meeting of the new Conference.——Br. C. Fox is laboring with the churches in the Eastern District, Mich., for a while, and with improved health.——The Genoa, Ill., Q. M was a good meeting, though but few ministers got to it, for some cause.——An Advent chapel is going up at North Carver, Mass. Br. I. S. Leslie is laboring with them.——A friend writes to us to stop the paper sent to Br. John Murray at West Epping, N. H., because he is dead. Br Murray has been an Adventist, and a constant reader of our publication for years. We expect to meet him in the kingdom.——A brother in the ministry writes that if he must preach without receiving a support, he will spend his time in new fields, and not with able but unwilling churches. We say, Amen. Paul has some words for those churches, which they would do well to heed.——Br. James Sloan has been paying for THE TIMES sent to two of his friends for some time past. As a result, one of them is converted, and has just become a subscriber on his own account, while he rejoices in the blessed hope. Was it not a good return for the investment of a few dollars?

Correspondence.

From Sarah J. Adamson, Monmouth Co., N. J

I love the paper, for it is about all the link that binds me and the Advent people together. I am so isolated, so far away from any of the Advent churches, that I should never hear any thing about the Advent cause, or know there was such a people on the earth, but for the papers. I often fear that I shall be obliged to give up the papers, it is so hard for me to get the money. This would be a severe trial to me, for I have been a constant subscriber since the first Advent paper was printed, and a weekly reader for all these weary years of trial and waiting. They have been to me a beacon light to cheer my weary pathways, and I hope they may still cheer me by their weekly visits. God helping me, they shall.

From Samuel C. Wellcome, Winona Co., Minn.

For many years I have been a lover of the blessed truths of God's word, and a believer in the speedy coming of my blessed Savior, and have tried in various ways to sow the seed of truth, and point sinners to the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world; but never until last spring was I fully satisfied that it was my duty to go out and preach the gospel to a perishing world. Yet my desire has been for years to know the will of God concerning me; and having consecrated myself to his service. I felt a willingness to be led by his Spirit wherever it might take me. I attended the Ottawa tent-meeting last June, and having become acquainted with Br. E. T. Himes, of St. Paul, and Sr. Rowell, of Winona, they requested me to attend tent-meeting at Utica, where help was needed not only in preaching, but in personal effort, as there was quite an interest in that vicinity. I thought at the time it was somewhat strange that they should ask me to go so far—130 miles—to a tent-meeting. But my prayer had been to be led in the way of duty, and I took it as from the Lord. I went home and arranged matters so that I could leave, and went to the Utica meeting. When I arrived a letter was received stating that Br. Himes could not attend, also Br. Bursell was detained, and when Sr. Rowell arrived things looked dark. But she entered heartily into the work; soon Br. Fassett came and we had a glorious meeting, as has heretofore been related.

Here God called upon me in an emphatic manner to preach the word, and I for the first time undertook to preach, as I did twice afterward during the meeting. But oh! with what feelings of weakness none but God and those placed in like circumstances can know. But thank God, who, in answer to prayer, helped me, and the door was opened in this place for me to labor, and, at the request of the brethren. I came here in August, and have been endeavoring to work faithfully in feeding the little flock, and pointing sinners to Christ. I preach in the vicinity of Utica, St. Charles, Viola, and Eyota. Have been in Winona twice, and attended two meetings at Elliota, one a tent-meeting, when we had a glorious time. I have also been during the month of November to Blue Earth Co., where I held a two-weeks meeting with blessed results. Sinners were led to Christ, and backsliders reclaimed. Praise God for his mysterious leadings in the way of duty.

From henceforth, while God gives me strength to labor in his vineyard, I go, trusting in him, any little errand of mercy he has for me to do. Sinners are perishing, and too many even of our Advent brethren are asleep. Many have ceased praying; family altars are broken down; and hobbies are ridden, while sinners are inquiring what they shall do to be saved, some saying, "No man cares for my soul." Faithful laborers are wanted. Oh! may God awaken his people to their responsibilities is my prayer.

From R. B. Dutton, Jackson Co. Iowa.

I should have written to you before, but I have been violating nature's laws and have, also, been paying the penalty therefor. I was up to Strawberry Point to the Q. M. and was taken sick soon after I got home. Thank the good Lord I am able to be up part of the time. We had a glorious time at the Point. We found the church in good spirits, and all in working order, with their hearts full of the love and Spirit of God. We had a good attendance, the very best order, and a glorious interest all the time. Yes, the first meeting was marked with tears, both of sorrow and of joy. We felt like giving praise to God anew, and giving him all the glory.

The respective churches in that district were well represented, and some of the brethren told me that the Advent cause was never better represented in that place. Perfect unity prevailed.

One other thing I must mention. The Universalist brethren of Strawberry Point opened to us and for our use their beautiful church, and that was not all; they came to our meetings, and we could see by their countenances that the Spirit of him that raised up Christ from the dead was at work in their noble hearts, even to the moistening of the eye in many cases. We gave them a vote of thanks for their liberality, and thanked God for it too.

From P. S. W. Deyo, Charles City, Iowa.

After residing at Strawberry Point over fifteen years, I now sit down to write to you from my new home in Charles City, Floyd Co., Iowa, a town of three thousand inhabitants, having two railroads, county buildings, and mill power on the beautiful Cedar River. There are five chapels of worship, and a large public school building. Here we are in a center, where I can go with my team to eight different churches within a day, beside the railroad in four different ways, on which I am favored with a minister's pass. For years I have been delighted with this place. To move further west I have desired to do for the last three years. The way did not open till last summer, and then it was to the place of my choice.

I have not left the brethren farther east in the State for good, but shall visit them as duty may demand. I have not come here to be idle, nor to sow discord and make division. I am engaged and called to three churches, and I mean to keep a part of my time for missionary purposes, to work as in former years. I trust I shall have the co-operation of all the lovers of truth, that the cause of Christ may prosper in all this region of country.

Let me say that the brethren have done nobly to assist me to a home, but in the change I have made some sacrifice, and will have to stay at home till I get things to live. The forepart of this month my father also moved here; and while I was gone after my family my youngest brother died. They kept him four days that we might get here; but we were one day too late. O cruel death. Thou art an enemy; cutting down young men in the prime of life, as well as the old. Our homes are sad, but we long for the better land, where death cannot come.

Eld. Sweeney, of Chicago, has just closed a debate here with a Universalist. He used the same Scriptures we do for destruction, claimed that the punishment was endless, but did not know what it was. Perhaps he learned something debating with Br. Grant.

Those wishing my labors will please send their calls direct to Charles City, Floyd Co. Iowa.

From S. K. Gibson, Wilton Junction, Iowa.

I closed my meeting in Wayne Co., about one week ago. Returning home found family and friends well; but some of my neighbors had gone to the silent shades of the dead. While in Wayne Co. I held three protracted meetings with good results in each place. Fifteen were baptised and twenty-one united in church fellowship, with a good prospect of a number of others in due time. I found considerable prejudice among the people, and in some instances it was hard to get the ear. But the blazing light of God's truth did its work, and some confessed their Bible was a new book to them.

Praise the Lord for a whole gospel; one that purifies and saves the soul, the whole man. But oh! for more gospel preachers. There are plenty that feed milk and water, and men are perishing for the want of bread of life. The hours of darkness, for this world, are fast approaching, and still the watchmen are crying "Peace, peace!" to the world. "The prophets prophesy falsely; the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so," is as true to-day as ever. Will wisdom come too late? It may to save a world.

There is a large field in Southern Iowa all ripe for the harvest, and a few more laborers are wanted to gather the sheaves before the final harvest of the world. I am working with all my might to fix my family comfortable for winter, so I may push out again into the hedges, and do what I can to gather jewels for my Master.

From Hiram Munger, Chicopee Falls, Mass.

Coming home I found THE TIMES, as usual, and never was better satisfied than with this number, Nov. 29. It began rich, with good extracts and comments concerning our most interesting times. An old "Revolutioner" cares but little about advertisements, anecdotes, and other light reading, when the battle is waxing hot, as it does now. The Lord is moving the prophetic machinery, sure enough. who but a sectarain bigot, in "an adulterous generation," can fail to see the signs of the Lord's coming at hand. If we had hal half the signs in the nations in '43, we should have overwhelmed the church. In the church of Rome, "the mother of harlots," we have some of the Almighty's "landmarks," and one has come in sight within a few weeks past, that we never beheld before. What can people think. The old tried soldiers are rejoicing. I find myself almost wishing that Father Miller and Br. Charles Fitch were alive to see this day, with others who fought the first battles in the Advent cause. But they sleep, waiting.

Instead of two or three Advent papers, we now have a multitude, for every paper of note is preaching the Lord's coming. And I was glad to see such good selections from them in THE TIMES. They are all, though ignorantly it may be, declaring—"Babylon is fallen!" The Belshazzar feast has set at Rome, and God sent thunder and lighting on the declaration of infallibility, as he did the handwriting on the wall at the fall of old Babylon. The dark "tarrying time" is past, and God's people will have light to the end. Christ says, "When ye," speaking to this present generation or people, "see these things come to pass, then know the kingdom of God is at hand." "Ye" means some one. The great and wise men of this generation are in the dark, especially the ministry. No wonder you get nothing in hearing them preach, as is the case of that Chicago lecture. God's people want strong meat: they are not satisfied with the rinsings of a milk pail.

I give the paper away to such as will read them. I think the last one will be hearty food for a weak stomach. I know of no paper so highly seasoned with Advent doctrine, and the Advent people love it. It attends to its business, and does not give side-issues and useless stories.

I see you have a cancer. We hope to hear of its removal. Tell us about it. But if you fail, and fell, you have the satisfaction of knowing that the light is lit up, in the East, and shineth even unto the West; and you have acted your part in spreading it. "Plutarch" will be a good substitute in the office; can probably read any letter better than you can, especially this one written on my carpet-bag in the cars. But I felt like writing, for old times came up, as I passed the old Windsor Locks' Camp-ground. You will recollect that meeting. I can only remember two or three now alive who preached then.

C. A. S. writes from San Francisco to the Crisis: I am disgusted when I go to one of our popular churches and hear the cream-cheese preachers dilate upon the "spiritland into which the just are ushered at death," and remember that in this great city there is not one man in the ministry of truth to openly combat and overthrow the error. As it came in course, in conversation with friends, I have often talked of the gross errors of the orthodox and Roman churches, and have set many an intelligent man "to thinking;" have aroused his interest in the questions which were called and answered.

Spiritualism is really the master here. Indeed, how shall we say otherwise than that the popular religions are all properly brought under the term that is appropriated for one sect. If I believed in a conscious intermediate state and the inherent immortality of an essence within us called soul, and constituting the conscious part of man, I would be either a Roman Catholic or a Spiritualist. It seems to me I could not escape one or the other, as an honest, logical conclusion for my practice. Spiritualism and Universalism are the names of the real creeds in our churches. It is true that some old-fashioned Presbyterians believe only in the universal salvation of Presbyterians, and still find a grand element in their ghostly comfort to be the confident expectation of witnessing the eternal writhing in a brimstone fire of all who are not synodically elected. I confess I have an intense contempt for men who persist in teaching the old fables. But if some men of love and unction would come among us and preach the truth as it is, I should be enabled to overcome this unwholsome feeling. I could pass to satisfaction, because the lies were challenged, and the heathen dogma turned aside.

The people here who are not linked in sects, strictly speaking, are remarkable for candor and liberality of thought. Altogether, it does seem right to commend the time and the field. When the Mission Board next assemble, let the petition have a few moments consideration. Yours very truly,

C. A. S.

From California.

Br. Himes: I closed my labors in Santa Clara, Oct. 9. Had the happy privilege of baptising six happy souls, in the Gaudaloupe River. The banks were overhung with beautiful willows, which added grace and beauty to the heavenly scene. Under those trees stood the spectators to witness the sacred ordinance. The presence of our Lord was with us indeed.

Then we left home for Jackson, Amador Co., a distance of one hundred miles, the same town you preached in some eighteen years ago. I gave the Advent trumpet a second blast on the same battle-field. I preached twice in the Methodist church, to a large congregation, hoping the seed sown will bring forth fruit. There I was made acquainted with Dr. Pitt and wife. Sister Pitt is one of the old Adventists, and spoke of you with grateful remembrance. They helped us on after a godly sort. The Lord reward them for their kindness to us, and may we meet in the kingdom.

From there we went to Pine City, a very pleasant town in the foothills. We proposed to stop only over Sunday, but at the close the people were so desirous for us to remain, that we staid nine days and held meetings. Had the Baptist church. The Lord poured out his Spirit, the whole town was moved. One of the first families in the town took hold of the truth and became our warmest friends, and desired us to settle there, offering us the church to hold meetings in. It was one of the happiest meetings that we ever held. We expect some sheaves from that town in the great harvest day. From there went to Sacramento, stopping one night, and then took the cars to Suison Valley, where we found a good home with Sr. Scholl. Commenced meetings, the people turned out well. The word was preached with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven. Our congregation increased till the close of the meetings, which held nearly three weeks. They told us there had never been such a turnout before in that valley. Expect to see fruit from there in the reaping day.

Then took cars to Vallejo. Spoke in the Methodist church Sunday to a full house, on the Lord's soon coming. Deep interest manifested, and found some blessed saints. Came by boat to this city, where I am now laboring. Could not get into any of the churches here except the African. There is quite a church of colored people here, and they own a good house, and hold meetings by themselves. They were brought across the Plains by their masters, years ago, from Missouri, and held in bondage for a time. Some of them bought their freedom, paying large sums. Others ran away, whilst others had lawsuits to get their children. They are now all free, thank God, and own houses, and some in comfortable circumstances. We enjoy laboring with them, and the news of the Lord's soon coming made their hearts rejoice. Spoke at the Court house on Sunday p. m. I showed them by prophecy that we were near to the close of this dispensation, when "the stone" would smite "the image" on the feet, and warned them to get ready to meet the coming day.

When the Ministers refused to let me into their houses, I told them the truth must and would have vent, it would clear its way and triumph at last.

I leave here for St. Helena on Thursday next, the Lord willing. Expect to be at home about Christmas. The Lord is with us, thanks to his name. If we would bring forth fruit, we must abide in the vine, which is Christ. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, no more can we, except we abide in Christ.

Pray for us that the word of God may ever be glorified. In hope.

Yearly Report of Labors.

To brethren "scattered abroad." It is now three and a half years since I conceived the plan of giving out pamphlets to spread truth, and asking donations to pay for them, on the same principle that we, and other denominations have long practiced in giving out tracts. Being a new religious sect, and being generally opposed in some of our distinctive doctrines, I have felt that we not only needed to have tracts spread broadcast to let the outlines of our views be known, but also larger works as generally spread to more fully prove them founded on the Bible. Tracts have been largely spread, but in getting books thus spread there are difficulties which I fear have not been enough looked at. The main one is that Christians, and the world will not buy our works as they do those of popular sects. They are warned to be aware of poison. I should not have had the Six Sermons twenty-two years ago if charged fifteen cents for them, and should have continued in the dark. God only knows how long. Sr. Dunlap, who gave them to me, sleeps in Jesus, but the fruit of her liberality remains, giving unspeakable joy to one heart at least.

Again, booksellers will not keep our books, were we able to supply them; and how then can we look for a rapid spread of our views if some extra means are not resorted to. For more than three years I have been using the best extra means I could think of, and many liberal brethren have "held up my hands," thus showing they approved the plan. Finding I could not live and let pamphlets go entirely free, I have, the past year, put them at cost, or half price, and the result has been, that I dealt out 300 of Death not Life at Springfield and Connecticut camp meetings, and 350 in the West at public meetings, while not over 200 would have been spread had the usual price been asked. Most of brethren have them, but if they can get them so cheap they will buy to lend and give to friends. Ministers finding it a burden to carry larger works than tracts, and that if they do they have to give many, and so lose by it, will carry but few, even in new fields; but they take them readily if put low, for they can give away part of them and then not be losers. For some years before adopting this plan I only could sell two or three hundred per year, while since last spring I have parted with 1350 of the 1500 I had printed.

Out of many good results of having works to lend and give, which have come to my knowledge, I will name only one. At our last Camp-meeting in Springfield, three young men, own brothers, were ordained who had studied at a Methodist College, and commenced preaching among that order. They told me that an Advent brother, lent them Life not Death, and the result is, they are now preaching our views instead of opposing them. The brother who lent that work sees much fruit from a little seed. It will be joyful meeting those in the kingdom whom we have thus converted and saved from error.

In three and a half years I have been able to scatter 4000 of Death not Life, 2000 of Pauline Theology, 4000 of my six tracts. Much has been done spread our works, but any one who vels much knows only a very small art of the people in the land are in ossession of them, especially the larer ones. If possible I shall continue the course I have taken, but owing to the change of times as to money, donations have been few and small the past year, and I am left $90 in debt for printing 1,500 of my work last spring. Who will make some Christmas or New Years presents for this object instead of making them for "things which perish." Signs are striking that we have but a short time to "lay up treasures in heaven" by giving "cups of cold water," or to enjoy treasures we may have laid up on earth. I shall oon need more of my work printed, I have only 150 left, and calls inase, as our field of labor enlarges. are not print more till I can pay up printer, and as age and health will allow me to travel in winter to see thren, I trust those who judge this a wise course to root up the ible torment delusion, will send id by mail to Buffalo, N. Y. My h is better than last year, and I the Lord will give me strength to another year, if time lasts.

HILL. In Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 15, 1870, James Hill after an illness both painful and prolonged, aged 48 years.

Br. Hill possessed excellent qualities, was an energetic and diligent business man. Well-informed, generous, kind and genial, upright in his dealings, and of unquestioned integrity, he was a gentleman respected by all who knew him.

STYLES. Died, in Eauclair, Eauclair Co., Wis., Dec 20, 1869, Frederick G. Styles, aged 12 years, nine months and twenty-nine days.

Also, in Augusta, Eauclair Co., Wis., Nov. 8, 1870, Stella L. Styles, aged twenty-two years, one month and eight days.

These were the dear and only children of Br. and Sr. D. G. and P. C. Styles, formerly of Jamaica, Vt. The writer was with Stella in her last sickness, which was very short. She fell calmly and sweetly into the arms of her Savior, trusting to be gathered in the morn of the first resurrection. Words of comfort were administered by the writer, from Isaiah 61: 1—"He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound."

ERICKSON. Killed at Bishop Hill, Ill., Tuesday, Nov. 29, Br. Jonas Erickson, aged 60 years.

Br. Erickson was baptized by Br. Foster three years ago, and took great comfort in the blessed hope. He had faith in God, and believed those who were really in Christ would have eternal life and blessedness in the new earth. On the morning previous to his death he admonished his family to be ready to meet the Lord, little thinking he himself would be laid away to sleep in Jesus before night. The facts of the sad affair are thus given in the Galva Republican:

Jonas Erickson and two sons, living near Bishop Hill, were picking corn. A boy named Samuel Peterson was herding cattle in the field. Peterson came to where the Ericksons were at work, and, while there, took out a pistol to place a cap on it. He stood immediately behind the elder Erickson, when the weapon was discharged, the ball taking effect in Mr. E.'s body, killing him instantly. A coroner's jury returned a verdict of death from the carelessness of the boy Peterson.

Revised English Version of the Psalms. New York: American Bible Union.

The following notice of this book is from the pen of an Eastern scholar and critic:

This version is made directly from the Hebrew, but with more deviation from the common English version than is required by fidelity to the sacred text. The rendering, though closely literal, is idiomatic and spirited, and is far more vigorous, as well as more exact, than the diffuse manner of the early English translators, whose imperfect knowledge of Hebrew compelled them often to translate from the ancient versions, the language of which was more familiar to them. The metrical arrangement adds greatly to the clearness, as well as the beauty of the expression; exhibiting the writer's thoughts in their true relation to each other, as he conceived and expressed them. A poem in any language would lose much of its peculiar beauty if printed in solid paragraph, without regard to its poetic form, as in the common English version of the Psalms. In Hebrew poetry this is rendered the more necessary by the relation of the two members of each couplet in sense and form. The attentive reader will find on every page beauties of thought and diction, which are lost or obscured in the common version.

Bacon's Family Guide to the Holy Bible.—This consists of a cheap large sheet of engravings, embracing a map showing the localities mentioned in the Sacred Narrative, together with remarkable sites in profane history; and many interesting facts and incidents referring to the various places whose positions are shown. A map of the journeyings of the Israelites from Egypt to the Land of Promise. A map exhibiting the distribution of Canaan according to the Syrian division. Three large Genealogical Trees of the family of Jacob on his arrival in Egypt, and of the Kings of Judah and Israel—and the Border, which comprises a vast fund of useful knowledge. Three sides of it referring to the Old, and the fourth side to the New Testament record, ingeniously designed to combine ornament with the most available form for reference, every event being in order with its date, and in connection with its corresponding scripture passage.

Its arrangement brings Scripture History, Geography and Chronology into intelligible relation with each other, and affords a most valuable means for comparing sacred with profane history, and ancient with modern Geography. It is eminently calculated to facilitate, encourage, and create a fresh interest in the study of the Bible, and is well qualified to render it easy and interesting. To all who desire to study or teach the Sacred Volume it will be found a valuable aid.

The Geographical portions are taken from the most recent and accurate maps of the day; and the chronological and historical parts have been selected with great care and labor.

The whole forms a most elaborate and fine engraving on steel, and independent of its intrinsic value, an elegant and worthy ornament for the study, the hall or library. It should be hung up as a family instructor in every house. Size, [illegible] inches.

Price, colored, mounted on cloth, on rollers and varnished, $8; dissected and folded, $8; without cloth or rollers and varnished, $1.50.

A Critical Greek and English Concordance of the New Testament. Prepared by Charles F. Hudson, under the direction of H. L. Hastings. Revised and completed by Ezra Abbott, LL. D., Assistant Librarian of Harvard University. Pp. 588.

This is the first Greek and English Concordance ever prepared and published in America, and in many respects the most valuable ever published anywhere. It contains—

1. References to all places where every Greek word in the New Testament may be found—four or five constantly-recurring particles excepted.

2. All the English words and phases by which these Greek words are rendered, both in the text and in the margin of the common version.

3. All the various readings derived from hundreds of ancient manuscripts, written before the discovery of printing, and embodied in the four best editions of the Greek New Testament—those of Griesbach, Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles—to which are added the confirmatory readings of the very ancient but recently-discovered Sinaitic Manuscript.

4. An index of English words, by means of which persons entirely unacquainted with the Greek language can find the original for any English word in any passage, and can trace and ascertain its usage and the manner of its translation throughout the entire New Testament, and can also detect any various readings occurring in the four critical editions above named.

It is prepared to supply the existing demand for a Greek Concordance so critical that it will present the latest results of sound textual investigation, and afford the most learned student valuable information which he can nowhere else so easily obtain; so simple that the mere English reader can use it with facility in his studies of the Word of God; so cheap that the multitude may purchase it by a trifling outlay; and so compact and portable that it may be made a constant companion of the traveler, the student, and the evangelist.

It leads the English reader to the Greek original and its various readings. It leads the Greek scholar to the common English translation. It saves space by omitting extended quotations, referring inquirers to the passages themselves for further information. It furnishes the Greek alphabet, with rules of pronunciation, which may be mastered by an hour's study, and thus obviates the necessity of an imperfect representation of the Greek words in the English characters. It classifies the passages where each Greek word occurs, reveals at a glance the number of ways in which it is translated in the New Testament, shows in what senses it is most frequently or more rarely used, exhibiting in their order, first the primary, and afterwards the several more remote senses of the different terms. It presents all the important various readings. It combines with these peculiarities a cheapness of cost and convenience of form which bring it within the means of the student, enabling him to have it always beside him.

Price—cloth, $2.50; leather, $3; morocco, gilt, $5. Ten copies, cloth, $20. Sent, postage paid, on receipt of the price. Size, six and three-fourths inches long, four and five-eighths wide, seven-eighths thick.

WHAT TO READ.—A Dialogue by the Roadside.

Brown—How are you Jones? What paper have you there reading? What is the news this fine morning?

Jones—Oh, this is my Detroit Weekly Tribune that I have just taken from the post office, and as usual it is so full of good reading that I can't wait till I get home to look it over; and then there is always such a rush for it the moment it comes into the house that I can't get a chance at the markets, which have every year saved many times the cost of the paper, unless I glance over them on the road, as you just caught me doing.

Brown—You don't mean to say that the children read the paper!—catch mine ever touching one?

Jones—Because you don't take the right kind. My children never did, until I commenced taking the Tribune and now they cannot read enough. My wife would no more think of leaving one paragraph unread than she would of omitting her weekly wash. Robert my oldest son takes great interest in the progress of the European war and in the general news of the day which is about as ably gotten up as in any paper I have ever seen. George, my next, does not rest until he has read each week's story, which he generally pronounces perfectly splendid. Fanny learns all the poetry by heart, and as they copy all the new pieces by Tennyson, Lowell, Longfellow, Whittier, and the other great poets of the day, and publish no trash, I don't mind her doing so. Sarah does not care for stories or news, or poetry, but she always finds a rich feast in the gossip and miscellany of which each paper contains a large installment, and in the Michigan news which they make a specialty of, and which is not equalled by any other paper in the country. The Tribune has its own paid correspondents in every county, and their reports are always fresh, interesting and reliable.

Brown—So good a paper ought to be highly successful. How is it with the Tribune?

Jones—The Tribune never flourished as it does today. Within a year it has purchased ground for, and built, what printers tell me is one of the completest printing offices in the country. They have spent large sums for new machinery and other appliances, and are working harder and spending more money in improving their paper and increasing its circulation than ever before. Within three years their Weekly Issue has increased fully one-half and they are expecting this year to still add largely to it. It is a positive fact that the circulation of the Weekly Tribune now exceeds that of any two other papers in the State. When you go to Detroit you should visit the Tribune office. You will be cordially welcomed and will find it will well repay you.

Brown—I think I'll call; b[illegible] points has the Weekly Tribune b[illegible] tioned?

Jones—Well there is its Personal and Poli[illegible] umn, which is said to be surpassed for vivacity and humor by nothing in the West; then the Religious column every week is very full and readable. The Farmer's column is prepared regularly by an old and experienced agriculturist, and I have already adopted many of his suggestions with advantage. The Congressional and Legislative reports, when those bodies are in session, are very full and complete, the editorials are always sound, the markets particularly correct and reliable, and indeed every department of the paper is made up with great care, taste and judgment.

Brown—I think I must subscribe for it. How much do you say it is a year?

Jones—Two dollars; but the postmaster at the Corners is talking of getting up a club of twenty, when it will come at a dollar and a half a copy. If he does not I shall get up a club myself. Besides the paper every subscriber for a full year receives gratis, a copy of the Michigan Almanac, one of the handiest little things you have ever seen.

Brown—Yes, I saw a notice of the Almanac in our county paper, and I resolved at once to send for one, but if I can get one with the paper as you say I will certainly take the Tribune for a year. Here take my money at once. If the paper is all you say it is they may count me in regularly.

Jones—I know you will be pleased with it. Good day.

Brown—Good day.

THE PAPER OF THE PEOPLE.

Now is the time to subscribe for the great Family Newspaper. Its circulation is larger than that of any other newspaper. Now is the time to form Clubs

The New York Weekly Tribune contains all the important Editorials published in the Daily Tribune, except those of merely local interest; Literary and Scientific Intelligence; Reviews of New Books; Letters from our Correspondents; Latest News by Cable from all parts of the world; a summary of all important intelligence; a synopsis of the proceedings of Congress and State Legislature when in session; Foreign News by cable and steamer; full reports of the proceedings of the Farmers' Club of the American Institute, Talks about Fruit; Stock, Financial, Cattle, Dry Goods, and General Market Report.

The full reports of the American Institute Farmers' Club, and the various Agricultural Reports in each number, are richly worth a year's subscription

Horticultural Department.—To keep pace with the growing interest in practical Horticulture, and to give information of a practical character on the subject, we have engaged Mr. P. T. Quinn to write a series of articles on the Management of Small Farms, Fruit and Vegetable Culture, and how to make them pay

We intend that the Tribune shall keep in the advance in all that concerns the Agricultural, Manufacturing, Mining, and other interests of the country, and that for variety and completeness, it shall remain altogether the most valuable, interesting and instructive Newspaper published in the world

The Tribune is the cheapest and best edited weekly newspaper in the country. We have all the advantages around us. We have great Daily and Semi-Weekly Editions. All the elaborate and intricate machinery of our establishment—perhaps the most complete in America—is devoted to the purpose of making the Weekly Tribune the best and cheapest newspaper in the world.

The Weekly Tribune is the paper of the people. Here the eager student may learn the last lessons of science. Here the scholar may read reviews of the best books. Here may be found correspondence from all parts of the world, the observations of sincere and gifted men, who serve the Tribune in almost every country.

No newspaper so large and complete as the Weekly Tribune was ever before offered at so low a price.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 20, 1870.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil; the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,
To whom all communications should be addressed.

Business Agent's Department.

We have a supply of Eld. Wm. N. Pile's pamphlet—"The Mediatorial Kingdom." Price 25c.

We have received the new translation of the Psalms by the American Bible Union. 1 vol. $1.25, post paid.

Free.

I will send THE ADVENT TIMES FREE one year to any young man or woman who will act as agent for my new and "Beautiful Household Favorite." For terms, address A. C. COOK'S Manufacturing establishment, Faribault, Minn

Bills! Bills! Bills! We sent out bills last week. Do not neglect our call. We need the money due.

—Any mistakes on our part will be promptly corrected when shown to us.

THE excellence of the N. Y. Tribune as a newspaper is so well known that we need hardly call the attention of our readers to the prospectus we publish this week. We have remarked especially that during the Roman Council and the late war and European complications, that its news was the freshest and most reliable to be obtained. As a news paper, we unhesitatingly commend it to our readers.

A Colporteur's Notes.

We have just published a little pamphlet with the above title for Br. J. B. Wadsworth, the well-known pedestrian Advent Colporteur, whose walks through the South interested us so much within a year or two. It gives some incidents of his travels, and an exposition of the faith, with other matter. Sent post paid for 10c. tf.

To Correspondents.

J. M. TOZIER. Half price. Have you found those documents yet? ....Mrs. J. W. ALDRICH. Will continue on the terms you mention....H. WELTY. No trouble....J. EATON. "Laws" sent to J. B. direct. Specimens ordered to you. The Quarterly and Banner will not be identical in contents. They fill entirely different positions, and should both be sustained.... D. R. LAING. We have not copies of the BANNER at office. You will receive a specimen page, however.... O. H. RAMER. Will send again as soon as a new edition is out.... W. J. BURSELL. Will credit the $4, but have no reason to think it our mistake....J. SLOAN. Very excusable ...J. C. POST. The address is simply Boston, Mass. We have no QUARTERLY binders. We fill your orders and cr. 50c. on your TIMES....B. BURROWS. The price by mail will be $4....If CORRESPONDENT at Utica, Minn., will give us his NAME, we can then draw his money order. As the "dozen price" of cloth-covered Minstrels is $2.15, and his friend received 11 for $2, we cannot see that he has any reason to complain. It is as cheap as we sell them to anybody by mail, and pay postage. Also please tell us when, and by whose hand those persons paid for their papers....J. SLOAN. What is Br. Margin's full name?....R. PATTERSON. The bill on your paper was probably intended for some one else. You are credited to March, 1871. The money was duly rec'd and cr....G. GRAY. All right....H. G. McCULLOCK. His date now is 1 June '70.

Special Notice—Special Offers.

GOOD TILL JAN. 1 1871.

We will send The Quarterly and TIMES one year to new subscribers for $2 60, paid in advance. Persons obtaining new subscribers will please bear this in mind, and mention it.

Persons already subscribers to THE TIMES shall have The Quarterly one year on payment of 75c., any previous to Jan 1 1871.

Binding "The Times."

[illegible]

This binder is in appearance precisely like the cover of a regularly bound book. Its peculiar device for self-binding consists of two narrow strips of thin steel inserted in firmly glued casings of binders' cloth on each inside edge of the back, and working hinge-like, as do the lids. The front, or left hand side, contains eyelet-holes, from which heavy threads, with needles, pass through the papers and through corresponding eyelets in the back or right hand strips, and are firmly secured to the "cleat" or fastener by "belaying"—a figure 8 turn—the work of a moment. The flexible back adjusts itself to any thickness of papers, and the strips hold them as in a vice, quite as firmly and neatly as if bound regularly.

We commend this binder to our subscribers. It is a practical thing. The TIMES, as received from week to week, can be added to the file in a minute's time; and the cover will contain over a year's numbers. The prices of these covers are as follows: Leather and cloth $2 50; Cloth, $1 25; Muslin and Marbled Paper, $1 75. Sent free of charge to any subscriber, on receipt of price. Let none who wish to preserve their papers be without this useful binder.

FILES! FILES!

We also furnish a nice newspaper file, post-paid, for 50c. This binds the papers in convenient form, but has no covers.

Advertise "The Times."

We will furnish envelopes bearing an advertisement of THE TIMES, with directions for postmasters to return if not called for, with a blank space in which to write name and postoffice, at the rate of 10c for a package of twenty-five: sent by mail post-paid. Our friends can by this means obtain a good envelope, cheap, and, at the same time, aid us by circulating an advertisement of our paper.

To those desiring envelopes with their own business card and return address, we offer the following terms: Not less than FIVE HUNDRED envelopes by express, $2; by mail, $2 25. PROVIDED, we are allowed to put upon them the following imprint:

☞ Cheap envelope printing by THE ADVENT TIMES Buchanan, Mich. Publishers of standard Advent periodicals, books and tracts. SPECIMENS SENT FREE.

A CORRESPONDENT says: "Will you not suggest to the readers of THE TIMES that they may present five of their friends or neighbors with five ADVENT TIMES envelops each, only costing 10c., and thus be the means of advertising the paper beyond the circle of their own correspondents? Also, they might put a Gem Tract in each."

The Times.

AT HOME.

In New York city and its suburbs where ten years ago there were 971,769 people, there are now 2,041,150.—The first fruit of the San Francisco lottery has been garnered by the grave. One who had invested about a hundred dollars in the affair, fifteen whole tickets, and sundry fractions or coupons, on finding all his investments gone, and his golden hopes more completely gone, went and killed himself. The Mercantile Library should put over their central door a portrait of this man, and under it write, "This property was delivered from debt by the murder of this man." It is the price of blood.—Slight earthquakes in Georgia and Colorado.—Congress is busy—talking.—Large and destructive fires throughout the country.—The records of crime are as full as ever.—There are fears of a panic and general break-down in the New York money market.

ABROAD.

Austria desires peace—for the excellent reason that she is not ready for war. But she is perfecting her military reorganization as rapidly as possible. When she is ready, or thinks she is, we shall hear a different story. Large sums of money are demanded by the government for army purposes.—The Polish journals announce great excitement throughout Poland regarding the matter of reconciliation with the Russians. The subject of Pan-slavism, or absorption of the Slavonic races under the Russian shield, is also what excites them. Russia is careful to announce to all these various Slavonic nations that their true path to greatness is only in consolidation with the ruling stock. It is not improbable that the time is now near at hand for which Russia has been patiently waiting, when she will be able to unite under her broad banner a great many isolated nationalities that have hitherto been under foreign control.—Prussia has commenced bullying Luxemburg. The Tribune says: It was well understood when Prussia retired from Luxemburg in 1867, that she would not have been so gracious could she have avoided a fight with France; and it is perfectly natural, if not exactly honorable, in Count Bismarck, now that the contingency no longer exists, that he should abrogate that treaty. France is powerless to prevent, and the Grand Duke to oppose, and the Prussian, having the might, means to seize Luxemburg again. Bismarck is more blunt than his Russian counterpart, and states his design of abrogating his treaty more concisely, if not more clearly, than Gortschakoff announced the conclusion of that of 1856. But the Prussian can afford to be less considerate, for there are no great nations to conciliate. The Luxemburg question will not be as difficult to settle as that of the Black Sea.

In a little more than three months hence, Rome will formally become the capital of a united Italy. In less stirring times, the event would have profoundly moved the entire civilized world. Overshadowed as it is by changes still more momentous, it marks an epoch in modern history.

FACTS AND IDEAS OF THE WAR.

A Tribune correspondent, writing of guerilla warfare says: The Germans themselves appear to have become ferocious from this kind of warfare. At one time I saw three wretched boys and an old man who had been found with arms in their hands, and the soldiers at whose head they marched testified their pleasure in the fate that awaited the captives, for they were all to be shot. A moment afterwards I heard platoon firing, and the screams of the victims, and I confess that to me the occurrence was sickening, although I have become tolerably hardened by many battles. An officer of the Lancers told me that he had heard a heavy musketry fire from a clump of trees, and was astonished to find that it came from a single old man. I asked them what they did with him. "I sent a lieutenant with four men to him, and then ——," and he made a significant sign of the Lancers jabbing the man with lances. I afterward learned more of this incident. It appears that when the Lancers came up with the man he was lying on his back on the ground, and although one of them had bored him through with his lance in such a way that it took two men to withdraw it, he had strength enough to discharge his piece and kill one of the Lancers, and after the lieutenant had shot him through the breast with his pistol, he once more discharged his gun, and it required three more shots to kill him. The Germans, as I said before, are rapidly becoming brutalized from this kind of work. At Dreux, on the 17th, no quarters were shown, and even the wounded Frenchmen were stabbed with the bayonet.—After the defeat of the army of the Loire the French government removed from Tours to Bordeaux, as the former city was threatened by the German advance.—The general course of events favors the Prussians. There is talk of the bombardment of Paris.—There is nothing in the course of events to cause doubt as to the ultimate success of the Prussians. There is talk that Paris still has provisions for three months, that Trochu is preparing for a new sortie, that Bismark is negotiating to restore the empire; but these are mere rumors. The fact seems to be that Prussia has Europe at her feet, and will do as she pleases. Prussia is now threatening Luxemburg—has wanted it long, and is now, doubtless, ready to take it. The Tribune says of the situation: It is significant that the occupation of Luxemburg by the Prussians, and the concentration of the Turkish frontier of the Russians, are announced simultaneously. The Powers which guarantee the Luxemburg Treaty are practically the same with those which assert that they will maintain the Treaty of Paris; and these are now more positively defied by Bismark than by Gortschakoff. On the whole it seems very much as if the Tages-Presse of Vienna were telling the exact truth when it says that all treaties have become valueless. At this hour Europe lies helpless in the presence of the army of Prussia, and the indefinite menace of Russia. The map is to be made anew, and changes may be preparing that no one dreamed of when Napoleon blundered into war last July. Public opinion in England is stupefied by this new development, which certainly ought to have been foreseen. The Austrian press and people are even more incensed and excited. But it is difficult to see what they are to do. At the first cloud of disagreement between the Western Powers, the Czar will begin to give practical application to his utterances of abstract principle contained in the Gortschakoff circular. The intervention of any one Power between Prussia and her prey will act the whole continent in a blaze. It may fairly be doubted if a British or an Austrian Ministry will think it worth while to interfere to sustain in Luxemburg the rule of the idle voluptuary to whom the treaty of London guaranteed it.—The English public is much excited over the peace policy of the Cabinet. We shall see stirring times as soon as Parliament assembles.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

An eminent French writer, M. de Laveleye, warns England against a war with Russia, and counsels that when once Germany is united the present compact with Russia will be broken, and the German empire will resist Russian encroachments beyond the Danube. But, he says:

At this particular emergency, however, all this is reversed. Prussia cannot oppose Russia, and, in all probability, is bound to her by secret treaties. If England chooses to fight, she must undoubtedly fight Prussia as well. War with Russia means war with Germany on the soil of France—a struggle supported by an English fleet and English money, that might last till France was in the condition of Germany after the Thirty Years' War, and the new German State was stripped of the flower of its youth, and the fruits of the labor and economy of ages. War with Russia means also Austrian and Italian and Turkish armies on the Lower Danube, supported by British pay, and wide-spread ruin and devastation in Eastern Europe, such as has not been seen since the Middle Ages—Austria divided against herself; the Germans of Vienna siding with those of Berlin; the Czechs of Bohemia and the Sclavons of the Principalities uniting with the Cossacks and the Russians to overthrow the ancient feudal Empire, now best defended by the Magyars.

A British war with Russia, moreover, as the French publicist well states, lets loose a swarm of Alabamas from all countries on British commerce. However disposed our Government might be to observe the international law which Great Britain had evaded, it would be impossible to prevent the escape of Americo-Russian privateers, armed by Americans, manned by Americans, and supported by them—perhaps often being equipped in places outside of our jurisdiction, but having Russian letters-of-marque. These would assail the commerce of Great Britain in every sea. The French publicist also sees dangers beyond even these, in the inevitable recriminations and heart-burnings sure to be engendered between England and this country in a war of this nature—differences easy to be ripened into open and fierce hostility. These considerations ought to restrain the passion of the hour in England. If they do not a black and mournful chapter is about to be unfolded in the world's history.

New Appointments.

Preaching brethren will please make this department interesting by sending in their appointments, for new fields especially. In appointments, give place and date of meeting; and make "notices" brief, pointed and stirring.

☞ Always write appointments on a slip of paper by themselves.

The church in Buchanan have invited the General Conference to hold its next session in this place. If any other churches desire it, let them speak soon that the officers may arrange.

Those of you who wish my labors, will please write to me soon. Some have written at times when I could not go. If you still wish me to come, write and I will try and arrange with you. New fields are desirable. O. B. GIBSON.

Big Creek, Wis., a two days meeting, commencing Dec. 24, at 10.30 a. m. Will Br. Groat attend and assist in preaching.
Clark S. H., Baraboo, 11 a. m., Jan. 1.
Castle Prairie, as Br. Thomas may appoint, Jan. 8.
Prairie du Sac, (no date) as Brn. Kunce and West may arrange. S. J. ADAMS.

Hesperia, Mich., a three days meeting, commencing Friday, Jan. 13, and holding over Sunday. General attendance invited. Br. Bower and Sr. Seymour are expected to attend.

The Ninth Annual Conference of the Advent Christian church of Minnesota will convene at Winona, Friday morning, Jan. 20, at 9 a. m.

Special attention is called to the following, to facilitate the business sessions:

1. The officers of the different Quarterly Conferences will prepare written reports of business transacted in their respective districts the past year, together with an account of money raised by quarterly and church collections.
2. As it is desired to make up the statistics of the Conference at this session, each church is requested to report its present membership and the number added the present year.
3. Each church is entitled to one delegate for every eight members, and as business of special importance will be transacted, every church ought to be represented.
4. In case any of the preaching brethren are not able to attend they are specially requested to report by letter.

There will be a service on Thursday eve previous. Persons coming on the cars will be met at the depot by Brn. P. Ramer and A. A. Gilbert. Those coming with teams will call at either of their houses. EDWIN T. HIMES, Sec'y.

The Golden Rule.

Those who would take the glory of the golden rule from Jesus, declaring he took it from Confucius, Tobit, Hillel, and others, are thus rebuked by the Standard:

What Confucius says is this: "What you do not like, when done to yourself, do not yourself to others." Isocrates' language is, "Do not to others those things which you are angry at suffering from others." The words used by Rabbi Hillel are somewhat variously reported by different authors; but we believe Dr. Lightfoot's account of them is admitted to be most literal. His statement is this: "A certain Gentile, wishing to become a proselyte, went to Rabbi Hillel, and he made him a proselyte and said, Thou shalt not do to thy neighbor what is hateful to thyself."

Tobit's expression is, "Do that to no man which thou hatest"—ch. 4: 5-15. This was probably written about 150 years before Christ. There are some learned men, however, who doubt whether the book of Tobit was written earlier than a century after Christ.

Now every careful reader will at once perceive how far short every one of these sayings comes of matching Christ's Golden Rule. They all stop short at the negative injunction of not doing to others what we dislike in others. They are excellent rules of conduct—silver rules let us call them, borrowing the word from a friend; but the golden rule is Christ's, and the glory of it belongs to him alone. His rule is positive; it bids us not merely abstain from doing what we dislike to have done to ourselves, but to do actively whatever we would wish to have done to ourselves. Those other rules, if any man observed them, would only enable him to lead a harmless life; Christ's rule observed produces a life of active beneficence. From their lips these sayings fell powerless: they were good words but they bore no fruit; while coming from Christ's lips, they were words not of truth only, but of grace and power. Since he uttered them, they have been, what they never were before, a moral power in the world, and though no mortal has ever lived steadily up to their level, yet ever since he uttered them thousands of men and women have been lifted, in earnest aspiration and effectual endeavor, higher and still higher towards that elevation.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, ... MICHIGAN.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 3, 1871.

A WRITER and preacher in Iowa disposes of "materialism," by calling it a "puny system," made of "vain frivolous whims." That man must have large views, of God, eternity, and his fellows, who can speak of our views, as apposed to the dogma of the eternity of evil, as "frivolous whims," when they involve subjects of the greatest and most momentous interests. Such language shows that the one who uses it has never rightly comprehended either side of the question.

THE country is threatened with a curse in the revival of lotteries. The financial success (so far as its originators were concerned), of the great San Francisco lottery, has encouraged many needy individuals and corporations throughout the country, to resort to the same dishonest means in order to fill their treasuries or discharge their debts. Concerning the evil tendencies of lottery gambling, we can appeal to a thousand facts in the past which all testify that it is a curse to every community where it is introduced. And never was it presented in so enticing a form as now—never did the vice appear more seductive. The professed Christian churches have prepared its way, and are largely responsible for the evils that have already come, or may hereafter arise from indulgence of this sin. He who has ventured his ten cents in the grab-bags, ring-cakes, and pious raffles for canes, Bibles, and other gifts, at a church festival or fair for the benefit of "a good cause," has violated a principle of morals, and is by the act prepared to make larger investments in greater schemes, where some public benefit, some benevolent or charitable object is held out as a bait to conscience. But let none be deceived. The man in New York who after drawing the $100,000 prize in the San Francisco lottery, gave a tenth of it to charitable purposes, by the act acknowledged that his own and the public conscience declared that the money was not honestly his. He gave away what was not his own. Can he ever forget that $150 of the sum came from the purse of that poor disappointed wretch whose mental excitement over the hazard, and agony of disappointment on drawing blanks, culminated in suicide? And every one that has shared in the profits of that great scheme, might justly write upon his treasure—This is the price of corruption of the public morals, the blunting of my own moral sense, the loss of means and happiness to others, and it is stained with blood!

Christians beware! Have no part or lot in anything of the kind; but, on the other hand, exert all your influence against this rising iniquity. Already it is said that the tide of public opinion is setting so strongly in favor of the lotteries that it is quite impossible to execute the law against them. The professed church is largely responsible for this vitiation of the public morals. Shall there be speedy repentence, with work answering to amendment of life? We fear not. Church fairs seem to be on the increase rather than otherwise. There is money in them: and money must be had, even at such sacrifice of principle. If we would be the sons and daughters of the Lord we must keep ourselves from this great sin.

Free Divorce.

The late editor of the Independent uttered in recent article the following sentiments:

> The greatest question which has been propounded to modern society is, What is to be the legal status, and what the social fate, of persons who find themselves married but not mated? The common and pusillanimous answer is, To remain in a bondage which it is ostracism to break. But a just moral sense, piercing a sham morality which is only another name for custom, asks, What excuse can be given to God, and to virtue, for keeping two human beings in an enforced union which each knows to be degrading to both their souls? A public opinion which forbids the disconnection, of an unmated pair—who are tied, not knit—chained, not wedded—violates the ethics of him who, preaching from the mountain-top of morals, taught so terrible a distinction between love and lust. Marriage without love is a sin against God:—a sin which, like others sins, is to be repented of, ceased from, and put away. No mattes with what solemn ceremony that twain may have been made one, yet, when love departs, then marriage cases, and divorce begins.

The Advance closes an article in reply with the following truthful words:

> Hence, if married persons are "mismated," that which is their personal misfortune, and probably their own fault is not to be made a reason for the overthrow of marriage as the permanent union of husband and wife. This would cause more misery than it would cure; and would be a course at once "pusillanimous" and "degrading." It might relieve certain unhappy people, but it would lead many other people into hasty and ill-advised matches, from which they would think that they could always extricate themselves, if necessary, by a divorce; and the ensuing troubles to parents and children would be heartrending and ruinons. Besides, it would offer the plainest facilities to mere lust, and to temporary passion mistaken (as it readily is) for permanent love. A sensualist in this direction has but to marry a girl, and when he tires of her, and wants fresh beauty, to contrive a quarrel, declare that they are "mismated," secure a divorce, and marry again. In like manner the temptation is increased and made universal, to covet other men's wives or other; women's husbands, to gain their affection or arouse their passion, and then to bring about divorces, in order to form new marriages. Easy divorce, under plea of being "mismated," would be the jubilee of lust, and the sufferer would be woman. Sated husbands of middle age would discover that their now faded wives were not their proper mates, that they were "tied, not knit," "chained, not wedded," and would look around for excitement of younger and fairer companions. Men would be principal sinners, to take advantage of the new order of things, and to women would fall the inheritance of scalding tears, broken hearts, disgraced families, and untimely graves.

Advent Times Sermons. No. 3.

"And he shall kill the lamb of the trespass-offering, and the priest shall take some of the blood of the trespass-offering, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot." (Lev. 14: 25.)

The world expects, and has a right to expect, that reformers in doctrine shall also be reformers in all that pertains to life and morals. If we present different doctrine from our fellows, it is presumed we do so because we think it purer and more truthful. Nor can we succeed in convincing the intelligent of the purity of our doctrine unless they find that its tendency is to quicken spirituality, and purify the heart.

Our text applies just here, not in "the oldness of the letter," but "in newness of the Spirit." The type evidently teaches consecration of our members, of our entire faculties and powers, to God's service. This touching of the ear, hand and foot was not a senseless ceremonial, a mere form; but a lesson for the church while time should continue was couched in it. The ear touched with the blood of the sacrifice was set apart. It could no more listen to the song of the sons of Belial, nor be lent to him or her that should go up and down among the people as a tale-bearer, taking up reproach against neighbors, or peddling scandal to all that would listen. The ear was henceforth to be closed to the filthy jest, the impure conversation of the wicked. It was to be inclined to hear the words of the Lord, and ever open to receive his commandments.

And that which the ear heard, the hand was to be swift to perform, or the feet ready to carry out. While all the members of the body are not mentioned, nor were thus treated, it is evident that consderation of all our members was the lesson conveyed. The hand should be diligent, laboring to supply not only the wants of its own body, but that it might have wherewith to offer to the Lord. The feet were to tread in the narrow way, only, and not be found standing in the way of sinners, carrying their possessor to places where their Lord was blasphemed. They were to run swiftly in ways of righteousness, to the house and the feasts of the Lord, but never be found in the assembly of idolaters, of idlers, busybodies in the affairs of others, revelers, the drunken, or such like.

As Adventists we preach Christ as none others can. He is OUR LIFE—and life is everything. The whole world can do no good, or be of any value to a dead man. We claim that through him we have salvation, in a sense that no other believers can claim: for they mostly believe that even were there no Christ, they would live and live forever: but we believe, as did Paul, that unless Christ is risen from the dead, and lives (1 Cor. 15), then the dead are all, righteous and unholy alike, perished; and we, when we go hence, shall be no more forever. Through him, only, we hope for a future life, by a resurrection from the dead; and moreover we proclaim that this event is at hand, that Jesus is soon coming. Our Sacrifice is soon to be our King.

Now the important point is, is the spirit of our text fulfilled in us. Have our ears, hands and feet been consecrated by the blood of our great Sacrifice, and we unreservedly set apart for the service of God, not alone in "contending for the faith once delivered to the saints," but, also, in our trading, in buying and selling lands, in measuring grain, in our deal with servants, in our relations to the poor, in our conversation, in the company we habitually keep—in short have we become new creatures in Christ Jesus, or are we the same old creatures, sons of Adam the first, contending earnestly for a faith that has convinced the reason, but has not changed the heart, or taken from it the lusts thereof?

If you retail filthy conversation, if you are careless of your word, if you neglect to provide for your obligations, if you are prompt in taking up reproaches against the maligned, if you are unkind to the poor, if you use a false balance or a deceitful measure, if you find pleasure in the company of those whom God's word rejects, can laugh at their impure discourse, or take part in their untimely pleasures and jesting, remember that you are "an epistle known and read of all men;" and although you may profess to be a servant of Jesus, you are really a hindrance to his cause and work. If you are selfish, worldly, stingy, unsacrificing, mean, unkind, fretful, or indulging any other sinful habit, the mere fact that you have a correct faith will not avail for your salvation, but will, rather turn to your condemnation.

Come then to the Great High Priest. Bring no lamb, as they did under the law, but bring yourself. 'Tis all you can do, and it is what you must do if you are eversaved. Present yourself as a penitent; receive anew the consecrating touch, and "go and sin more."

The Ghosts of St. Anthony Discovered.

In the last Quarterly I referred to the ghostship of a departed physician, which haunted the Winslow House in St. Anthony about two years ago, in the following manner:

> There are amusing instances of the superstitious believer in ghosts having been frightened nearly out of their wits. In such a frame of mind, and with such a belief as that the dead are alive and capable of communicating with the living, or are conscious of the world's affairs, the imagination in the darkness of night may create ghosts, or fancy that a white horse, cow or other animal is the spirit of a departed fellow mortal! I was pointed to a vacant house not long since which was supposed to be haunted, and every night for a succession of evenings it was visited by a multitude of people to hear the spirit rapping upon the floor of the house. The ghost, however, finally turned out to be a roaming dog which made his kennel underneath the dwelling, crawling through a hole in the wall! And when persons would speak, or invoke the spirit of the dead to make demonstration of its existence, by the wag of his tail against the floor their superstitious curiosity was gratified! It is not many months since that the Winslow House in St. Anthony, Minn., was disturbed by the ghost of a departed physician seeking communication with his surviving widow to inform her of an impending danger, it was claimed. His ghost was seen on several occasions by a girl and certain others, it was reported. Both the cities of St. Anthony and Minneapolis were disturbed by the presence of this deceased doctor. Hundreds of people flocked to the house to get, if possible, a glimpse of the spirit in its hidings in cellars, dark recesses, and garret. The public prints at Minneapolis and St. Paul had daily reports of the spirit's wonderous doings. But finally a gun loaded with a heavy charge to shoot the apparition if it appeared expelled the ghost from the premises, so that he has not been seen or heard from to this day! But I suppose multitudes in these cities are still believers in human spirit existence after the death of the body, and ready to be duped again when Spiritist necromancers are ready to practice deception upon them.

The following quotation from the Minneapolis Tribune shows that some of the ghosts notorious in St. Anthony have been discovered:

> For two or three weeks past, the University students who room in the Winslow House, numbering about a dozen, have had their fears aroused, and their rest broken by the appearance, in long dark halls and their sleeping apartments, in the "dead waste and middle of the night," of ghosts. Of course there is no such thing as a ghost, and they know it. But they had seen them—clad in all the ghostly paraphernalia of white shrouds—or sheets—chalked faces, red, terrible eyes, and moving with solemn, stately tread; pointing bony fingers and uttering sepulchral sounds. Several times the apparitions appeared—there were two apparitions. The students occupying the rooms, knowing the ghostly traditions of the old house, kept close to their rooms after dark, double-bolted the doors that were provided with bolts, and slept in couples, and pulling the coverlids over their heads, chatted themselves to sleep.
> But Dr. Phelps, the proprietor of the house, was too matter-of-fact a man for fear, and he determined to abolish the visitations. He prepared to receive them.
> On Saturday night, after 10 o'clock, before the Doctor retired, he observed a couple of young men—University students—steal into the lower hall, and he followed them—with a horse-whip—up one flight of stairs after another, until they reached the fourth floor. He overheard enough of their conversation to satify him that they were the cause of all the trouble. Having forgotten something, they turned to return, but Dr. Phelps, a robust, active man, directed a few sharp cuts with the lash upon their persons, and with a step that was neither solemn nor stately, they fled towards the stairs—as they supposed; the Doctor in hot pursuit. Missing their way, they encountered a wall, which sent them reeling to the rear, into the Doctor's waiting arms. He gathered them by the collars of their coats firmly, and gently compelled them to approach each other head first, until he had satisfied himself that they would appear on earth as ghosts no more. The names we withhold, because they are not necessary to the disgrace of the parties, as they are sufficiently ashamed, if not of playing the ghost, they are of being caught at it.

And I am glad to see the statement made by the intelgent editor of that paper, "there is no such thing as a ghost." There is evidence of progress in knowledge respecting "The Popular Supestition" in this statement.

O. R. FASSETT.

WHEN the columns of the conservative New York Observer contain such paragraphs as the following, from its Scotch correspondent, it is high time a sleeping church began to ask in earnest—"Are we in the perils of the last days?

> The whole atmosphere of Europe is troubled and electric. As if there had not been a sufficiently full crop of horrors at Sedan and elsewhere, other nations seem eager to take part in the melee, and one would not now be surprised at a general war. Are we seeing the perils of the latter days? The London Spectator, which I have just been reading, speaks of the battle which is at this date imminent between the Germans under the Duke of Mecklenburg and the Army of the Loire, as bearing an awful resemblance to the coming conflict of Armageddon.

I find that when saints are under trials and well humbled, little sins raise great cries in the conscience; but in prosperity, conscience is a pope that gives dispensations and a great latitude to our hearts. The cross, therefore, is as needful as the crown will be glorious.—Rutherford.

Editors are equal to almost any emergency; but when persons send money and give no name, or post office address, or omit both, the chances that they will ever receive their paper is very small.—Ex.

NOT KNOWING

I know not what will befall me! God hangs a mist o'er my eyes;
And o'er each step of my onward path he makes new scenes to rise;
And every joy he sends me comes as a sweet and glad surprise.

I see not a step before me as I tread the days of the year;
But the Past is still in God's keeping, the Future his mercy shall clear,
And what looks dark in the distance may brighten as I draw near.

For perhaps the dreaded Future has less bitter than I think;
The Lord may sweeten the water before I stoop to drink;
Or, if Marah must be Marah, he will stand beside its brink.

It may be he has waiting for the coming of my feet
Some gift of such rare blessedness, some joy so strangely sweet,
That my lips can only tremble with the thanks I cannot speak.

O, restful, blissful ignorance! 'Tis blessed not to know!
It keeps me quiet in those arms which will not let me go,
And hushes my soul to rest on the bosom which loves me so.

So I go on, not knowing! I would not if I might:
I would rather walk in the dark, with God, than go alone in the light;
I would rather walk with him, by faith, than walk alone by sight.

My heart shrinks back from trials which the Future may disclose,
Yet I never had a sorrow but which the dear Lord chose;
So I send the coming tears back with the whispered word, "He knows."

The other two works are composed of 32 pages each. These are not embelished with illustrations. But though not disfigured with such frightful representations as Hell opened to Christians, they are far more dangerous, for what they lack in pencil drawing is made up by descriptions of the pen. And, again, being written for children and young persons they are calculated to produce a deeper impression, because of the greater impressibility of the tender and unphilosophical mind. The great credence given by children to what they hear—their readiness to believe that what is taught them by professing Christians must be truth—lays a deeper responsibility upon those who would deceive them with such "lies in the name of the Lord" as these works contain.

The title of one of the small pamphlets is The Light of Hell. It is published "permissu superiorum." We are not however informed who the superior is that grants his authority to its issue. It is written professedly by a man whose name would give coloring to his knowing something about hell—the Rev. J. Furniss (furnace?) It is scarcely to be wondered at that we get such a glowing description of gehenna—glowing beyond reality—when the furnace is allowed to give its testimony! Now "parents are strongly recommended to read these books to their children." They are also "recommended for reading in Sunday school." And I doubt not the effectuality of this recommendation will secure for them a hearing by many of the "dear little ones." I will give you the Contents. (1) Where is Hell—the Earth's opening? (2) The Burning Mountain. (3) How far is it to Hell? (4) The Gates of Hell. (5) The first Look into Hell. (6) Fire. (7) Darkness. (8) Smoke. (9) Terrific Noise. (10) A River. (11) The Smell of Death. (12) The Devil. (13) What the Devil does in Hell—Temptation. (14) Judgment. (15) A Soul Coming into Hell. (16) The Soul before Satan. (17) The Everlasting Dwelling place of the Lost. (18) The Striking Devil. (19) The Mocking Devil. (20) A Bed of Fire. (21) Worms. (22) Fright. (23) The Pain of Loss. (24) The Dungeons of Hell—the First Dungeon—a Dress of Fire. (25) Second Dungeon—The Deep Pit. (26) Third Dungeon—The Red Hot Floor. (27) Fourth Dungeon—The Boiling Kettle. (28) Fifth Dungeon—The Red Hot Oven. Sixth Dungeon—a Voice. (29) Hunger. The Drunkard. (30) No Peace—Two Vipers—a Picture of Hell. (31) Eternity—The Question—a Measure—a Bird. (32) Tears—Land—Dots. (33) What are they Doing?—What o'clock?—The Diurnal Sound. (34) To Late!—The Prayer of a Lost Soul—The Answer of Jesus Christ. (35) Despair—The Knife. (36) The Vision of St. Teresa—a Pair of Scales—Break the Egg.—The Devil's Trap. (37) The Vision in "Ven. Bede."

This is the list of particulars in The Sight of Hell. I shall have to refer to some of the matter under these heads in a future number. For the present your readers will imagine the horrors depicted.

The last of the three pamphlets is entitled The Terrible Judgment, and the Bad Child. The contents are as striking as those of the last work; but, lest I weary the reader I will not here enumerate them. It is written by "Father" Furniss, who speaks in anything but a fatherly way. The appendage to his name—I suppose the initials of his standing are "C. S. S. R.," which, Mr. Editor, I thought might well be taken as initials of the following sentence, that could in truth be written across every page of the Book—Catholic Scrap, Scriptureless Rubbish. It contains an extract from Lord Palmerston's speech at Leeds, which quotation is headed "Cleanse the Fountain Head and the Streams will be pure." I copy it.

The great source of all those evils which affect communities is the want of early and proper instruction to children in the first years of their lives. If you want to dry a bog, you do not go to pump out the water which lies in the ground, but you go to the source of the evil. You turn the springs away from the bog, and change it into profitable and healthy land for the use of man. So you must go to the sources of crime at their foundation, and sow in the minds of children principles of religion and morality.

With these sentiments I most heartily agree; but if what this and kindred books contain be "proper instruction to children" if this is "sowing in the minds of children principles of religion and morality; I do not rightly understand the expressions.

But though I thus speak concerning these works, it is not that I do not believe in the punishment of the wicked, for I most heartily do, and eternal punishment, too (as I hope to show), but this I do object to—that such a powerful emetic should be administered to the weak and easily disordered minds of little children, whom it is possible to win by a recital of the love of Jesus and an example of godliness. I think the writer of these works will never "cleanse the fountain Head" by these means: the blood and Spirit of Jesus alone are the legitimate medicines that will effect this purification; and would it not be well for those who reflect this light of hell rather to seek to reflect "the light of the Sun of Righteousness:" that they may warm the hearts of the little ones, instead of chilling them with fear of evil.

In my next letter I will give an inkling of the doctrines, with some of the "strong" sayings of these tracts.

A "Rest" Remaining.

"There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God."—Paul.

"Therefore:" for this cause, for this reason, a rest remaineth to God's people. Now what is the cause or reason. Paul has just spoken of a "generation" who "tempted" God in the wilderness, and he "sware in his wrath, they shall not enter into my rest." They "sinned" and "believed not." "So we see they could not enter in because of unbelief." And we are cautioned by their example to take heed lest we fail in the same manner.

But what was the rest which they failed to enter into? Was it the Seventh-day Sabbath? Not at all. What then? It was something which they could have entered, had not their "carcasses fallen in the wilderness,"—and that, too, under Joshua. Was it not the land of Canaan? It was to this they journeyed; to this they sent Caleb and Joshua, with the other spies; "a goodly land, flowing with milk and honey," a typical land, a land of rest to that typical people. Rest does not mean time, but ceasing from labor or toil. "For he (Christ) that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his."

Doubtless there is a time for rest. As with ancient Israel, God gave them a day in which to rest, or cease from all work; and this was in perfect contrast to their condition in Egypt, which was continual work and toil: and that they might remember that servitude and their mighty deliverance therefrom, God instituted the Sabbath. This was the cause, and only cause. (Deut. 5: 15.)

But this people rebelled and entered not in because of unbelief. So God has spoken of another day for entering into rest. But what day, and what rest is this? Now as that Israel was a type of "the whole house of Israel" the "all Israel" spoken of by the apostle, so their rest was typical of the rest, or land of rest, remaining to the people of God, which Jesus, our Joshua, is to lead his people into. Is not this the land of rest promised of God to Moses at the very time their unbelief shut them out of the type? Right there and then God promises the antitype: "And God said, I will smite them with the pestilence and disinherit them" [of the typical land] (Num. 14: 12.) Then Moses plead with God to pardon them, and God said (v. 20), "I have pardoned according to thy word. But as truly as I live all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord."

Is not this Abraham's Canaan? (Rom. 4: 13.) Is not this the promised land of the "seed," Christ? (Gal. 3: 16.) Did not our Joshua come and spy out the land while as yet the Canaanite (wicked) was in it? And will he not ere long marshal his host, "the whole house of Israel," with the sound of the trumpet and voice of the archangel, and divide or dry up the waters of Jordan (death) and march his victorious hosts into the promised land, the land of rest? And will not the Canaanites all be extermined, after which our Joshua will give us the land? Then we rest.

Here, then, is that "another day" Paul spoke of, which God promised Moses should come if he lived. But how long is this rest? Is it a thousand years, and then to cease? or is it for ever? Let us see. "To the law and testimony. (Gen. 13: 15): "To thee will I give it and to thy seed forever." (Ps. 37: 18): "The Lord knoweth the days of the upright and their inheritance shall be forever." (v. 29): "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever."

The righteous shall reign with Christ on the earth as long as he reigns, which will not be limited. "To the testimony" on this also. (Rev. 11: 15): "And he shall reign forever and ever." (Is. 9: 7): "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end * * from henceforth even forever." (Luke 1: 33): "And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Thus our rest is not a temporary or limited one, but is eternal, coequal with the life which is eternal.

But it may be asked, What will you do with the Seventh-day type? Well, I have yet to learn that the Seventh-day ever typified a seventh-thousand years, or any limited space of time, except it may be the "To-day" in David (Heb. 4: 7), which is as long as probation lasts, and is probationary time. "For we which have believed do enter [prospectively] into rest, as he said, As I have sworn in my wrath if they shall enter into my rest, although the works were finished from the foundation of the world."

What works were finished from that period, but the work of creating the earth, which Paul says was the rest they were not to enter, through the type? But it has become polluted and must be cleansed ere it is inherited by the people of God. The sanctuary (the earth) and the host (God's people) are trodden under foot, but the times of the Gentiles are almost out. Then the sanctuary will be cleansed (of this perhaps I will speak in another article) and possessed by the host, God's elect. But "the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom forever, even for ever and ever." (Dan. 7: 18.)

This is the dominion given by Christ at the judgment day (see Matt. 25), and prepared at the same time. Paul says the "rest" now "remaineth to the people of God" "from the foundation of the world." Thus all is harmonious. Our rest is eternal. "It shall not be left to other people." No, no. Once obtained it shall be enjoyed forever. "Let us therefore fear lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any should seem to come short of it."

Image and Likeness.

In the volume of Inspiration we read that God created man in his own "image and likeness." Now while this unqualified expression is found in the Bible, some who profess to believe the Bible deny the fact stated. This is done under the pretence that a great light has shown on their way, teaching them (1) that God has no image, body or parts; (2) that man was created in the moral image and likeness of God. By this they mean, that man was created in "righteousness and true holiness." Now if we admit all this, we may admit another claim; that is, that by transgression this image was lost. Then what follows? Let us see. Man must still have a [moral] image. He must, having lost God's image, have received the image and likeness of him into whose hands he fell. Satan is now his master. We now inquire: do not the terms "image" and "likeness," mean as much in one case as the other? I see no reason for making them mean a physical likeness in one place and a moral likeness in another; so we will accept the idea of the "moral image." What then? In Gen 3: 3, we read that "Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own image and likeness and called his name Seth." (The Bible (?) image and likeness is always a moral image!) Now the fact being stated, that "image" does not refer to form at all, Adam's Seth may have been in shape a bear or a badger for aught we can tell. "Oh! But that means that Seth's person looked like his father." Very true, but why should the same expression signify any less, where we read that Adam was in the likeness of God? "Well sir, I cannot tell; this matter puzzles me." Puzzles you! Why so? It is easily understood if you take the Bible view; for the Word is very explicit. You believe that Jesus Christ was shaped like other men do you not? "Certainly." In this investigation we will look at a few Scriptures. At v. 6. of Phil. 2 we read that "being found in the FORM OF GOD he thought it not robbery to be equal with God." Yes he took on him the "FORM OF A SERVANT." and was made in the "likeness of man." So we see that the "form" of God, and the "likeness" of man is the same.

Again in Heb. 1: 3, Christ is said to be the "express image" of God's person; and in Heb. 2: 17, Paul says that "it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren." Thus we learn that (1) Christ is in form like ourselves; (2) that he is the express image of his Father's person. Hence the truth appears that we are physically in the image and likeness of God.

Now we are required to serve God. To serve him, we must do what he tells us to do. So we see that religion is not (as immaterialists claim) like the main spring of a watch—something quirled up inside of us that runs us; but a system of duties to be performed by us. And while we work in his service God sends his truth and Spirit into our hearts to work in us that which is well pleasing in his sight. Let us then so live in this world that we may live forever in the presence of that God who created us in his own "image and likeness."

For Consideration.

Presuming that the delay in printing tracts is owing to a lack of funds, permit me to suggest this mode of raising funds, different from any that I h[illegible] seen suggested heretofore. Make [illegible] estimate of the amount necessary [illegible] run the publishing office without in[illegible]ruption for one year, or a shorter period. Then ascertain how many enrolled members there are in the Advent churches in the West. Divide the amount to be raised by the number of members, the quotient will be the amount per member. Notify the officers of each church of the amount of its quota, and let the church raise that amount and forward it to the publishing office. To illustrate, number of enrolled members say 5,000; amount to be raised $15,000; amount per member $3. Jonesboro church, 14 members, quota $42.

The merits of this plan are as follows: (1) The Editor will be relieved of a great deal of care, and will not be compelled to beg through the columns of the paper. That don't look well. (2) More money will be raised, and sooner, than by the present plan. (3) It is systematic, and a surer plan th[illegible] the present one. (4) It does not i[illegible]fere with giving according to a[illegible] For instance, the sum required [illegible] Brn. A. B. and C. at $3 each w[illegible] $9. Now perhaps Br. A. would [illegible] al[illegible] to give $6,00 Br. B. $2,00 and Br. C. $1,00 total $9,00. (5) By assigning to each church the duty of raising its quota, each individual would feel more sensibly his responsibility to give all that he could.

The above plan of course refers to the printing of tracts and pamphlets, it being presumed that the funds received from subscriptions supports The Times. The tracts and pamphlets could be distributed as follows: one third to the churches, one third to the ministers, and one third to be distributed as the editor or Publishing Committee may direct, or such other plan as older and wiser heads than mine may agree upon. By all means let us raise the money and have the tracts; for we cannot well do without them.

That the present plan of raising funds is deficient, is evident from the fact that it has failed to raise the amount required; therefore, the sooner we adopt a surer and more systematic plan, the better. I offer the above suggestion for the purpose of calling attention to this subject, that some plan may be fixed upon by which we can scatter the tracts and pamphlets all over the western country. Therefore I would like to have the opinion of others on this subject.

Theo. S. Thomasson.

[We give the above without note or comment, to awaken thought. At the coming meeting of the Association it and other schemes may be considered.]—Ed.

Ambition is the rankest poison to the church, when it possesses preachers. It is a consuming fire. The Holy Scriptures are given to destroy the desires of the flesh; therefore we must not therein seek after a temporal honor. I much marvel for what cause people are proud and haughty; we are born in sin, and every moment in danger of death. Are we proud of our scabs and scalds? We, who are altogether an unclean thing?—Luther.

Queries and Suggestions.

Is the proper mode of baptism three immersions or one? Some maintain that trine immersion is the true form, and think to prove it from Matt. 28: 19, claiming that we must be baptised once in each name. That is their only text to prove it. Is that text spurious? Let us look at the facts as they stand in the New Testament.

1. That text stands alone; no reference is made to it anywhere in the Bible.

2. Why is it a fact that every one, mentioned as being baptised by the apostles, was baptised in the name of the Lord or Lord Jesus, and not in the name of the Father or Holy Ghost?

4. Why did the apostles always—where a formula is given—command to be baptised in the name of Jesus, only, and not according to the formula in Matthew?

4. How is it that some in the apostles' days could have been baptised in the name of the Holy Spirit, and yet not know that there was any Holy Spirit? (Acts 19: 2.)

5. Why did Peter, on the day of Pentecost, when full of the Holy Spirit, command "every one of you" to be baptised in the name of "Jesus Christ for the remission of sins?" Did not Peter know the right way? Did God sanction an error, by the addition of 3,000 souls?

6. Why does Peter in every instance where he gives a formula, say in the name of the Lord, Lord Jesus, or Jesus Christ, if that was not the only name to use?

7. Why does Paul give us the same formula—when he gives us any—as Peter. And how was it that "God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul" if he was not right?

8. Do we read any where of one Lord, one faith, and three baptisms?

9. Is it a fact that as "many as were baptised into Jesus Christ, we baptised into his (not their) death?" "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death."

10. If baptism signifies death and resurrection, what does it mean when the name of the Father is called over: did he die?

11. Is it not a fact that if that one text were omitted, no one would ever mistrust that any were ever baptised in any other name than that of Jesus only?

12. Why in so important a matter as baptism, did all the apostles omit to mention, or even hint at the formula as given by Matthew, if indeed he ever did give it? It is out of the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. The witness of one is not enough.

If we are wrong in our ideas will some one give us the light.

G. W. Bailey.

[Note. The verse in Matthew is found in the most ancient MSS and versions. It can be rejected upon internal evidence only, which is establishing a dangerous precedent. The less is always included in the greater. Matt. 28. 19 does not teach trine immersion, nor, in absence of good testimony should it be rejected as spurious simply because some have built an error upon it. Ed.]

Strange People to Me.

Strange are the ministers who never tell the people about the two precious papers called The Times and the Crisis. Strange they don't try to get subscribers when they know that their influence goes much farther than the members of their congregations.

Strange are the people who are always pleading poverty and begging for themselves, yet feel that unless they constantly give a little to others they cannot be saved. It's like robbing Peter to pay Paul, and puts me in mind of a Methodist sister some years ago who said that she loved to sit in the church with cold feet although it was hard to bear, but she thought it was a sacrifice to the Lord. I remember telling her I was no Catholic, and did not believe in penance.

Strange are those people who have taken a paper for six months, and are perfectly willing to renew their subscription, but always want sombody to run after them and put them in remembrance of it.

Strange are those church people who set aside a day for prayer and fasting when they want to settle financial difficulties, and at no other time. It's like the man when the ship was about to be lost, crying "O Lord! if you'll just put me safe on shore this time, I'll never ask another favor of you while I live."

Strange are the brethren who say they are the vilest sinners on earth, yet dare keep their names on the church record. Is it any wonder there are so many infidels?

Strange are the sisters and brethren who stand and stare at strangers when leaving the church and never shake hands with them or invite them to come again.

Strange are the people who insist upon starting a hymn when they know that no other person can join in singing it.

Strange are Christians who always select, "When I can read my title clear," etc., to sing. Now if they cannot read their title clear, its high time that they could. If Jesus should come while they were singing it, how would they get time to make it clear?

Strange are ministers who tell the unconverted to work out their salvation, without quoting the rest of the verse, forgetting that they cannot work out what they have not got.

Strange are people whose tougues in visiting can run freely on worldly themes, but are very reserved when religion is introduced.

Strange are the people who can talk so much about religion, yet never talk religion.

Strange are the brethren and sisters who never think of speaking to you unless you speak to them. They must be very absent-minded and forget their relation to their own father's family.

Strange are those brethren and sisters who write nice peices for religious papers without signing their names, yet express astonishment at people wanting to know who they are.

Strange are the husbands who take a back seat at church and always desire their wives to do the same, contrary to their wishes, thereby losing much enjoyment of the sermon.

Strange are those men who rush out of church after meeting as though they were afraid somebody was going to speak to them, and then pout and scold about the members being unsociable.

All will be plain by and by.

"Say a Word."

The article headed as above in The Times of Nov. 29, gives but the experience of numbers of "our preachers," and it is truly "a burning shame." Yet it is hard for the preachers to "let such churches alone," because there are some good, warm-hearted, and loving brethren (poor in this world's goods) connected with them, who will have to suffer by being "let alone" with the rest. But necessity compels them to adopt such a course. For the preachers and families, (though they may "live by faith") canno. live on faith alone. And though they may (as they ought) be clothed with "the whole armor of God," which is obtained "without money and without price," yet they must have clothing which is not without price. It would be blessed to labor for and preach the gospel to the poor in the "regions beyond." But the preacher is poor.

Sometimes he starts out visiting churches that have invited him, and preaching in new fields in the "regions beyond," until the little money he had when leaving home is gone, and he has not received one fourth enough to pay his fare home. Then unless some one shall open his heart enough to give him the needed amount, he will be obliged to go to work and earn it, or go home on foot!

This is no fiction, but sober reality, and I know it. And if those churches that "withhold more than is meet," (which tendeth to poverty) could but feel for a little while the care, anxiety, and sadness of the preacher under such circumstances, they might perhaps think of what the apostle John says: "But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" (1 John 3: 17.) May they awake to a sense of what God requires at their hands, or they may hear more

Anon.

Our Young Folks.

Peter Paasch.

THE GERMAN CONFESSOR.

In the year 1717 there was a war between the Germans and Turks. The brave marshal, Prince Eugene, won many victories over the infidels; and such was the spirit abroad in Germany, that nearly every village sent men to assist the Emperor. From the village of Hermannsburg rode forth the brave knight Staffhorst, with his two esquires Peter Paasch and Hans Puffel. Peter Paasch, full of grief at the death of his beloved master, pursued the flying Turks, was surrounded, and taken prisoner. They tied him to his horse's tail, a Turk mounted the horse, and Paasch had to run by his side barefoot. The Turks had robbed him of everything.

Late in the evening they halted in a wood, to take revenge on their Christian prisoner at their leisure. First they crossed two sticks, and spat on the cross, and tried, by blows and tortures, to force Paasch to do the same; but in vain. They then tied his hands and feet together, and struck him with their knives and daggers, to force him to spit on the cross; but to no purpose. Then they nailed his hands, over his head, to a tree, and whipped him, to make him pronounce the name of Mahomet; but he knew that this would mean, in their view, a denial of his Master, Christ; and as often as they told him to say Mahomet, he cried out, "Jesus Christ!"

The Turks then kindled a fire at his feet: he now believed his end near, and prayed earnestly and devoutly. God gave him such inward peace in this terrible conflict that, in imitation of Stephen, he prayed sincerely for his enemies; and having done so, he was filled with such holy joy, that he sang, with a strong voice, the German hymn,—

"O, innocent Lamb of God, slain on the cross for us!" etc.

When he had sung to the end of the third verse, ending,—

"Grant us Thy peace, O'Jesus, Amen!"

the clang of trumpets was heard outside the forest. Soon some German horsemen rode in; the Turks fled; and the soldiers beheld, with horror, poor Paasch nailed by his hands to the tree, and a fire burning at his feet! When they unbound him, he fell fainting into their arms.

After they had bound up his wounds, clothed, and refreshed him, his first question was, how God had sent them to his aid just at the right moment to save him from a cruel death?

They replied: "We were sent out in pursuit of the Turks, and when we heard from the forest the sound of the hymn,

'O, innocent Lamb of God!'

there is a Christian," we said; "and so rode with all speed into the wood. It is the Lamb of God, in whom thou trustest, Paasch, who saved thee."

So they brought him to Belgrade, and told his escape to Prince Eugene, who had him cared for, and visited him. As he was now unfit for service, the Prince sent him back to his own country.

Ten years after this event he died, singing upon his death-bed his favorite hymn, the memorial to him of his wonderful deliverance.—Sel.

Perseverance.

A load of coal was thrown down before the door of a cellar, in which a poor family lived. A little girl went out, with quite a small shovel, and began to shovel it up. "My little child," said a gentleman who was passing by, "you can't get all that coal in with your small shovel." "Oh yes, I can, sir," said the little girl, "if I only work long enough."

There was a poor boy, once, who resolved to get an education. He had to work hard all day, and, when evening came, he had no place to read in, and no light to read by; so he used to take his book, and go into the street, and stand by some shop-window, and study in the light that shone from it. And sometimes, when the stores were closed, before he got through, he would climb up a lamp-post and hold on with one hand, while he held his book with the other. It is not surprising that he became a man who was distinguished for his learning.

The world, the flesh, and the devil form a triple league against the Christian, and he is obliged to contend with them at every step of his journey. Nor is he to desist from fighting until death. His armor is to be put off, only when his shroud is put on.

THE BIBLE BANNER!

This paper will be issued monthly, at 240 Broadway, New York City, beginning with the coming year. The first number will appear early in December, to facilitate the work of securing subscribers. It will be neatly executed in double quarto form, and in other respects as worthy of your patronage as we have ability to make it. The Bible Banner is designed to elucidate the fundamental features of Bible truth, in the various departments of Doctrine, Prophecy and Practical Piety. Special attention will be given to the Nature of Man, Atonement of Christ, the Signs of the Times, the Coming of the Bridegroom, the Resurrection of the Dead, the Destiny of the Wicked, the Redemption of Earth, and the crowning of Christians in the Kingdom to come. We shall use our best endeavors to make The Banner an able expositor of "Bible Doctrine," and a stirring advocate of experimental and practical godliness. It will ring out the clarion notes of truth on the living issues of the age, and seek to merit the respect of intelligent Christians everywhere.

The whole enterprise will be placed on a thoroughly missionary basis. The editors have no stipulated salaries. The expenses of clerks, office rent, etc., will be paid by private donation; so that the income may be appropriated to enlarge the circulation of the paper. By this arrangement we expect to scatter gratuitously a goodly number of copies, every month, to the various literary and theological institutions of the country, and to introduce the truth of God on these subjects into many new and destitute fields. We hope thus to set in motion a current of influence that shall eventuate in the salvation of many who would otherwise perish. Some of us can never be too grateful for the timely aid afforded us, while groping in darkness and grappling with difficulty. Nor can we better express our gratitude than by proffering a helping hand to others, who, in turn, may become efficient workers for God. In doing this, it is neither our desire nor our intention to infringe upon any existing publications devoted to the promotion of Bible Christianity; but, on the contrary, to increase their efficiency—to add another voice for the right—to re-enforce the army of the living God! We think we speak advisedly when we say that we have both the power and the disposition to increase, rather than diminish the circulation of such existing papers as we believe to be faithful exponents of God's truth. We expect to do this, (1) by a system of "exchange advertising," which only a portion of our readers will fully understand. We expect, (2) that our sheet will pioneer its way into many a vacant field, to bear its message of mercy, and prepare the way for other messengers—both papers and preachers. We earnestly advise all to continue their present papers. We hope to make our monthly so thoroughly good that you will be glad to add it to those which already bring light and comfort to your household.

While we spread our Banner to the breeze, and launch out in the name of our glorious Captain, we earnestly desire your prayers, your pens, your names, and your hearty co-operation. Shall we have them? Let the response be emphatic and prompt! Roll up a liberal list! Begin at once. We shall try to give you the worth of your money. Canvass your neighborhoods, and send us the results as soon as possible. Shall we not have five thousand subscribers to commence with the year? If it suits your convenience, you can communicate with any of the editors; but as a standing regulation all letters should be addressed to the "Bible Banner," 240 Broadway, New York City.

TERMS.

The Bible Banner will be mailed to subscribers at one dollar a year, payable in advance if possible, but always within three months.

A Book Free.

Knowing the power of valuable books in making effectual impressions of truth, and the ease with which agents form large clubs for a paper when they can offer a book free to each subscriber, we have concluded to publish in the first number of The Banner a list of books, by our best writers, mostly on prophetical and doctrinal subjects (prices from 25 to 50 cents, in paper covers), and send the choice from the list post-paid, free to every yearly subscriber.

"The Banner" for Free Distribution

We will furnish The Bible Banner for free distribution at 40 cents a year, or a few samples by mail, with or without price, to all who will send us their address.

THE BANNER AND THE TIMES.

Any subscriber to The Advent Christian Times who has not paid for the year 1871, by remitting $3 75 to The Times office, will receive both papers during the year. Any person who has not been a subscriber to The Times, by remitting $2 50 to The Times' office, shall receive both papers for the year 1871.

"The Bible Banner" Free.

Those who devote their time and energies to the gospel ministry can have The Banner free by sending us subscribers, and any person who will act as our agent and send us five or more subscribers with the money, can have The Banner free or retain 25 per cent., or select a premium from our large list of valuable articles which will appear in the first number of the paper. We hope to be able by the issue of the first number to announce a system or plan, by which all who have willing hands and hearts may do much in the good cause.

Oh, let us wake up, trim our lamps, and let the world hear the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." We hope all who love the truth to which The Banner is specially devoted, and can take the paper or work for it, will subscribe at once and send for prospectus and sample copies.

Money by draft, or postoffice orders on New York, made payable to H. A. King, may be sent at our risk. Address:

JOSHUA V. HIMES, - - - - EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 3, 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

JUST after Mr. Dickens died a few ministers, in speaking of him, dared tell the truth, which raised a general storm against them in the secular press, some religious journals, also, denouncing them. But the judgment of those fearless men will yet be sustained. Last week we read in the Advance: "The first funeral spasm of eulogy over, the English press are swinging into severer criticism of Dickens' works. One writer condemns the tolerance with which Dickens regards intemperance, even to the beastliest degree, and says that 'Pickwick' absolutely reeks with alcohol." We shall have the truth at last.

THE American Baptist says of Christmas: "Let it be borne in mind, that the observance did not commence until long after the apostles were dead and in glory."

—One of the apostles wrote—"When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye, also, appear in glory." Paul never saw anything glorious in death; but the second advent, and the resurrection, and eternal life, them he esteemed glorious, and taught his converts to wait for them; and that when the day of the Lord shall come, he and they, all who had lived before and those born since that day who have been truly the Lord's, should receive the crowns laid up until then.

THE thing is settled. We are all wrong. We mean as to the kingdom of God. Just see this argument, from an exchange:

> Jesus preached the gospel of the kingdom of God. (Mark 1: 14.) The kingdom, then, must have had an existence, else its gospel, or good news, could not be preached.

—However, on reflection, we conclude that if God has made promise of a kingdom, the promise is in itself a sufficient basis for "good news" of that kingdom, even if not an element of it could be found now aside from the persons, or a few of them, to whom the promise was made. We would rather continue "heirs" of the kingdom to come, than invest in any one of the theological substitutes for that kingdom in the present age, or a temporal age to come.

A LEADING writer among the Winebrennarians says:

> And when the king returns and creates the new heavens and earth, changes his subjects to immortality, then he will set up the perfect, future, everlasting, mountain, and glory state, and personally reign with his saints.

Now this "mountain" kingdom is to fill the whole earth. (Dan. 2.) Also, "the wicked and the sinner" are to be "punished" "in the earth." (Prov. 11: 18.) If this punishment includes everlasting existence, then they must forever be occupants of the kingdom of God; for they are in the earth, and it fills the whole earth; consequently they must be in the kingdom. Furthermore, they are punished in the lake of fire: hence it, also, is to be in the kingdom. These half-way materialists, that want the new material earth, make sad work of consistency. As long as their real, essential man is immaterial, they had better go the whole figure, make death the resurrection, and heaven a condition or state, in which immaterial beings enjoy immaterial bliss. They would then have consistency on their side, however hardly pushed they might be for argument.

But to return to the previous question: we suggest that these half-materialists adopt the ancient idea that hell is inside the earth. They can then set forth God's kingdom filling the outside of the earth, and the devil's occupying all the inside, to all eternity. Possibly they can find some one to believe it.

THE Advance having set forth some very just remarks upon Luke 20: 27-37, a more consistent immaterialist is allowed to criticise the argument. In the course of his remarks the correspondent indulges the following strain of ridiculous and absurd assertions:

> The resurrection of the material body which it is believed will take place at the last day, is a doctrine that never was "delivered unto the saints," and therefore Christians are not required to "contend for it." This doctrine was engrafted as a dogma of the church after the apostles' time, and it is now retained in the creed, not by the force of reason, or the testimonies of Revelation. But the advocates of it place their most reliance on tradition, and to silence the opponents of this doctrine, their favorite question is, "Has not God power to raise the natural body?" In reply, He has no where promised that he will do it. And, therefore, it is not required to prove that he cannot do it. It is enough to know that such a supposition is unauthorized by the divine word; that it involves a host of difficulties; weakens the belief in the immortality of the soul, and is opposed to the belief of Christians when left to their own spontaneous perceptions. While, on the other hand, Christ's doctrine of the continued existence of man in his spiritual body is an agreement with common perception; is fully taught by the express language of Scripture; is in perfect harmony with reason and science; and is full of consolation to the departing spirit.

—We wish to call special attention to one statement in the above extract, because it is the only truth uttered in the whole paragraph. We do not remember ever to have seen a more audacious and deliberately put reiteration of that "falsehood forged by Satan" in the Garden—"Ye shall not surely die!"—than this utterance of one who claims to be "a firm believer in the Divine inspiration of the Bible." But, as we said, he utters one truth—the doctrine of the resurrection "weakens the belief of the immortality of the soul." Amen. So it does. And let immaterialists take warning from the above whither the necessities of consistency are driving them all. Give up your immaterialism, or else deny the resurrection! Many of your eminent leaders are demanding this.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

QUITMAN, MO.

TUESDAY, Dec. 20. I have been surveying the great Western field this morning which is to be occupied by religionists of all classes. We have, as Adventists, our duties connected with these new States and Territories. The gospel of the kingdom moves westward, and the cry comes from the West, even from our stand-point in Michigan, "Come out and help us." Take the following from an excellent and noble soul who calls for help. After stating his case, and describing his field and its wants, he closes thus:

> "I don't know but I am asking too much of you, and promising too much for myself; but I am so anxious to have a religious society here where I can feel at home and have a restraint thrown around my proneness to wander from the strait way, that it seems to me the Lord would bless the effort. The people are starving for spiritual food. They are too intelligent to listen to the pulpit twaddle about their 'immortal souls,' which seems to be the principal theme of the speakers here. Let me know if you can come, and when."

To such an appeal I could not say no, although the writer says they are all poor and promise no compensation. Such appeals must be heard, and I trust that the Lord will open the hands of the stewards of his goods to aid missionaries among the poor and destitute in this far West. We receive only small sums, though depending upon what we get in our missionary labors to make up expenses and supply the wants our families at home. The last year, with few exceptions, I have not received enough to meet expenses; but I shall go as long as I have the means to do so. I do hope our Missionary work connected with the Western field will be sustained. We need funds for this special work in this wide West; the cry for help is urgent and constant. Let us not turn a deaf ear to the cry.

I spoke this evening to a large audience of truth-seekers, on the time of reward. It was received with readiness of mind. A good interest is coming up and there is an open door for preaching the word.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 21. Spoke upon the signs of this time. (Matt. 16: 1, 3.) Biblical scholars in England, it is understood, are about to translate, and publish a new version of the Bible. They now possess a larger number of the oldest manuscripts than King James' translators had. These critics say that the first three verses of Matt. 15 are not in the best and oldest MSS., but were added by some transcriber. They may not have been spoken by the Lord, but their in other parts of the Evangelists' writings, and the truth will not suffer by their omission. Let all interpolations be amended, and give us only the pure word.

From the text I showed that the present generation are now beholding the signs of the second coming of Jesus. Stated first that there were no signs of the temporal millennium, or conversion of t[illegible] world, while there were many, and a[illegible]nding signs of the Lord's very [illegible]y coming. This closed my work [illegible]. Br. Hink has a regular appoin[illegible]t here, and it is becoming an int[illegible]ing one. A new church will [illegible] be raised.

I enjoyed [illegible]pitalities of G. Porte[illegible], who [illegible]o profession of enjoying [illegible]is time, but his conc[illegible] the kind attentions [illegible]hat he had more interest in [illegible] than he professed. I trust he will soon openly profess Jesus.

MONDAY, Dec. 22. This is Forefather's day. The Pilgrims landed on the cold bleak shores of New England two hundred and fifty years ago. They were a handful of men and women; but their descendants and successors number millions, and vast portions of the continent, then a wilderness, now "blossom as the rose," so far as material improvement is concerned. But the moral and religious condition of the country is far BEHIND THE MATERIAL.

The "restitution," only, will bring the happy and holy time for which all the faithful sigh. The endless life, and immortality in the New Earth will consummate our hope. At 9 a. m., Brn. Hink and Griffith left Quitman, with me, for Maryville, in an open carriage. We rode nine miles over the cold prairie, and called on Br. Fitzsimmons, and dined with him. It was a pleasant call. Br. F. and family have long been believers, and have been good representatives of the cause. They have always taken the papers, and so are well posted in our history and faith. After dinner, we went five miles to Maryville, where I was to preach by special request in the Christian Chapel on the "signs of the times" relating to the coming of Christ.

The house was filled with the citizens of all the churches and all classes. I had the best hearing I have had beyond the Mississippi. The audience would have done credit to any city. I had freedom also, and laid before them the solid evidence from prophecy, history, and facts, "signs there's no mistaking" that "proclaim Messiah near." The little church and their pastor, were greatly cheered to have so many citizens give a candid hearing to the evidences of their faith, and look for fruit that will tell on their progress.

I find many of the leading men in most of the churches sympathize with us in the belief that the world will not be converted, and that Christ will come personally to reign. And more, many believe that man is mortal, and eternal misery is a fable; and still they are retained as members in good standing! They do not like to lose such members, heretics though they be.

FRIDAY, Dec. 23. Took leave of Br. Hink, and friends, at an early hour, and took the cars, with Brn. Dugger, Griffith and Coombs, for Savannah, Mo., on the way to the conference, at Flagg Springs. The mercury indicates about ten degrees below zero, and our exposure to the biting winds was severe. It is not usual to have such intense cold in this region.

FLAGG SPRINGS, MO.

FRIDAY, Dec. 23. I had a warm welcome by Eld. Harrison Billmire and family. He was formerly a rough skeptical man. He could not listen to a gospel that taught eternal torment. On hearing Eld. Dugger on the Advent doctrine, his heart was touched, and he gave himself up to God, and since has become an acceptable and successful laborer in this new and destitute field. He is an industrious mechanic, and supports himself, and gives liberally not only his time, but his means to support the gospel, also. The Lord raise up more such workers.

There is a church here of thirty members, and increasing all the while. They have raised means for the support of Eld. Dugger in this place and vicinity for one third of the time. The members of the church are mostly farmers, and are a reliable element of society. This is a new part of the country, consisting of timber lands and rolling prairie. The prairies produce grain in large quantities, and the farmers raise stock in abundance. But most of them are yet without much ready means, as they are fencing and improving their farms, and buildings. In this transition state they suffer many inconveniences, and the want of many comforts. But they labor in hope of better things, should time continue long. But if not their prospects connected with the heavenly land are good. Blessed hope!

I spoke this evening on what constitutes a true Christian, and his inheritance the new earth. The house was full of people that were interested to hear the gospel. Brn. Dugger, Billmire, and Blivin followed, when the service closed. It is tedious and painful to travel in this bitter cold wind and weather from place to place in open wagons and sometimes on foot. Then the houses are small, and many of them are cold, with scarcely more than one room, for their families and visiting friends. So that sometimes from eight to thirteen souls must eat drink and sleep, in one room. It is wonderful how comfortable and happy all are made. Plenty to eat and drink, with every kindness and attention to each other's wants. In most of these families I have witnessed in words and deeds, between husbands and wives and children. In some few cases it has been the reverse. It would seem that some persons could not live unless they could have the delightful enjoyment of finding fault and fretting without rhyme or reason. But it is pleasant to see those who have to endure such things bear them with kindness and patience, and so make the rough places of domestic life as smooth as possible. It would be a good thing for unhappy spirits to spend more time with Christ in secret prayer for help from God to enable them to attain peaceful and happy dispositions. We have enough to endure without having our cup embittered by those who profess to be the heirs of divine grace. Let us love one another and make the difficult passage from this to the next life as pleasant as possible.

SATURDAY, Dec. 24. Met the brethren in Quarterly Conference, at the Reed School house. The ministers and churches are happily united in their organization and determined to carry on their work with vigor.

I here met with Br. John Nicholsom who has just been burnt out. He saved most of his furniture and clothes. He was aroused at 3 a. m. by the smoke and flames, and in a short time his home was in ashes. He is calm and resigned, as a Christian should be. I dined with Br. Fitzsimmods last week in Nodaway Co., at his new house, just built after the burning of his former dwelling last year, with all he had in it. And although the results of years of toil were swept away, I found the same resignation to the providence of God. Like Job, these brethren could say, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, and blessed be the name of the Lord."

I enjoyed a pleasant call upon Br. Reed, son-in-law of Br. Griffith. Br. G. had spoken to me of his anxiety for the conversion of these children on his way home. On his arrival the first news he heard was of the baptism of Br. Reed and his wife. The Lord does hear the prayers of parents who lay their children upon the altar. Let us not be discouraged.

FAREWELL.

About a hundred or so of our subscribers who are considerably in arrears, and who have failed to make any response to our bills must be "cut off" from our list. We say, kindly, farewell. We have sought to do you good. We shall not sue you at the law for what you owe, but trust you will pay us at your earliest convenience.

ELD S. W. THURBER.

We learn that Br. Thurber is still in Wisconsin. He is ready to serve our churches in the West in protracted meetings so far as he may be able. We trust he may be called out and given a good support (don't forget his temporal necessities), and we earnestly desire that he may settle in the West. His post-office address is Omro, Wis.

PAUL'S "DESIRE."

We shall next week give Br. Davidson's defence of his position on Phil. 1: 21-23, and his reply to his critics who have spoken through the Advent Herald. That journal declines to allow him to defend himself in its columns. We not only think he has a right to defend himself before the public, but, also, that his article, though somewhat lengthy, will be read with the deepest interest.

TO THE MINISTRY.

It will not be much trouble for you to just state to your congregations that they can have THE TIMES on trial, post-paid, for THREE MONTHS, for only 35c. Many who are partially interested would subscribe for this term, who are not prepared to subscribe for a year.

Try it, it will help us, and it will help you. Let us introduce the ADVENT TIMES all over the land, and by it stir the people up to the fact that these are the times of the Advent. Let us labor together in this matter.

DEAR READER: What are you going to do about our liberal offers of the TIMES and Quarterly. Will you show them to your neighbors and friends and tell them how cheaply they can get good reading matter. Will you point out to them the fact that for 35c. they can have a paper THREE MONTHS, on trial? Will you send it yourself, to one, three, five, ten or more persons for that time on trial? Let us all wake up, and begin to work more as though we were in earnest.

INFIDEL QUESTIONS.

I have selected the following questions from a four-paged Infidel work that is in circulation in this city. Would like to have you, or some one of the readers of THE TIMES answer them. G. E. M.

Worcester, Mass.

1. How could Pharaoh's magicians turn water into blood, since Moses had already done the same thing to all the waters?

There are no doubt, honest skeptics, but we cannot number amongst them the compilers of several infidel tracts, lately brought to our attention. The spirit of sophistry and quibbling disposition to evade a consideration of all the facts in the case which they exhibit, destroys our charity for them. We must set them down as deceivers. When an event involving much territory and many people is related in a single sentence, it is clear that not many particulars can be given, and some general statements must be made. Hence while the record says a command was issued to turn all the water of Egypt to blood, it does not follow that this was to happen simultaneously, on the very same moment, to all the water-courses and reservoirs. The river was smitten first; and, though nothing is said about it, it is not unreasonable to suppose that the other waters were turned to blood afterwards. Also, the statement that the Egyptians "digged round about the river for water to drink," implies that they procured water in this way, though it was not as desirable as the even yet famous Nile water.

Hence we may suppose the magicians practiced their arts before all the waters were changed, or on water obtained by digging.

2. In Luke 2: 1, 15, it says Joseph and Mary went up to Bethlehem to be taxed, when Mary was great with the child Jesus; and that this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria. How can this be true, since it is a well known fact, that no such tax ever took place in the Roman empire, and Cyrenius was not governor of Syria until ten years after the birth of Christ?

Most translations and versions [illegible] ered or enrolled instead of [illegible] while it may be true that history does not speak of a world-wide tax, it is true that it mentions that several times a census was taken, and the world (Roman) enrolled. It is certain that such enrollments took place A. U. C. 726, 740, and 767, and there may have been others.

2. The world here sometimes includes the inhabited earth, sometimes the Roman world, sometimes a particular land or country.

3. Zumpt, Mommsen, and Bergman, have shown from monuments and other testimony, that it is not only possible, but very probable that Cyrenius was twice governor of Syria, first, about the time of Christ's birth, and second about ten years afterward. This, in connection with the fact that Luke's historical accuracy in the Acts and the remainder of this Gospel is proved by many testimonies, leaves us no room to doubt that the difficulty here urged is only apparent and not real.

There are other interesting facts and explanations bearing upon this supposed contradiction of facts, for which we have not room at this time.

3. In John 3: 18, Christ says: "No man hath ascended up to heaven." What does this mean? Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven." (2 Kings 2: 11.)

It means just what it says: he was taken up from earth. But it does not follow that he passed to the heaven that Christ spoke of—the place of God's immediate presence. Anciently, as now, there were in common language, three heavens: the atmospheric heavens; the starry heavens, and the place of God's immediate presence. When Elijah was taken up from earth, translated, he no doubt was conveyed some place; but not to that place of which Jesus speaks in John 3:

4. Astronomy teaches that the sun's light causes day, and its absence night. And the Bible clearly teaches that there were three days and three nights before the sun had an existence, it not being created until the fourth day. (Gen. 1: 11, 16.)

5. Science teaches that the sun's rays are necessary for the growth of vegetation. How can this be made to agree with the statement in Genesis that "the earth brought forth grass, and herbs yielding seed after his kind, and the tree yielding fruit," before the sun, moon and stars were created? (Gen. 1: 12.

We put the two objections together for convenience. It is light that causes vegetation to flourish: the direct rays of the sun are not necessary. We will not here enter into a discussion of the days of Genesis; but it is evident that the appearance of the sun, moon and stars did not regulate or indicate the succession of day and night until "the fourth day." Previous to "the fourth day" the earth's atmosphere was undoubtedly heavy or foggy, well calculated to support vegetation, but through which the sun, planets and stars did not appear. The expression "made" is not "created" as in v. 1, but refers to forming out of already existing materials. Hence we understand that the fourth day's work was the introduction of the lights of heaven to earth, by a clearing of its atmosphere, perhaps by their influence; and it may be, also, that great changes came about in their constitution conducing to the same end. We have here in a few verses a general summary of most magnificent events, which necessarily leaves room for the sophist and quibler to interpose objections. The Bible often uses the term day without any reference to the sun's apparent revolution, sometimes including a short space of time, sometimes many years, and sometimes eternity. There was probably a succession of light and darkness, day and night, before the sun, moon and stars were appointed to mark that change, as also the succession of seasons, months and years.

6. Physiology teaches that a father must be older than his son; but the Bible gives an account of a son that was two years older than his father. Ahaziah, it says, was forty-two years when Jehovah his father was only forty years of age. (2 Chron. 21: 5 and 20, and 22: 1, 2.)

Not long since one of our contemporaries came to us dated on its first page a month in advance of the true time. We might have imagined that the publishers did not know any better, and really supposed they were in the next month. But when we came to examine the date in other portions of the same paper, we found the correct date given. Now this proved that the date given on the first page was simply an oversight of the printer, a typographical error. In reading any book, if a writer varies in his statements of figures or dates, we naturally allow, especially if it involves him in an absurdity, that the apparent contradiction is merely a typographical error.

Now 2 Kings 8: 26 says that Ahaziah was twenty-two years old. The Syriac and Arabic versions of Chronicles read twenty. Some copies of the Septuagint read the same. The Hebrews expressed figures by letters, and the letters mem (forty) and caph (twenty) closely resemble each other. How much more natural, then, to suppose that some copyist made an error in transcribing, than to quibble over the supposition that a writer would intentionally declare a son to be two years older than his father. Surely infidelity must be sorely pushed when it must lean upon such support.

Nature and Object of the Second Advent.

(Concluded.)

Standing on this foundation for prophetic interpretation, we can safely apply other prophecies concerning the second advent, keeping before us the fact that probation ends at this time, and is followed by the judgment or the distribution of rewards to the two classes of mankind.

According to Daniel (Dan. 12: 1.) when Michael the great prince shall stand up, there is to be a time of trouble upon the wicked from which the people of God are to be delivered, even every one that shall be found written in the book. The resurrection is also connected with this scene, some awaking to everlasting life, others to everlasting shame and contempt. In a previous vision (Dan. 7: 21.) Daniel had seen the great anti-Christian power that was to prevail against and make war with the saints until the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom. Synchronizing with Daniel's statement, we find the record of the last events of the sixth seal, now open, and the closing scenes of time under the seventh trumpet, which must speedily come. Then the third and last wo is experienced: and while the men of earth are crying that the great day of God's wrath is come, the Gentile kingdoms are passed over to him whose right it is to reign." It is time of the dead that they should be judged, the epoch for rewarding all—the prophets, the saints and them that fear God, small and great, and also of those that corrupt the earth, who are then and there destroyed.

The foregoing scriptures are like a survey stake which has been driven at the right point, and if in our location of events which we may conclude are yet future we find it necessary to which the Master has established, so as to make more room, or to qualify, or modify his declarations so as to admit of our position, will it not be wisdom to conclude that such a position is a mistaken one? that Jesus must be true, though it proves every man a liar?

Those who claim the world's conversion find it necessary to remove the tares from the field, to convert all the tribes of earth before Christ returns; and thus when the Son of man appears in the clouds; instead of mourning they would rejoice. Instead of the wicked doing wickedly and remaining ignorant of God's word, and Christ coming on them as a theif, they will become wise, and will, therefore, understand his word and be ready to welcome him. The scoffers who were to come asking—"Where is the promise of his coming?" are also to be converted, and thus would be waiting for Jesus to return as the millenium closed.

If the Jews are to be restored, according to any of the many theories of such a restoration that are presented in this day, this restoration must take place before all nations, the Jew not excepted, are gathered before the King of glory and seperated into two classes, when every man, the Jew not excepted, will be rewarded according to his work.

If the Man of Sin is yet to appear and persecute and wage war against the followers of Christ, he must do this work previous to the time that Jesus appears and destroys him with the brightness of his coming.

We understand, then, that when the seventh trumpet sounds, the lease of this world to the powers that be will expire and that Jesus will then break them with a

and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel (Ps. 2: 9), having first separated from them the Bride who is made ready for the marriage supper of the Lamb. (Dan. 2: 34, 35.) The stone will smite the prophetic image on the feet, accomplishing its utter destruction, and then become a great mountain and fill the entire earth. There shall be no more curse. Satan's head is crushed, and that lake of fire which is the second death will have engulfed all that pertains to mortality, corruption, and sin. For previous to the new earth state, the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up. After this we according to his promise look for renewed heavens and earth, wherein the righteous shall dwell. (2 Pet. 3.) "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever: when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it." (Ps. 37: 34.)

It may be queried—"Is all this work to be accomplished in a moment of time? Are the objects of Christ's second coming to be effected instantaneously? It might be answered, that he who in the beginning, said "Let there be light, and there was light," could as easily perform this work in a moment as in a thousand years, if he had so declared: but I do not understand this to be his purpose. Time will doubtless be necessary to perform the work of restitution; but the actual length of the process is nowhere recorded.

In conclusion, the objects of Christ's second coming may be summed up under the following general heads: (1) The resurrection of the dead, both the just and the unjust. (2) The judgment, at which the eternal destiny of the human family is manifested. (3) The rewarding of the righteous with the gift of God, eternal life; and the payment to the sinner of his wages, which is hopeless death. (4) The purification of the earth by fire.

Beloved, seeing ye look for such things, be diligent, that you may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless.
EDWIN T. HIMES.

Don't Croak.

No, no, friend reader, whatever weak and unmanly things you do, don't croak. Its a bad habit, a useless habit, a pernicious habit, and, in a period like the present, positively sinful. If times are hard, croaking won't better them. If business is dull, work the harder, and smile the more. Your neighbors will thank you for it, your wife will thank you for it, and your children will thank you for it. It is impossible to ruin a man who works hard, is always cheerful and won't believe himself ruined. If a man imagines every straw that lies in his way an impassible barrier, or, when his path becomes really difficult, sits down on the nearest curbstone, and goes to blubbering over his "bad luck," instead of exerting himself bravely, and cheerfully to surmount the obstacle and change the "luck," he cannot of course expect to succeed, Such a man not only fails himself, but discourages his neighbors, and helps to pull them down. Croaking is as contagious as the measles, and twice as destructive to manly vigor and health. No man has any more right to introduce the one malady than the other. Society instinctively shuns a sour face, and always feels kindly towards a pleasant one, and society is right. Cave Canem—Beware of the Croaker.—Sel.

NATURE teaches us that the mind of man is dependent not only upon the formation of his brain and nervous system, but its vigor is dependent upon his physical health and condition; his mentality increases until he reaches his prime, and then declines as he grows old, with age, and his physical powers become feeble. Again, if this be true, with the death of the physical organism the mind would perish. Nature here supports and coincides with the Bible. Another proof is found in the following: An officer of the British Navy, at the Battle of Trafalgar, was bringing his ship into line of battle, when a ball from the enemy's cannon struck the bulwarks of his ship, and a splinter struck the officer on the head, produced a concussion upon his brain and he fell unconscious upon the deck, and so remained for two years; when his ship returned to England, the surgeons of the marine hospital trepanned him, and removed the fractured portion of his skull, and relieved the brain from pressure, and the first words that he uttered was "Fire," the order that he was in the act of issuing to his gunners at the time of his injury; showing that his mind had been at complete rest all that time. He could not realize that he had ever had a single thought during those two years.

Now, if an injury could thus suspend the action of his mentality, would not the destruction of his brain have destoyed his mind as completely as it would have destroyed his physical organism? —Cor. Memphis (Mo.) Conservative.

In a review of Mr. A. R. Wallace's recent works on the "Theory of Natural Selection," the Nation says: "It is not a little singular that within a year two of the greatest thinkers of the day, who have gone furthest on the road which is generally believed to lead inevitably to atheism, have in all earnestness, and in the true scientific spirit, declared that their studies have given them the abiding conviction that there is beyond this range of physical events an intellectual guiding force. Our author believes that all force is 'will-force,' —the will of a Supreme Intelligent; and Julius Robert Meyer, who carried the idea of a correlation of forces to that point where the short-sighted believed he had left nothing but machinery in the universe, has declared that beyond all these phenomena must lie the Infinite Mind, and that his work, so far from sapping, has only strengthened the foundations of religion."

The greatest curse to ordinary Christians would be to relieve them at once of all earthly cares.

There are two reasons why some people don't mind their own business. One is that they haven't any business, and the second that they have no mind.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

One of the few Adventists in Virginia has recently died—Br. S Stickley We trust others will be raised up to more than fill his place, and aid Br. Mowrey. ——A Baptist minister in Arkansas who has seen a copy of THE TIMES, writes for it. He says, "I am 70 years old, every day looking for the parousia of Jesus. I preach that doctrine to three churches, though other preachers around me deny it. They quote such men as Andrew Fuller, on the Millennium, and think they are strongly fortified. I shall want a few tracts and specimens of your paper." We send them to you, Br. Prine, and rejoice that you prefer the Bible teaching above all authority for faith. ——We learn that Brn. Geo. Thomson and Graves have held a successful series of meetings in Fisher Valley, Wis. Some 19 have enlisted in the cause of Christ. A church is to be organized.——Br. Adrian [illegible] closed a protracted meeting at Cross Plains, Wis. Three were baptised, and some led to adopt our views.——We think our "Correspondence" page furnishes a rich feast in this paper, as it has for several weeks past; and we have more good "letters and extracts" for next week.——Good news comes to us from Portland, Me. The work of God has been revived, backsliders have returned, husbands, wives, children, the old and the young, have been brought to Christ, in a saving knowledge and belief of the truth. The good work goes on. Br. York, the pastor, baptised twenty at one time—a blessed sight.——God does not forget the little churches. Br. Chase writes that the little band at Cainville was greatly refreshed by a recent visit from Br. George Howard. Glad to hear he is in the field. We need all the laborers.——Br Wm. Branch is laboring in Eastern Michigan.——We hear that Eld. G. M. Lyon is once more roused from his lair by our preachers in Eastern Michigan. He backed out of one discussion, but now declares the Adventists must be put down. At Davisville he called us "Infidels, Deists, Atheists, Simple-minded people, (!) Wolves in sheep's clothing," false prophets, said we had the mark of the beast, were deceivers, and children of the devil; and before another audience, in another neighborhood, denounced us as "Hellhounds of damnation!" Br. Wright replied in a very different strain, and, we doubt not, the people could appreciate the difference in the two styles of preaching.——Br. Preston baptised four at Windfall, Ind., a few days since, two of whom subscribed for THE TIMES last summer, at his former visit, that they might learn more of "this way," called (though it is not) heresy. ——Br. C. Hosmer and Br. Slater, formerly a Catholic, and one sister, were baptised a few Sundays since in the Genesee River, Rochester, by Br. McCulloch Br. Hosmer can hardly find words to express his delight in finding the truth, and enjoyment in the society of a people looking for the Lord. Papers, tracts, and personal conversation were the means of his conversion.——At latest accounts Br Geo Storrs' health was slowly improving, under the care of a hygienic, or "water cure" physician

THE

ADVENT CHRISTIAN

TIMES,

A large, neat, eight-page weekly paper, thoroughly devoted to the advancement of the cause of Christ by the faithful advocacy, defence and dissemination of what is called Advent doctrine.

EDITED BY

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

THE TIMES contains, weekly, matter expository, exegetical, illustrative, practical; including communications, selections and original matter, with letters from those of like precious faith in all parts of the country, the news of the body, and a faithful digest of the news of the world bearing upon the signs of the times; with news of the progress of our cause in different parts, and also news of what our opponents are saying and doing, with expositions and refutations of their arguments; articles on prophecy; notices of current and useful literature; short sermons; a column or more for the children; choice bits of poetry—in short matter enough in every number to make a good sized book, and all furnished for only FOUR CENTS A WEEK, or $2 a year. No paper of its class furnishes so much reading matter, even when a greater price is charged.

The paper has been very useful in the past, and can be made more so by extending its circulation. To our friends who are working faithfully for this end, we make the following offer: We will send

THE TIMES, POST-PAID,

to any address in the United States or Canada, on trial

FOR THREE MONTHS,

for 35c. For one dollar, we will send THE TIMES to any three persons, three months, post-paid; and any larger number at the same rate.

Who will take advantage of this liberal offer, to introduce THE TIMES in a village, neighborhood, a church For

TEN DOLLARS

you can send a live Advent paper to

THIRTY PERSONS,

or into thirty families, post-paid, for three months. Could it fail to do good? Five dollars will pay for fifteen copies; and one dollar for three.

We make this liberal offer solely to introduce the paper in new fields and localities.

Will the ministry please publish it to their congregations?

Will our friends please tell it to their friends.

Will you who love the cause and wish THE TIMES to prosper, pay for 3, 5, 10, 50, or 100 copies, on these liberal terms We have now 300 names, of partially interested persons, among whom we could obtain

FORTY PERMANENT SUBSCRIBERS,

perhaps more, could we send them the paper free for three months.

Who will send at once? Send in the names, with 11⅔ cents for each name, and (if you give the P. O. address plainly) we will guarantee the delivery of thirteen numbers of THE TIMES, free of postage, to each one of them.

Three thousand three months subscribers on this plan, will give us a large and permanent addition to our list.

Correspondence.

From Josiah Bowerman, Harrison Co., Iowa.

I am your brother in the faith of the speedy coming of Jesus, in power and great glory. Behold he comes quickly, and his reward is with him, to give to every one as his work shall be. I pray God to give us grace to hold out and be faithful to the end. Neither hight nor depth, things present or things to come, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is Christ Jesus, our Lord. At the time appointed the end shall be. Jesus will soon introduce the new earth state, where all will be joy and peace without end.

From T. W. Richardt, Eau Claire Co., Wis.

As a church we are still a happy praying band, patiently waiting for Christ. He is precious to us now in these dark and troublesome times, and while we see the professed followers of Jesus (many of them) clinging to the vanities of this sinful age, we are trying to be diligent that we may be found of him in peace. Br. Turner is now laboring here and in the surrounding country, and is encouraging saints and warning sinners. I am much impressed with the responsibilities that rest upon us as a people to proclaim the common salvation to all, that they may be saved without money and without price. I feel a settled conviction that time is short and that it is necessary we should heed our Savior's oft-repeated command, Watch! at the present time. We are most assuredly in the perils of the last days, the "quickly" time, the hurrying to and fro. We are living in a grand and awful time. We see the Man of Sin stripped of his power and awaiting his doom. We see the Mohammedan power trembling on the brink of destruction. We see the perplexity of the nations, and the still further preparations for war. We see signs in the heavens, and men's hearts failing them for fear. In our intercourse with mankind we see and hear forebodings of coming changes, and the world is at a loss what to expect, but try to flatter themselves that there are better days coming. We hear ministers preaching peace and safety, we see wickedness around us on every hand, in short, commotions everywhere, under the earth, on the earth, and in the heavens.

But we have trusted in Jesus, we believe him, we know he is true, we have a witness within us, and we learn from that Blessed Word. We there see the world pictured in prophecy, and read the particulars of our Savior's birth, sufferings and death, and see every iota fulfilled in the exact time and manner. And by it we may know just where we are. Now is the time to read, to pray for wisdom, to ask for assistance to believe more fully, to wrestle in prayer, to launch out from the world wholly, at any sacrifice, and show our faith in Jesus and his word as Abraham did when he wandered a pilgrim and stranger on the earth. Brethren, let us watch, let us exhort one another to love and good works, let the strong bear with the infirmities of the weak, let us love one another with a pure heart fervently. Jesus is soon coming, our warfare will be ended, our trials and toils will cease forever. There will be a happy meeting by and by.

From Samuel Ayres, Worcester, Mass.

We had our usual quarterly meeting of the church last eve. for the choice of officers for the coming year, and other business. All passed off well, and we gave an unanimous vote to invite Br. S. G. Mathewson to be our preacher for the coming year, or after April first. We very much need some good judicious man amongst us. I pray the Lord to send us one after his own heart. We think we could not all unite on any other one, as on the one signified by the vote of the church.

There seems to be a waking up among us to love and care more for the young. I fear one reason why our children care so little about our meetings is our lack of a pastor in our midst, to look after them, as well as their parents. Children like good order in church, whether they like to submit at home or not. I have noticed that when a church is all the time engaged in the deep things of God, searching prophecies and mysteries, the children soon lose their interest, and want to go to other churches, and are very willing to attend their Sunday schools, because of the particular interest taken to make the school pleasant for them. I am happy to say, however, that we have a very good Sunday school, and on the increase in both numbers and interest, under the faithful charge of Br. J. Giddings. But this may be even yet improved. May God hasten the time.

From John R. Turner, Madison Co., Mo.

Thanks to you and Br. Rosebraugh of Ark., for the light on the Scriptures that I now have. I have been a member of the M. E. Church South since 1851, and always thought that the soul was immortal, and the wicked would suffer alway in a lake of fire; but your views have given me light and satisfaction. Where it was dark and mysterious before, I now have light. If ever you come to this part of the world inquire for me, for I would be glad to see you, or any of the brethren of the same faith.

From Y. Higgins, St. Catherine, Mo

I have just returned from a tour in which I was accompanied by Br. J. C. Malloy, who is a faithful minister of the word, and feels toward his Baptist brethren as Br. Collins does toward the Methodists, and desires them to give him an opportunity to present a reason for his hope before them in public. But this they will not do. They prefer to keep away, and impeach the truth at times and places where and when there is no one present to defend it. Their theology will not bear weighing in the balance of truth, for it would be found wanting.

We have kindly invited all persons who think we are in error in preaching the speedy coming of the Lord to give eternal life to all his children, and to destroy those that corrupt the earth, to take the word of God and show us where we are wrong, and we will be glad of sound instruction. I have had to contend earnestly for the faith since I came to this State, but only twice in public discussion. The first was with a Universalist. The question was—"Do reason and revelation teach that man has by creation an immortal soul?" The doctor affirmed, and agreed to continue the discussion one week. After running out of reason, scripture, ghosts and spirit-rappings, on the third day he left, with a plea that he must attend a court. Thus God's truth triumphed.

The second discussion was with a Baptist minister, also on the immortality question, including the intermediate state and doom of the wicked. He affirmed the generally received views on all these points, and agreed to continue the debate as long as the parties should mutually agree. He used up all his Baptist arguments the first day. The second he applied to Alex. Campbell (though he had been a vigorous opposer of Campbellism); but this did not help him. On the morning of the third day, he notified us that he could continue the discussion no longer, on account of sickness. But the next day he went to a log rolling, thus giving evidence that it was "the inner man," or ghost, that was sick, and unable to stand before God's eternal truth.

These discussions had a salutary effect, and many were led to search the Scriptures.

I have corresponded with the boasting W. R. Davenport, whose letter you gave in THE TIMES. Up to this time I have not succeeded in getting a favorable answer, although I have even offered to come to his place and accommodate him with a discussion, if he and his friends would reasonably compensate me for my time spent and expenses. Notwithstanding his boasting that he could meet any man in the State, he does not want me to come to his place. Perhaps he has whipped himself out by reading God's Word. He might easily do that.

I have organized four Advent Christian churches the past year. We hope to organize a State Conference next spring.

From Thomas W. Jay, La Crosse Co., Wis.

I am one of the few in this place who are looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Our little band was organized by Eld. Hough, two years ago last February. Since then we have been visited by the zealots of the law, who told us we must keep the Seventh-day, or be lost. But, with few exceptions, we resolved to "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and not to be entangled in the yoke of bondage." I thank God for his blessed Bible, and for the light now shining in the fulfillment of prophecy. Truly the nations are angry; and the time will soon come for the dead to be judged. May the Lord help us to live in that way that we may receive a crown of life that fadeth not away, and have our home, with all God's people in the earth made new.

From G. Y. Bryant, Wayne Co., Iowa.

I am glad that I ever got hold of a copy of THE TIMES. I had one given to me last spring. It set me to reading. It did not teach the doctrine I was used to. I went fifteen miles to hear Br. McCullock, and hearing him was convinced at once that I was wrong. I then signed for THE TIMES, and like it very well. I read it, and then lend it to my neighbors.

I have been preaching the doctrine in my weak way, but now feel more encouraged, since Br. Gibson's visit. My wife, self and four others united with the church. Br. Gibson said he would come back. If he does, there will be others to join. People are getting their eyes open, and they begin to look for the truth. I am tired of orthodox preaching. I will tell you how it looks to me. It is like a pile of chain links. It looks like a chain; but when you undertake to pick it up, it ain't a chain at all. Just so with their preaching. Examined in the light of the Bible, it falls to pieces.

From E. C. Dening, Cleveland, O.

Another year will soon be numbered with those that are past, and we are still pilgrims here, seeking a better home, where sorrow and tears are unknown, and the inhabitants will not say they are sick. I have been a firm believer in the second advent of our Lord and Savior for almost thirty years. Twenty-five years ago the Advent people were numerous here in Cleveland. Alas where are they now? I know but one brother and family, and they have adopted the reimmersion theory, and they want me to be rebaptised, but I have not so learned Christ. It is the Spirit of Christ I want to give me a part in the first resurrection.

Christ is the first resurrection, and we must have the Spirit of Christ or we are none of his. That Spirit will give us part in the first resurrection, and we will live and reign with Christ a thousand years. Thank God, Satan will be bound and shut up in prison. He cannot then afflict or deceive God's people. When the thousand years are expired, then he is loosed for a little season, and he is ready for another battle. So he goes out to gather his hosts and brings them up on the breadth of the earth. Who are they? I think they are those that fight against Christ when he comes; for we read in Jer. 25, "The slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other." I think they are the second resurection, and have their part in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. Then the earth will have cast out her dead, and will no more cover her slain. Then we will have the new earth with all its Eden beauty, and the glory of God will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

Oh! I pray God to keep us all in the unity of the Spirit, in the bond of peace, that we may have a part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power. The Spirit of Christ makes our afflictions light. Sorrow may endure for a night, but joy and gladness come in the morning. I hope then to meet all my brothers and sisters in Christ, that I have never seen, yet love them with an everlasting love.

From W. C. Hicks, Marlett, Mich.

I was surprised on reading, in THE TIMES, Br. Wright's letter concerning my case, but, bless the Lord, I hope he has done more than that for me. I trust he has written my name in the Lamb's Book of Life. I feel the Lord is no respecter of persons, and I know my dear Savior died that through him I, even I might live. Brn. Wright and Durand have done a great deal of good here, though they had to work against a good deal of opposition. But the truth will prevail; and I bless the Lord that he in his all-wise providence directed their footsteps to this quarter of his vine-yard. And I know others feel thankful besides me; and as we go on our way rejoicing we are willing to work to propagate the glad tidings of the personal coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to reign on this earth. On last Wednesday evening, after prayer meeting, we resolved ourselves into a Mission Society, and proceeded to raise a tract fund; and if the Lord tarries yet a little while, we hope with his blessing to be able to do much good here yet. Pray for me, brethren, that I may remain steadfast to the end, and with you enter abundantly into the everlasting kingdom prepared for all those that love and fear the Lord.

From Z. B. Cases, Franklin, Maine.

I left home Nov. 28, and walked (for I have no other way to go) some ten miles, and preached in the evening to a good audience at Gouldsboro. This is a pleasant place on the eastern coast of Maine. The truth had a good effect on the minds of the people. Many wanted to hear more; but ours is a flying message, and I had to go on. Next day walked six miles to Winter Harbor. Preached in the evening at the Masonic Hall. Consented to stop and speak the next evening. Subject: "What is man?" Oh! how God's truth shines out beside error. We felt God present by his Holy Spirit. The people here have no preaching except occasionally the fable of man's immortality, of which some have become sick. I labored to present God's truth, and believe I shall see a glorious result.

Dec. 1. To-day we entered upon the last month of the year. How our time flies. Jesus will soon come, yes, very soon. I walked three miles today through snow and slosh to B. Harbor, and preached the word (as Paul gave the charge to Timothy) to a full house. This is a hard place. Tom Payne has some converts here. I visited one poor old sick man, over eighty years of age. He is a lost man. Nothing but the power of God can save him. O wretched man! No God, no hope. I have never in all my life found so hard a case, one who was so calm in all his conversation. He would talk all day, and his strongest argument was, no future for the human race.

Dec. 3, I walked three miles to Prospect Harbor. Found a good home at Br. Bickford's. Here we had a heavenly time. Six spoke in favor of God's truth, and one found Jesus.

Lord's day, Dec. 4, had a good time in the Lord at West Goldsboro. This is a hard place. The people seem to think they are good enough, and have no need of Christ. The devil is seeking whom he may devour, knowing his time is short. Here we found a nice hall, and some were anxious to hear the joyful tidings of salvation. Trust some prejudice gave way. Some were anxious to hear more,

Dec. 6, find myself sick with a bad cold and unfit for public service; but God has been with me when all others seemed to forsake. Praise his holy name. He has promised never to leave nor forsake us. Let us trust him and go forward in his name, that we may be the feeble instruments in his hand of saving some, at least, in the day of rejoicing.

From M. E. Hawley, Fillmore Co., Minn.

I have been a Methodist for fifteen years, and have followed my blessed Redeemer in that time. But last year I got to be an Adventist. There are only two of us here—myself and Br. Organ. He was a class-leader for about twenty years. But about two years since he got to reading THE TIMES, and now he loves the Advent doctrine. He lent me THE TIMES to read, and as a result I am an Adventist, too. We are despised by all. When Br. Organ got to believe the doctrine, he spoke of it in class, and then they put him out, and put another man in his place. He then tried to preach to them, but they would not listen to hear him. We have a preacher here who teaches eternal hell-fire, and that the world will soon all be converted to Christ. But I cannot believe it, for Christ himself said the wheat and tares should grow together until the harvest, and the harvest is the end of the world, when the blessed Savior comes again.

Five years ago I buried four lovely children. When they died, I thought they went right to heaven. Oh, how blind I was! My dear children are not in heaven, but asleep in Jesus. At the morning of the resurrection, when Jesus comes, and I think it will be soon, then I shall see them.

Conference Secretaries will please make their reports as interesting as possible. This can be done by making them condensed and pointed, and by omitting all statements of mere forms

Report of the New York Adv. Chris. Conference, Dec. 1st to 4th, 1870.

The second quarterly meeting of this conference, for the year, was held with the A. C. Church in Honeoye, N. Y. The central and western portions of the State were well represented, and one of the best meetings enjoyed ever attended by the writer. In the absence of others, the opening discourse on Thursday evening was given by that worthy veteran in the cause, Vice President Cogswell, whose ever-readiness to stand in the gaps, speaks a Christian desire to "guide the ship aright."

Friday, A. M. The first business meeting was called to order by the Vice President, and Br. Warren Hobbs chosen Secretary pro tem. The subject of the Tent enterprise was discussed at some length. The following committee were appointed to prepare resolutions: B. C. Simonds, A. C. Newell, and W. J. Hobbs. Failing to make such connections as were expected, the President, Secretary, and others, arrived only in time for the p. m. meeting, when we listened to an earnest discourse from Br. W. E. White, of the Chris. Conf. Text Dan. 12:4. After which a business meeting was held, the President in the chair. S. H. Withington, O. B. Brown, and W. E. Brown were appointed a Devotional Committee.

The regular order was suspended, and the subject of circuit preaching made the special order of the hour, occupying the time to adjournment. At six came together for prayer and social meeting. Quite a large number of brethren and sisters zealous for the coming of Jesus were present, and we have seldom enjoyed so rich a feast; glorious seemed not too expressive an adjective for the occasion—our joy was full. While there was no undue excitement in prayer, song, or exhortation, there was such a calm and holy trust in God manifested; such an abiding purpose to serve him; such a willingness to testify of his goodness; such a love for Jesus and his coming, and for one another,—oh! it caused apostolic hearts to "burn within;" whose words (and they are "written") are.

"Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world."

Preaching services throughout the session were preceded by meetings of this character; all excellent, and perhaps as highly interesting and profitable to others, as this first to the Secretary; but space cannot be taken to report further. We only wish the world en masse could have beheld our joy. After this meeting Br. W. A. Fenn preached from the words of the angels: "Come see the place where the Lord lay."

Saturday, a. m. Business meeting opened at nine. Prayer by Br. M. R. Miles. Song—"In expectation sweet."

REPORTS.

Delegates (and Mission Fund): A. Wiley, Springwater $10; P. M. Grinnell, East Shelby, $5; O. B. Brown, Honeove Flats $8.10; B F. Brownell, Brockport $5; E. A. Rowe Darien $6; A. Gates, Fremont $2.66; R. C, Brown, South Buttler $4.75; Dansville, $4.55; Lockport $12; Isolated Brethren: S. Gove, Fairport $3; —Thayer, Castile; E. Kingsworth, Marion. Preachers: B. P. Stevens, W. T. Fenn, D. Cogswell, C. P. Greenman, M. R. Miles, W. J. Hobbs, and A. C. Newell J. H. Whitmore Brn. L'Allen, H.H. Brown W. Vreeland, W Ingmire, W. E. White, and E. Barron, were present, but there was not time for more reports.

VISITING COMMITTEE.

The following resolutions passed unanimously: Resolved, (1) That a committee of three be appointed to visit all A. C. churches and societies in the State for the purpose of perfecting plans, if possible, for circuit preaching. (2) that the committee (viz., M. R. Miles W. A. Fenn and J. H. Whitmore), be instructed to advertise their visits, and report their success at the next quarterly meeting. (3) That the expenses not met by the churches visited, voluntarily, if presented to treasurer next session, shall be paid from the conference treasury. (4) That the Board of Trustees be authorized and requested to sell the old "mission tent" before the next quarterly meeting. (5.) That the above visiting committee be instructed to see to the appointment of an efficient person in each place visited to solicit and hold funds for the purchase of a new State Mission Tent (to be put into the field early the coming season, if the time permit), said funds to be sent by delegate or otherwise to conference at the next session. Adjourned till afternoon services.

2 p. m. Prayer by Br. Warren Vreeland. Song:

"'Tis the very same Jesus."

Sermon by Br. A. C. Newell, from 1 Cor. 15: 12-15. Br. N. had a good audience, and we a good discourse; after which in business session several invitations for conferences were urged, and thus decided: Next quarterly meeting to be held with the A. C. church in Rockport, Br. J. H. Whitmore being requested to make the opening address; the next annual meeting assigned to East Shelby, Orleans Co., early in June.

Treasurer's Report: [This not having been passed to the Secretary's table at the time, was forgotten, and is given from memory.] Paid D. Cogswell for tracts for mission tent, $14. Paid B. P. Stevens for tracts for "The Lord's Tent," $20. On hand, $30. Received to-day from delegates, $61.06. Total, $91.06.

Evening. After a spirited social meeting, a large and attentive audience listened to Br. J. H. Whitmore, discoursing from Luke 23: 42-43, and taking a glance in closing at the perplexed condition of the nations.

Sunday, a. m. At nine o'clock enjoyed a very excellent season at love-feast. Prayer by Br. Hobbs; sermon by Br. Fenn, from 1 John 5: 9-11. Br. Warren Freeland was then formally introduced and recommended for ordination, which ceremony was proceeded with in the usual manner. Prayer by Br. Cogswell; Charge by Br. Fenn; Right hand of Fellowship by Br Whitmore.

2 p. m. After prayer by Br. C. P Greenman, Br. B. P. Stevens gave a timely discourse upon this interesting symbolic prophecy: "The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of THE bottomless pit, and go into perdition." [But for burdening the report, the Secretary would like to note, in order, the points made. And yet another consideration, that all would not endorse the inevitable results of the "summing up;" a proper deference to their feelings makes it a pleasure even to forego a pleasure. He ventures a prayer, however, for the "Spirit" and for "truth"—O Lord, give them us.]

Evening. At an early hour another large congregation assembled and enjoyed the hour which was well filled up with earnest prayers, stirring exhortations, cheering songs, and simple, loving testimonies for Jesus. It is hardly possible but that many left that hall firmly resolved to be better men and women; more consecrated to God; better scholars in his school; more conversant with his word; more godly, watchful, prayerful, patient; more worthy of Jesus' "well done." Then after prayer by Br. Wm. Ingmire, Br. M. R. Miles gave a touching discourse from the text—"As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be," etc The Lord's Supper was then celebrated, and a large number united to "show forth the Lord's death till he come."

At the close of the afternoon service, Br. E. Barron stated his convictions of duty, and received, by vote, an unordained minister's license, and recommendations to the church. Br. E. A. Rowe received certificate and recommendation as colporteur, and Br. Warren Vreeland certificate of ordination. A vote of thanks was tendered the good friends of Honeoyke for kind entertainment. Adjourned to meet (D. V.) in Brockport, Thursday eve. March 2, 1871.

It is evident the prospects of the cause we love and represent were never brighter in this State. Brn., encourage your Visiting Committee. WM. E. BROWN, Sec'y.

The General Western Conference.

At the next session of this Conference the following questions will be brought up for discussion:

1. The heathen theory of future life.
2. The Jewish theory of future life.
3. The Bible theory of future life,
4. Church government.
5. Church order.
6. Redemption.
7. The Restitution.
8. Future Retribution.
9. The proof of Jesus' Messiahship.
10. Why preach the coming of the Lord near?
11. Should we be a distinct people?
12. Signs of the times, and the periods.
13. The ancient and modern theories of a resurrection.
14. The future home of the saints.
15. The various theories of immortality.
16. What is the soul and spirit of man?

The meeting will probably be held sometime in February. Time and place are yet to be arranged. Any who can attend will please select one or more of the above topics, as subject for essays to read at the Conference. Thirty minutes will be allowed for the reading of each essay. Those who choose topics will please signify their selection to Eld. Wm. Sheldon, Brodhead, Wis., by letter.

Obituary.

ROGERS. Mr. John Rogers, a citizen of Boston, Mass., for over half a century, died at his residence, Poplar Court, Dec. 19, aged 88 years and 10 months.

Thus we are called upon to witness the removal of one of the old patriarchs, ripe in years, ripe in experience, and well remembered by a large circle of friends and many who received tokens of his charity. A man of remarkable industry, perseverance and business tact, whose motto was, "My word is my bond." In fact an honest man, who was faithful in the performance of all his duties. His aged partner keenly feels her loss. Although deeply afflicted with loss of sight, his kindness has well provided for all that she can enjoy till she meets him on the other shore.

Sr. Rogers writes: "I am now a lonely widow, yet I hear a voice saying, 'Thy Maker is thine husband;' and even so, more than all in him I find. He is more precious to me than ever. Blessed be his holy name. I rejoice to read in your paper that your health is improved and you have had successful treatment of that cancer. In this also we can glorify God.

QUIGGLE. In Mendora, Wis., July 20, 1870, James Quiggle, in the 71st year of his age.

He had been a member of the Methodist denomination for many years prior to his embracing the Advent faith; but being a Bible student, he became somewhat puzzled and even skeptical through the preaching and theology of the day, it being so contradictory to the teaching of the scriptures as he read them. On hearing the Adventists and their interpretation of the scriptures, he immediately embraced their views, and became identified with them, and was ever a consistent and intelligent defender of the faith, and a holy and exemplary Christian. The writer preached his funeral sermon in Mendora from Job 14: 12—the text having been selected by Br. Quiggle during his last sickness. A large concourse of his fellow citizens followed him to his resting place. His widow, with several children, survive him, and sorrow, but not without hope. The church mourns the loss of one of its most devoted and worthy members. "The memory of the just is blessed." O. R. FASSETT.

CONLEY. Killed, Dec. 14, 1870, Br. George W. Conley, aged 27 years, 4 months and 8 days.

He was a son of Eld. R. Conley, a Methodist Episcopal minister of Watertown, Iowa. George and his family came from Nebraska to see his mother, who died a short time ago. With a company of hunters he went to Wisconsin, 150 miles from here; and one of the number in shooting at a deer shot him in the side. He lived eight hours; chose the text, and the writer to preach. He was brought home the 23d, and was buried the 26th. Services in the M. E. church at Floyd. They attended the first camp meeting held at New Hartford. We tried to comfort the mourners from the text of his choice—Job 19: 25, 26, which they much needed in their hour of trial. PETER S. W. DAYO.

Book Notices, Etc.

We are indebted to Rev. J. O. M. Hewitt for a copy of the minutes of the Wisconsin Baptist Anniversaries.

THE PRISM is a finely illustrated quarterly journal issued by Horton & Leonard of Chicago. No finer printing can be done anywhere.

"Our Dumb Animals" is a little monthly paper, pleading for those who cannot speak, at least in human language, for themselves. It does its work nobly and should be sustained. Published at $1 a year. Address Geo. T. Angell, 46 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

The Swedenborgians are doing a great deal for the dissemination of their doctrine by the distribution of tracts. They publish a Letter Series of 28 tracts at 25c., and a series of 22 larger tracts containing from 8 to 40 pp. for 60c. Specimens sent for 5c. Address E. H. SWINNEY, 20 Cooper Union, New York city.

THE BRIGHT SIDE is the name of a weekly paper for the children published by the BRIGHT SIDE COMPANY, of Chicago. Several of our young friends to whom we have shown it, pronounce it to be an excellent paper, one that they like first rate. It is published at $1 a year. The Semi-monthly edition is $1.00 a year. ONE CENT will secure a package of samples. Send, and after reading you can judge for yourselves.

Mr. H. A. Ford is the able, and, also, efficient Superintendent of the public schools in this corner of Michigan. He has established at Niles a monthly devoted to educational interests, called THE MICHIGAN TEACHER. The copies we have seen are of a character to enable us to recommend the periodical to teachers. It is, as its title page declares, "devoted to Educational Intelligence, to the practical work of the school-room, and the Philosophy of Education." $1.50 a year. Single copies, 15c.

MINNESOTA.

The Ninth Annual Conference of the Advent Christian church at Minnesota will convene at Winona, Friday morning, Jan. 20, at 9 a. m.

Special attention is called to the following, to facilitate the business sessions:

1. The officers of the different Quarterly Conferences will prepare written reports of business transacted in their respective districts the past year, together with an account of money raised by quarterly and church collections.

2. As it is desired to make up the statistics of the Conference at this session, each church is requested to report its present membership, and the number added the present year.

3. Each church is entitled to one delegate for every eight members, and as business of special importance will be transacted, every church ought to be represented.

4. In case any of the preaching brethren are not able to attend they are specially requested to report by letter.

There will be a service on Thursday eve previous. Persons coming on the cars will be met at the depot by Brn. P. Ramer and A. A. Gilbert. Those coming with teams will call at either of their houses. EDWIN T. HIMES, Sec'y.

Br. Ramer informs me that the Advent Christian chapel at Winona is so far completed that it will be ready for the use of the Conference. It is built on Broadway, near the corner of Winona Street. He also says he will effect an arrangement with the Winona and St. Peter railroad so that brethren can come over that road at reduced rates. We can not state positively that the arrangement is now made, but before buying tickets on that road let the friends inquire for excursion tickets to Conference at Winona. E. T. H.

Providence permitting I will be with the church at Winona, Minn., Sunday, Jan. 15, and continue meetings till the Conference.

EDWIN T. HIMES.

The third Q. M. of the St. Paul District Minn. Conf. will be held at the school-house near Br. F. M. Libbey's, West St. Paul, commencing Friday eve, Jan. 6, to hold over the Sabbath. On the Sabbath the morning and afternoon services will be held with a short intermission between for refreshment, so that friends coming in with teams and desiring to return before night can have the privilege of enjoying two meetings.

E. T. HIMES, Sec'y.

IOWA.

The second Q. M. of the Deep Creek District of the Iowa A. C. Conference, will be held at Clinton, Iowa, as Br. Wilson may arrange, to commence Friday eve., Jan. 6, and hold over Sabbath. A general invitation is extended to all. Let the ministers, especially, be present. Come, one and all, with hearts full of the love of God, and thus be ready to work for God and man.

M. MULLETT, Sec'y.

A special meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at New Hartford, Butler Co., commencing Dec. 29 eve., and holding over Lord's day. Object to fill vacancies caused by the withdrawal of Brn. Dutton and Dickinson from the Conference Board, and transact such other business as may be necessary under the circumstances. It is expected that all the churches that feel interested in the cause of Christ in this State will send delegates, and that all who feel to co-operate with us in working for the glory of God, will attend. All are invited. Come brethren, praying that peace and harmony may characterize our proceedings, and God be glorified.

JOB GILDERSLEEVE, President.

A Critical Greek and English Concordance of the New Testament. Prepared by Charles F. Hudson, under the direction of H. L. Hastings. Revised and completed by Ezra Abbott, LL. D., Assistant Librarian of Harvard University. Pp. 510.

This is the first Greek and English Concordance ever prepared and published in America, and in many respects the most valuable ever published anywhere. It contains—

1. References to all places where every Greek word in the New Testament may be found—four or five constantly-recurring particles excepted.

2. All the English words and phrases by which these Greek words are rendered, both in the text and in the margin of the common version.

3. All the various readings derived from hundreds of ancient manuscripts, written before the discovery of printing, and embodied in the four best editions of the Greek New Testament—those of Griesbach, Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles—to which are added the confirmatory readings of the very ancient but recently-discovered Sinaitic Manuscript.

4. An index of English words, by means of which persons entirely unacquainted with the Greek language can find the original for any English word in any passage, and can trace and ascertain its usage and the manner of its translation throughout the entire New Testament, and can also detect any various readings occurring in the four critical editions above named.

It is prepared to supply the existing demand for a Greek Concordance so critical that it will present the latest results of sound textual investigation, and afford the most learned student valuable information which he can nowhere else so easily obtain; so simple that the mere English reader can use it with facility in his studies of the Word of God; so cheap that the multitude may purchase it by a trifling outlay; and so compact and portable that it may be made a constant companion of the traveler, the student, and the evangelist.

It leads the English reader to the Greek original and its various readings. It leads the Greek scholar to the common English translation. It saves space by omitting extended quotations, referring inquirers to the passages themselves for further information. It furnishes the Greek alphabet, with rules of pronunciation, which may be mastered by an hour's study, and thus obviates the necessity of an imperfect representation of the Greek words in the English characters. It classifies the passages where each Greek word occurs, reveals at a glance the number of ways in which it is translated in the New Testament, shows in what senses it is most frequently or more rarely used, exhibiting in their order, first the primary, and afterwards the several more remote senses of the different terms. It presents all the important various readings. It combines with these peculiarities a cheapness of cost and convenience of form which bring it within the means of the student, enabling him to have it always beside him.

Price—cloth, $1.30; leather, $3; morocco, gilt, $5. Ten copies, cloth, $10. Sent, postage paid, on receipt of the price. Size, six and three-fourths inches long, four and five-eighths wide, seven-eighths thick.

Business Agent's Department.

We have a supply of Eld. Wm. N. Pile's pamphlet—"The Mediatorial Kingdom." Price 25c.

We have received the new translation of the Psalms by the American Bible Union. 1 vol. $1.25, post paid.

Free.

I will send THE ADVENT TIMES FREE one year to any young man or woman who will act as agent for my new and "Beautiful Household Favorite." For terms, address A. C. Coon's Manufacturing establishment, Faribault, Minn.

A Colporteur's Notes.

We have just published a little pamphlet with the above title for Br. J. B. Wadsworth, the well-known pedestrian Advent Colporteur, whose walks through the South interested us so much within a year or two. It gives some incidents of his travels, and an exposition of the faith, with other matter. Sent post paid for 10c. tf

GOOD TILL JAN. 1 1871.

We will send The Quarterly and TIMES one year to new subscribers for $2 00, paid in advance. Persons obtaining new subscribers will please bear this in mind, and mention it.

Persons already subscribers to THE TIMES shall have The Quarterly one year on payment of 75c., any previous to Jan 1 1871.

Binding "The Times"

This binder is in appearance precisely like the cover of a regularly bound book. Its peculiar device for self-binding consists of two narrow stripes of thin steel inserted in firmly glued casings of binders' cloth on each inside edge of the back and working hinge-like, as do the lids. The front, or left hand side, contains eyelet-holes, from which heavy threads, with needles, pass through the papers and through corresponding eyelets in the back or right hand strips, and are firmly secured to the "cleat" or fastener by "belaying"—a figure 8 turn—the work of a moment! The flexible back adjusts itself to any thickness of papers, and the strips hold them as in a vice, quite as firmly and neatly as if bound regularly.

We commend this binder to our subscribers. It is a practical thing. The TIMES, as received from week to week, can be added to the file in a minute's time; and the cover will contain over a year's numbers. The prices of these covers are as follows: Leather and cloth $2 00; Cloth, $1 25; Muslin and Marbled Paper, $1 75. Sent free of charge to any subscriber, on receipt of price. Let none who wish to preserve their papers be without this useful binder.

FILES! FILES!

We also furnish a nice newspaper file, post-paid, for 30c. This binds papers in convenient form, but has no covers.

Advertise "The Times."

We will furnish envelopes bearing an advertisement of THE TIMES, with directions for postmasters to return if not called for, with a blank space in which to write name and postoffice, at the rate of 10c for a package of twenty-five; sent by mail post-paid. Our friends can by this means obtain a good envelope, cheap, and, at the same time, aid us by circulating an advertisement of our paper.

To those desiring envelopes with their own business card and return address, we offer the following terms: Not less than FIVE HUNDRED envelopes by express, $3; by mail, $3 25. PROVIDED, we are allowed to put upon them the following imprint:

☞ Cheap envelope printing by THE ADVENT TIMES Buchanan, Mich. Publishers of standard Advent periodicals, books and tracts. SPECIMENS SENT FREE.

A CORRESPONDENT says: "Will you not suggest to the readers of THE TIMES that they may present five of their friends or neighbors with five ADVENT TIMES envelope each, only costing 10c., and thus be the means of advertising the paper beyond the circle of their own correspondents? Also, they might put a Gem Tract each."

ABROAD.

The latest news from the seat of war indicates that the Prussians are slowly crushing the French before them. We are not able to give details, or even a general view of the situation, this week.

Rome.

A severe parliamentary conflict is going on at Florence as regards the future status of the Pontiff. This important question was submitted to Parliament to take the precedence over all others. The extreme left will endeavor to destroy the Pope, the Sacred College, and the whole body episcopal. The extreme right will try to save as much as possible of the Court power and dynasty of St. Peter. The ministerial project for guaranteeing the independence of the Pope and the free exercise of the spiritual authority of the Holy See, consists of the following articles:

1. Personal inviolability of the Pope.
2. The palace guards to be retained.
3. An appropriation annually of 3,213,000 livre for the guard of the former civil list.
4. The papal residence to be free from taxes, and located at the Vatican and Santa Maggoire, in Rome, and Castle Vandalfa, in the country, and they will be free from the ordinary jurisdiction of the States.
5. The same immunity shall extend to the localities occupied by the General Council of the Church.
6. Criminals and misdemeanants within such localities, or taking refuge there, shall not be pursued by the agents of justice, or arrested without the sanction of the Pope or priests' conclaves.
7. Such residence as aforementioned shall be free from the appropriation laws.
8. No researches or sequestrations of any work or documents shall be made on the offices of any sacred congregations invested with ecclesiastical attributes by the Pope.
9. The pontiff shall enjoy freedom in publishing the acts of his ministry.
10. Cardinals and ecclesiastics taking part in the acts shall be free from molestation by government.
11. There shall be free correspondence between the Pope and the Catholic world.
12. The postal and telegraph offices in the Vatican shall be free of charge.
13. The papal legates accredited by the Pope shall enjoy the same privileges as other ministers.
14. The Pontiff's spiritual and disciplinary jurisdiction shall be exercised free of contest by the State.
15. All ecclesiastical meetings shall be held without government permission.
16. The nomination of all beneficiaries, dignitaries and officers of the church shall be made without government interference.
17. The Episcopal oaths of allegiance to the king are abolished.
18. The office of apostolic legate of Sicily is abolished.
19. The institutions founded in Rome for the education of priests shall be under the direction of the Pope, without interference from the secular authorities.
20. All existing laws contrary to the foregoing are hereby abrogated."

Meanwhile from latest reports it would appear that there seems to be an internal conflict threatening the Catholic church, for it is rumored that the conference to be held be- een Cardinals Swarts, Femberg and Tarco, the Hungarian prelates, is likely to lead to united action against the Papal pretensions of infallibility. The bill introduced into the Italian Parliament, guaranteeing the Papal prerogative and perfect freedom of the Œcumenical Council, has passed through the committee, and will probably be agreed upon by a vote in the Parliament. But as on the 23d inst., the Chamber of Deputies passed by a vote of 192 yeas to 18 nays, the bill providin r the removal of the capital from Flor ome within six months, it is not pr is Holiness will care to have t s sittings. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to ART. III., Sec. 2. But the person filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of ART. III., Sec. 3, except the words, "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That ART. IV. be amended to read:

ART. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

SEC. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

SEC. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

SEC. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate; and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty-five members.

Add to ART. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to such amount as the Board may elect.

Make ART. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least three month previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

The precise date of the meeting at which these amendments will be considered, has not yet been fixed. It will probably be the last week in February, or the first in March; and as no other church has requested it, the meeting will probably be held in Buchanan.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN QUARTERLY,

EDITED BY

JAMES H. WHITMORE AND WILLIAM L. HIMES.

The Quarterly is one of the most interesting and valuable publications of the day. Its articles are comprehensive, and give full or complete views of the subjects treated, in the handiest form for preservation. And it is the intention of the editors to give the best writings, original and selected, of the best writers on all topics related to the Second Advent. No articles will be inserted which are not deemed worthy of permanent preservation by the Bible student for study and reference. A year's numbers form a volume of 320 pages of matter, containing besides the valuable original articles, which can be found in connected form nowhere else, the cream of books, magazines and other publications, that would cost ten times the price of the Quarterly.

It will be the ambition of the Editors to make the Quarterly so interesting and valuable as to be a necessity to every well-informed and well-posted Adventist; while the publisher will endeavor to offer it on such favorable terms that none can afford to be without it.

The contents of the two numbers already issued, of the present volume are as follows: Loss and Gain, by A. A. Phelps; The Restitution, by O. R. Fassett; The Popular Superstition—Ghosts, by the same author; Object of the Present Dispensation, by Dr. McNeile; The Kingdom of God, The Davidic Covenant, and The Time of Reward, Editorial; Review of Stuart on Future Punishment, by Henry Constable; The Doom of the Unjust, by the same author; The Final Punishment, by an able orthodox scholar and minister; A Question for the Times, or the Par... of the Leaven, selected; The Witch ... Prof. Walter Scott. The Stumbling ... Rev. Samuel Mintor, with other valu... ticles.

The next number will be issued early in January; and contain articles by Edward Falconer Litton of Scotland (on Jewish Knowledge of a Future State); by H. Bonar (from the Quarterly Journal of Prophecy); by J. H. Whitmore (a Review of Dr. Clark's essay on the two fold nature of man, containing the arguments which Methodist journals assert made an immaterialist of Eld. R. Wendell); by the Editor of the Rainbow; by Prof. Barlow of Dublin, and others.

Remember that only a limited edition of the Quarterly is published. Subscribe at once, and secure the entire volume. Only about a dozen sets of Volume I. remain, and they cannot be duplicated.

TERMS: Single copies, one year, $1. Seven copies to one address, $5.

SPECIAL RATES.

To all subscribers for the ADVENT TIMES the Quarterly will be furnished at 75c. a year.

To new subscribers for both, we will send the TIMES and Quarterly one year for $2.50.

The Quarterly and Bible Banner one year, $1.50.

To ministers, of any denomination, we will send the Quarterly for

VOL. VIII.—NO. 24. BUCHANAN, JANUARY 10, 1871. WHOLE NO. 353.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, ... MICHIGAN.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 10, 1871.

THE Review copies a Dialogue at the Gate of Heaven from some publication, which it is acknowledged "at first sight" may appear "disingenious," whatever that may be. In it the keeping of the seventh-day is spoken of in this wise:

> Be ye assured that no sin can be admitted into his holy place. And if you had read your Bible as you ought, you must have known that the very least deviation from the royal law, is sin; and the least sin, unrepented of, will forever bar the gate of Heaven against you.

—We do not intend to go into any lengthened argument, but simply propose to Sabbath-keepers that inasmuch as they have made Moses' law to be "the Royal law," and declared that neglect of this law is sin; and that one sin, unrepented, will shut one out of heaven (!), that they immediately repent of their sins, and set us a more consistent example of law-keeping. The law of the Fourth Commandment is, "In it (the seventh day) thou shalt NOT DO ANY WORK." In several instances wives and children of Sabbath keepers have acknowledged to us that "the Sabbath" was the day of all the seven that they worked the hardest. This was in cases where meetings were held in their neighborhood, and they had to care for company. In other cases Sabbath keepers will harness up teams, and drive from three to ten or more miles to go to meeting. The Sabbath law said the beasts, as well as man should rest, and "NOT DO ANY WORK." If Sabbatarians are right, they are self-condemned, and their sin of worki [illegible] selves, and making their be [illegible] k on the Seventh-day will shut th [illegible] out of "heaven."

We Must Do What We Can.

The time is past when we could say, we should do what we can. It is must now. You would not say to a dying man, you should repent and believe on Christ; but you must repent and believe. Why? He is near his end—but little time is left him before it will be too late. He must repent now, or be lost.

Is it not so with us now in regard to our work? must we not now do what we can? Can the work be omitted and we approved? It is optional with us, and our salvation secure? Is there not a necessity for our doing what we can? Is not the time now short in which all is to be done that we can ever do? Would we have less time than there now is? Who knows that there is now time enough for us to finish our work in? How many of us will have it done before the Lord comes? How many then? Now to do what we can is our work. How many will have it done when the day closes?

Knowing therefore that we have left but little time; and not knowing just how much; and that our reward depends upon our faithfulness, we say not that we should, but that we must do what we can? To sacrifice and labor then, let us go. We must do what we can. I. I. LESLIE.

Advent Times Sermons. No. 4.

"Rejoicing in hope." (Rom. 12:12)

This an Advent text. It looks forward. It indicates that there is something to come better than any thing we now enjoy, and is a sufficient refutation of that inconsiderate class who urge that we should be satisfied with present enjoyment and not be curious about the future, or what God has for us in it. For hope relates not to what we have in possession but only to what we have in prospect. "What a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?" Hence while we enjoy a present salvation, we are not satisfied with this, because it is imperfect. Precious as is all we enjoy here during probation, it would all be worthless were there no future. We know this because Paul affirms that "if in this life only we have hope, we are of all men most miserable:" that is, we are deluded, and that upon which our enjoyment rests is a deception. The Christian's best things are all in the future. In the present the best enjoyment he has is nothing more than a foretaste of what is to come. Here there is much of bitterness mingled in even the sweetest cup; but the draughts of eternity will consist in unmixed blessedness. It is instructive, also, to notice the remarks which immediately follow the text. No sooner has the Apostle said, "Rejoicing in hope," than he adds, "Patient in tribulation." The period of hope is the period of tribulation; and we are to be patient under the tribulation, let it come in what form it will, or be severe as it may, because the realization of our hope is to be the final, the eternal end of tribulation, and the tribulation is necessary to fit us for the enjoyment of the realized hope. It acts upon us as fire upon the precious metals, or the lapidary's wheel upon the jewels, or the stamping mills upon the quartz ore; the fire consumes only dross; what is removed on the wheel only leaves the stone more comely and precious; and the stamping mill destroys the rock only, and by its means the gold is separated and saved. The process in each case is severe; but the result, more than justifies the severity.

Let us, then, rejoice in our hope. It is in God, and therefore cannot fail: he cannot deceive. (1 Peter 1: 21.) It is in Christ, which reminds us that he is our all, and through him come all the blessings of time and eternity. (1 Thes. 1: 3.) It is a "lively" or living hope, always fresh and new. (1 Pet. 1: 3.) We can understand our hope, and therefore it can be intelligently appreciated. We not only know that God hath spoken good concerning Israel, but we know what that good is. (Eph. 1: 18.) It is a hope for live men; the dead cannot enjoy it, though they may rest in it. (Is 38: 18.) But it sustains in death, and dying in its assurance we may "rest in hope." (Ps. 16: 9.) Our sleep will seem to us as but an instant. The sleepers fall in hope, and so far as consciousness is concerned, the next moment awake in full realization. Many other considerations might be given, but in conclusion we urge all never to be ashamed of our hope. "Let me not be ashamed of my hope," said the inspired writer. Our hope was his hope. Let us not be ashamed. It is not a popular hope, but it is a good hope, and will not disappoint us. "The flesh is weak," and we are sometimes empted to be ashamed of our hope. But the Spirit is stronger than the flesh. Let us allow it to possess and rule us. And if we walk "rejoicing in hope," notwithstanding life's tribulations, the world will take knowledge of us, that we have been with Jesus, and learned of him.

Consciousness

There is a great deal of highly finished rhetorical nonsense talked and written about the testimony of "Consciousness" to the existence of the Deity, and the immortality of the soul. And the testimony of "Consciousness" is declared to be like instinct, in that it never deceives. The following paragraph from a late writer is a speciman of this turbid reasoning:

> But we might also argue that the doctrine of the soul's immortality has a deep lodgement in the intuition of man. Though the light of that inner revelation shone dim in the mind of Plato, he clung to its comforts and cherished its hopes. Tertullian says. "The testimony of men's souls is the same in Egypt, in Syria, and Pontus." We find the belief in a future state among the nations of Society, the Friendly, and the Pelew islands. The New Zealanders, the Kalmuc Tartars, the Burmans believe it. The inhabitants of the African wilds, the nations of Dahomy, and the Persians acknowledge it. Even the North American Indian, the child of the forest, on whose dark and benighted mind the light of revelation has never shone, even he, far out in his own native woods, consoles himself with the thought, that when he dies, and is called upon to to leave this earth, he will be permitted to go forth in company with the Great the ten thousand dee without molestation, and without restraint.

—We would like proof that all these nations believe in the immortality of the soul. We doubt. We apprehend the best proof that can be brought of the Indian's belief is from Pope's Essay on Man. Besides, when the appeal to the "consciousness" of mankind in general is made, and on the ground that it is unerring, the argument carries along with it spiritual dogs, deer, buffaloes, and a thousand other absurdities. The fact is no man's consciousness tells him anything about God or himself, except as it is guided by intellect; the reason which God has given. Paul did not blame because they had neglected the voice of "Consciousness," but because they had not used their reason and common sense, to which the works of God in creation, were continually appealing. "Consciousness" is a scholar rather than a teacher.

THE GREAT NORTH-WEST.

The East and the West have their wants, and their claims upon the stewards of the church. Each branch of the church of Christ has its responsibilities connected with this great field, and each must carry on the work according to their resources in men and means, Of the people of this important field, the Free Baptist, says:

> The great Northwest posesses all the natural elements of self-sustaining religious enterprises. Its people are intelligent, unusually free from bigotry and superstition, remarkable for their enterprise and public spirit, and with sufficient wealth in possession and prospect to accomplish great results. There are mental and moral resources in the newer portions of our country that are sure to make themselves felt for good or evil.
> While Christian men and societies are dreaming and hesitating, the problem of the direction these energies are to take is being solved. While good men sleep, bad men are busy. Already the tares have taken root in all our large towns. But they are not as numerous nor so deeply rooted as they will be a year hence. The nature of the human heart is such that there must be plenteous sowing of good seed and careful culture, or no good fruit will be garnered.
> We need men. Strong men, with strong convictions, strong faith. Thoroughly furnished men, and godly, full of the Holy Spirit. We need men who are alive to the wants of this generation, who comprehend the wants of our times and adapt themselves wisely to them.
> We need money to make these men effective and to secure the fullest success. We can get money after we get the people converted. Pioneer workers need the means of support as they go to plant the standard in new places, so that they can say without mental reservation, "I seek not yours, but you." If they can induce sinners to give themselves to the Lord, we know that their wealth and influence is included.
> In order to secure the men and the means for support of this pioneer corps, we must have co-operation. Mutual sympathy is good, but mutual help is better, because it includes the first combined with its ripened fruit. We do not need more machinery, but to use what we have to better advantage.

This correspondent of the Baptist, has hit the nail on the head. His remarks about the people of the North-west are just, and in reference to men means and machinery they are true.

As Adventists, we have all the [illegible] co-operation in our work. We have a great work, and we of the West must do it. Let every one gird themselves anew for the labor before us.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

The wisdom of fairs and bazaars for religious purposes is undergoing warm discussion in the English papers. There is no wisdom about them except the wisdom of this world. They minister to things earthly and sensual.—An exchange states that the churches in Boston which maintain women as missionaries among the poor are well satisfied with their labors. The undeserving poor prefer men as missionaries, as they are more easily deceived than experienced women.—A correspondent of the Evangelist writes from the Iowa town where Abner Kneeland lies buried, that when he first went there eighteen years ago, there was no preaching of any kind, but every kind of wickedness. Kneeland, who was imprisoned in Boston for blasphemy, when released went there, and wrote back to his followers to come on, which they did. "Here was the place where there was no priest, no Bible, no Sabbath, no heaven, no hell, no God, no devil." He is dead; his followers have gone—moved away—dead or converted.—Bibles and other religious publications are now freely sold in Rome.—The superstitious ignorance of a Romish population was well exhibited in Southern Italy, when the late auroral display was witnessed. The people took it as a sign of God's anger for the dethronement of the Pope, women ran about the streets saying ave marias and pater nosters, and a mob attacked the house of a Protestant evangelist.—The Churchman says of the Thanksgiving day "Union Meetings:" "We have seen this 'union' quoted as a beautiful example of Christian charity—'for that day only,' it would seem. Once for all, we protest against such shallow humbug. The 'charity' consists in having a service that shall have as little religion as possible in it. One minister makes a political prayer, and another preaches a political sermon; while what is left of the service is divided between the choir and the clerical brother who plays host."—The New York Tribune avers that a woman in Ohio demands a divorce from her husband, "because he does not believe in the damnation of still-born infants."—The Spanish government proposes to reduce the dioceses from 61 to 16, the parishes from 30,000 to 8,000, and the state allowance from £1,700,000 to £600,000, leaving the people to provide for what more is needed. MEMORIES OF THE OLD KITCHEN

Far back, in my musings, my thoughts have been cast
To the cot where the hours of my childhood were passed.
I loved all its rooms, to the pantry and hall,
But that blessed old kitchen was dearer than all;
Its chairs and its table, none brighter could be,
For all its surroundings were sacred to me,
To the nail in the ceiling, the latch on the door,
And I loved every crack in that old kitchen floor.

I remember the fireplace, with mouth high and wide,
The old fashioned oven that stood by its side,
Out of which, each Thanksgiving, came puddings and pies,
That fairly bewildered and dazzled my eyes;
And then, too, Saint Nicholas, slyly and still,
Came down every Christmas, our stockings to fill.
But the dearest of memories I've laid up in store,
Is the mother that trod on that old kitchen floor.

Day in and day out, from morning till night,
Her footsteps were busy, her heart always light,
For it seemed to me then that she knew not a care,
The smile was so gentle her face used to wear.
I remember with pleasure what joy filled our eyes,
When she told us the stories that children so prize,
They were new every night, though we'd heard them before
From her lips, at the wheel, on the old kitchen floor.

I remember the window where mornings I'd run,
As soon as the daybreak, to watch for the sun,
And I thought, when my head scarcely reached to the sill,
That it slept through the night in the trees on the hill,
And the small tract of ground that my eyes there could view
Was all of the world that my infancy knew,
Indeed, I cared not to know of it more,
For a world of itself was that old kitchen floor.

To-night those old visions come back at their will,
But the wheel and its music forever are still,
The band is moth-eaten, the wheel laid away,
And the fingers that turned it lie mould'ring in clay;
The hearthstone, so sacred, is just as 'twas then,
And the voices of children ring out there again;
The sun through the window looks in as of yore,
But it sees stranger-feet on the old kitchen floor.

I ask not for honor, but this I would crave,
That when the lips speaking are closed in the grave,
My children will gather theirs round at their side,
And tell of the mother who long ago died.
'Twould be more enduring, far dearer to me,
Than inscription on marble or granite could be,
To have them tell often, as I did of yore,
Of the mother who trod on the old kitchen floor.

Paul's "Desire to Depart."

Br. Himes: In the Advent Herald controversy on "Paul's desire to depart," which had been waged to some extent in that paper. In his letter the Prof. pronounced against the view of the passage which I had presented, without however giving any critical or Bible reasons for his opinion. Believing that a scholar of the Professor's standing could sustain any true position by something more forcible and convincing than assertion, I wrote the reply to his letter which I herewith enclose, in the hope of having the popular view either unanswerably sustained, or its fallacy exposed.

Br. Orrock, however, declined to publish it, and being anxious that the truth, whether held by the Professor or myself, should have a wide circulation, I enclose his letter and my reply thereto, hoping that you will lay them before your readers in the same issue of THE TIMES, and greatly oblige yours fraternally, THOS. DAVIDSON.

Quebec, P. Q.

PROF. WHITING'S LETTER.

To the Editor of the Advent Herald—Dear Brother: In your communication of April 20, you allow me to answer your inquiries as briefly as I please. I am grateful for this permission, as my health will not suffer me to neglect brevity.

You inquire, in the first place, whether in my judgment Phil. 1:23 can be justly rendered—"Having the ardent longing for the returning of Christ, and to be with him, for that is immensely better?" I reply, that such a rendering is not a just one, but on the contrary it cannot be sustained as one that presents the thought expressed in Greek by the inspired writer.

The next inquiry is—"What objections would you urge to such a translation?"

Answer. The verb analuo is translated in Latin, by dissolvo, to loose, untie, disjoin; by discedo to depart. The New Testament Lexicon of Bretschneider, in defining the word quotes this very passage, v. 23, and says, "analusai, (understand) from life." In other words—to depart from life. In the same article he refers to the return from the wedding, Luke 12: 36, and says "discedo ut redeam, revertor:" "I depart that I may return, I return." This is a paraphrase used to express the thought more fully. The noun analusis is properly rendered in the only place in which it occurs in the New Testament, 2 Tim. 4: 6, thus: "The time of my departure is at hand." Robinson, N. T. Lexicon, renders analusis (tropically) "departure from life." Schleusner, in his Lex. N. T., after defining the verb by migro, abeo se, gives the definition morior (I die—as if, discedo) "I depart from life like a guest from an entertainment, or, I return to God." I could quote the lexicons of Scapula, Hedericus, Greenfield and others to the same effect.

I object to the above translation—because it is at war with the subject-matter or context. And again, because the following translations harmonize with the English Version as to sense. Some, like the Vulgate and Erasmus, are more closely literal—using "dissolve" or its equivalent,—still the thought presented in the original is preserved. I therefore submit the list:

Vulgate, Peshito-Syriac, (to be dismissed—released); Arias Montanus Latin, Vatablus Lat., migrare; Beza Lat. release; Castalio Lat., migrare; Schott Lat., discedere vita; Low Dutch Holland, om onthonnen te worden—"to be unbound," or "loosed;" Luther and De Wette, orb auscheiden—to depart; Martin's Geneva French, deloger—"to remove;" Tyndale, "to be loosed" (to be loosed); so the English Genevan Translation, Penn's New Covenant, and the Translations of Newcome, Wakefield, Doddridge, Dickinson, Sawyer, Geo. Noyes, and that published by the American Bible Union. I regard the testimony of these translators, ancient and modern, as entitled to some regard.

Now, as to the "criticism," which was printed in the Advent Herald of March 2, I know not its author, nor the author whose article was noticed by the critic; hence, I have no bias to favor either of the writers, and frankly say that the criticism is fatal to the article or the "new translation" of the passage in question. LETTER TO THE ADVENT HERALD.

Br. Orrock: In the interest of truth by whomsoever held I would ask your permission to briefly notice one or two points in Prof. Whiting's letter in reference to Phil. 1: 23 which appeared in your issue of May 25.

In answer to your question, could the passage be justly rendered—"Having a desire for the returning of Christ and to be with him?" the Prof says, "Such a rendering is not a just one." Will he be kind enough to give us his reasons for the opinion? Will he favor us with a literal translation of the passage without adding to, or taking away from the exact words which Paul used, or altering which he observed? Will he please tell us how the words ten epithumian have been translated a desire when they mean the intense desire? and explain by what law of language the phrase eis to analusai can be rendered to depart? Will he as we have already done parse the sentence, explaining not only the meaning but the relationship and connection of each word in it? This is a simple and effective manner of testing our rendering. We challenge the Prof. to make the experiment, and promise him that this course will be rather more valuable in guiding his [illegible] Latin fathers whose minds were [illegible] from infancy with the idea that death meant simply the act of transferring the saint from earth to heaven, translated it.

Has the Prof. seen and examined our reasons for differing from the popular rendering? or has he adopted the easier and less troublesome mode of condemning us unheard? Has he examined the argument based on the grammatical construction of the text which all our reviewers with singular and suspicious unanimity have left unnoticed? We claim that the rendering we have given is the exact grammatical equivalent of the words Paul used, and now ask the Prof. to disprove it if he can.

There are just two other points at issue between us which I must establish, or the Prof. disprove, before either can reasonably ask his view to be accepted as the true one. (1) That analuo is sometimes correctly rendered return. (2) That the consistency and agreement of Paul's writings and the context of Phil. 1: 23 authorize nay absolutely require that rendering there. Upon these two positions rest the entire controversy. If they can be disproved our able and learned friend is just the man to do it, but if we them against all comers by sound critical and scriptural reasons, then must our rendering remain a just one, the opinion of Prof. Whiting to the contrary notwithstanding. And in support of the first viz. that analuo is sometimes correctly rendered return, a quotation from a former article is in point:

The Greek word analusis, the noun form of analuo which we have appropriated almost without change in our English word analysis, expresses what seems the radical meaning of analuo and the idea of return runs through it all, for the analysis of any substance is just the action by which its component parts return into their simple and primitive condition. Before they were organized into the body which they form, they existed in the simple state, and the analysis just permits them to return into that simple state again. This being so, any careful critic may see at a glance how naturally such a word would come to be used to express the return of persons to places where they had formerly been, and in this sense it is most undoubtedly used in Luke 12: 36 "pote analusei ek ton gamon"—when he shall return from the wedding."

Prof. Hudson than whom it would be difficult to cite superior authority on a question of this kind says: "In twenty-two manuscripts of the Septuagint including the Oxford analuo is used in Josh. 8: 8 for the Hebrew word which always signifies return. See Debt and Grace, p. 257. Upon this point we might multiply testimony, but for the sake of brevity we omit quoting the numerous lexicons which render the word return, especially as your correspondent "L." three or four times in his criticism that the word might sometimes be rendered return, as indeed no man whose business it is simply to analyze language, untrammeled by any popular or preconceived theory, could for a [illegible] the [illegible] that the saints whom he addressed were suffering? And if so, what more appropriate and natural than that he himself when assailed by fierce persecution, when subject to severe trials, as we know he was when he wrote the letter to the Philippians, should long for the returning of Christ, the dawning of that glorious day of deliverance at Jesus' "appearing and kingdom" which he had presented to his persecuted fellows as their sustaining hope? Why should he have one kind of comfort for them and another and different kind for himself? Why should they wait for his (God's) Son from heaven, if at death they would go to that Son in heaven? Why, in short, did he impress upon them that their scriptural attitude was to be "waiting for the coming of our Lord" if he knew that the Lord would never come for them, but that they would rather go to him? unless indeed the fiction that reconcile their theory, and which our rthodox friends have too readily lopted were true, namely, that Christ omes again to every saint at death.

DISTINCTLY ADMITS

Paul however made sad havoc with is theory of thousands of comings hich they have substituted for the riptural two, the first and the second, hen he taught (Heb 9: 28) that Christ was once offered to bear the ns of many, and unto them that look r him shall he appear the second time ithout sin [the necessity of a sin offering] unto salvation." And when he hall appear the second time, he tells us 2. Tim, 4:—"I charge thee before od and the Lord Jesus Christ who hall judge the quick and the dead at is appearing and kingdom." He appears the second time at the judgment f the quick and the dead, and no sooner.

"As I said unto the Jews, Whithe go ye cannot come, so now say I nto you," are Jesus' own words to the isciples (John 13: 33) in the immedite prospect of his death, and Paul eems to have felt their solemnity and orce, and placed all his hope of attaing to the presence of a risen Redeemr upon a resurrection from the dead. "If by any means I might attain to a esurrection out from among the dead" his intense desire as expressed in this ame letter to the Philippians. (ch. 3: 1,) And to us it seems unaccountable ow he could thus speak if he believd that e could attain to Jesus and heaven without it; but this language, though conradictory of and strangely inconsistent ith popular theory, is in perfect and omplete harmony with the gratitude hich he expresses to God for the mercy vouchsafed to his fellow-laborer paphroditus, in restoring him to health nd life, when he was sick "nigh unto eath." (Phil. 2: 27) But we confess e are unable to see any harmony between those expressions and the intense ersonal hich our orthodox friends tell us the postle expressed in the phrase eis to nalusai. If it were so exceedingly derable for Paul to die why was it so ndesirable for Epaphroditus? If death ould bring Paul to Jesus, wherein as the mercy manifested to Epaphroitus in preventing him from going to esus? And in what sense would the esurrection from the dead at some fuure period, thousands of years afterward be a matter of life and death imporance to both! Or if no resurrection ever akes place, and "the dead rise not," in what sense are they, in common with all who have fallen asleep in Christ." erished? (1 Cor. 15: 18.) Wi earned brother remove these difficulies and harmonize these contradicions. Or will he perpetuate these by iving a single expression in one of Paul's letters a meaning which is diectly contradictory of his other writngs and even of that very letter itself.

Every competent critic admits that where a doubtful or difficult passage occurs in any author, it must be understood in harmony with the general sense of the author; and when he has treated the same subject in plain terms elsewhere, there it is that we discover his correct meaning, that, in short, the plain and simple should interpret and explain the doubtful and difficult. Let us apply this rule to the present controversy. To the saints at Corinth Paul wrote (2 Cor. 1: 8, 10.) "For we would not brethren have you ignorant of our troubles which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure above strength, insomuch that we despaired even of life. But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves but in God who raiseth the dead; who delivered us from so great a death and doth deliver; in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us." Now here Paul undeniably speaks of his death, and in plain, simple, easily understood language tells us his feelings when thus placed in the exact circumstances which he is supposed to so ardently desire in Phil. 1: 23. And what is his testimony? Why that he despaired even of life, that he had the sentence of death in the assurance of a resurrection, rather than in the hope that it would bear him to heaven before and without a resurrection; that the God who delivered him from death was he who "raiseth the dead." Contrast this testimony with the passage in Phil. 1: 21, 23, as our orthodox friends understand it: "For to me to live is Christ and to die gain. But if I live in the flesh this is the fruit of my labor. Yet what I shall choose I wot not, for I am in a strait betwixt two having a desire to die and to be with Christ, which is far better." Now here is

CONFLICTING TESTIMONY

To the saints at Philippi he is represented as saying that he desired to die; to those at Corinth he emphatically says, he does not desire to die. Did Paul bear testimony thus? Or have the zealous teachers of reward and punishment to saint and sinner at death before either resurrection or judgment; given the apostles' words a meaning which he never intended, and which the words themselves do not authorize, to sustain a theory which increasing numbers of thoughtful Bible-students strongly suspect of having originated among the corruptions of apostate Rome?

One of your friends, a former reviewer, taught us that Paul did not desire death for its own sake, but for the result, namely, of bringing him to Christ. To this we reply that wherever in his writings the apostle plainly alludes to death, he speaks of it as a calamity, a penalty, an enemy, and in the light of this fact, the simplest of your readers may determine how far your friends, professors though they be, are justified in interpreting a disputed passage in direct opposition to this view. But whatever it is that Paul means by the phrase eis to analusai, whether to die, or for the returning, he does desire it for its own sake, and that very earnestly too. Here are his words: Ten epithumian—the intense desire [Epithumian does not mean a simple or ordinary desire, but an intense desire], echon having, eis to analusai to die [as our friends teach], kai sun Christo einai and with Christ to be. Now though to be with Christ is a second object of desire with the apostle coupled to the first by the conjunction kai,—it cannot and does not invalidate or neutralize the primary desire which [illegible] essed. If he believed, as we [illegible] he did, that he could not be with Christ before his (Christ's) return, or coming again to receive him, in harmony with Jesus' promise—"I will come again and receive you," then the Lord's return would be his primary desire, and "to be with Christ" would follow as a natural and certain consequence. And whether our view be right or wrong this is the apostle has observed in giving expression to his feelings in the passage under consideration. His strong desire is (1) eis to analusai (whatever that means), and (2) kai sun Christo einai and with Christ to be. The latter he does not desire any more strongly than the former, and your readers may determine whether in that case the former could possibly be death. In v. 23 Paul says—"For I am in a strait betwixt ' .' or more properly the two. And what the two were he tells us in v. 21, namely, to live and to die; "and what I shall choose I wot not;" or, if I had a choice between them I could not tell which I would prefer, having my mind filled with an intense desire for the return of the Lord, and to be with him, for that would be infinitely preferable to either.[1] Nevertheless if that may not now be, and the Lord should still tarry, it is more needful for you that I should abide in the flesh, or live on, to impart that scriptural consolation that your pilgrim and waiting condition requires. This we believe to be the apostle's meaning, and if it be, it harmonizes most completely with his other writings, and with the context of the letter of which it forms a part. The common view represents Paul as in one breath declaring that between life on the one hand and death on the other, he cannot choose, and in the next not only choosing death but earnestly desiring it, and declaring respecting it that it is far better, or rather as we have already shown, infinitely better.

DID PAUL REASON THUS?

We think not; and the theory which rests upon such reasoning had better be rolled away back again to the second century where it originated, by Origen's attempt to improve the plain, literal simplicity of God's truth by a mixture of heathen philosophy. Were Paul to appear among us to-day and question some of the popular teachers of our time respecting the use they have made of two or three expressions which are found in his letters, in sustaining theories which they have possibly received from Rome, corrupt and apostate both in doctrine and practice, they would find it, we think, exceedingly difficult to give him a scriptural answer. Certain it is that their teaching and his are in striking and direct contrast in many particulars. They teach that the wicked at death are consigned immediately to torment in hell. He, or rather Peter, "that God reserves the unjust to the day of judgment—to be punished." (2 Pet 2: 9.) They teach that the punishment consists in everlasting misery: he in "eternal destruction." (2 Thess. 1: 9.) They comfort the sorrowing and bereaved with the assurance that the deceased saints are enjoying present reward and glory in heaven; he with a future resurrection from the dead, when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, and the dead in Christ rise first." (1 Thess. 4: 16.) They teach that all men, sinners as well as saints, live forever; he that eternal life is a special gift bestowed only on the believer. (Rom. 6: 23.) And his testimony is supported by both Jesus and John in very emphatic terms. "He that eateth of this bread shall live for ever." (John 6: 58.) "He that hath not the Son shall not see life." (John 3: 36.) They teach that Satan himself is destined to immortal existence and will hold a place in God's universe forever; he that Christ "took flesh and blood, that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death that is the devil." (Heb. 2: 14.) They teach that saints without a resurrection; he that "they also who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished....if the dead rise not." (1 Cor. 15: 18.) These striking contrasts tell their own story and require no comment.

The circumstances which called forth in Paul's day the question—"How are the dead raised?" exist in ours, as there are among our orthodox friends not a few who say like the Corinthians of old that "there is no resurrection of the dead" unless the immortality of the soul be admitted. They reason very learnedly and call science to their aid to prove that the decomposing elements of the buried man pass off and enter into the composition of plants that are growing around and finally become appropriated by and form a part of other beings, and therefore the same matter belonging to several individuals forbids the resurrection of either; or, as one of our Presbyterian ministers in a recent publication stated the case: "Such a thing as the resurrection of a mere material man, the matter of whose body has existed in many different bodies, is a physical impossibility. A new creation of a precisely similar man there may be, but the resurrection of the very same man with his personal identity untouched there cannot be. Is not this a bold denial of the resurrection, even from our friend's own standpoint? For the immortal immaterial soul not having died cannot of course require to be raised from the dead, and if it be a physical impossibility, as our friend declares, to raise the material mortal body, the only part of man which according to his theory needs to be raised, then the resurrection is disproved, "and the dead rise not." Is not "evangelical" Christianity thus practically joining hands with the Romish apostacy, either in ignoring or denying the great hope of the gospel which Paul preached, viz: the resurrection of the dead, by preaching and believing a theory which requires no resurrection? If this be not so, how comes it that the subject which was constantly and by the apostles even at the risk of life itself should be so completely ignored by their pretended successors now as to call forth even from their own ranks testimony so condemning as that borne by Dr. Adam Clarke in his commentary on 1 Cor. 15. He says: "One remark I cannot help making: the doctrine of the resurrection appears to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive Christians than it is now; how is this? The apostles were continually insisting upon it and inciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience, and cheerfulness through it, and their successors in the present day seldom mention it. So apostles preached, and so primitive Christians believed; so we preach, and so our hearers believe. There is not a doctrine in the gospel on which more stress is laid, and there is not a doctrine in the present system of preaching which is treated with more neglect."

Why this striking contrast which the Doctor honestly admits? Whence this difference between apostolic and modern preaching? Is it because of a corresponding difference in their estimate of the importance of the doctrine has taken place? It may be so. One thing however is certain. If our orthodox friends believed that man was wholly dependent upon a resurrection for future life, then would they give the doctrine all the prominence and importance that Paul gave it, and thus following Paul in practice they would be more likely to be at one with him in doctrine also. For ourselves we frankly confess we have

NO OTHER HOPE.

We are constrained still to feel the ravages of sickness and death among us; still to bear the bereavement and sorrow that the "king of terrors" has inflicted for so many ages; still to witness in our households the "vacant chair" that in its emptiness speaks so eloquently to us of our sorrow; still feel our hearts rent with the pang that thrills them when we witness the steady approaches of the grim destroyer as he chills with cold icy touch a life as dear to us it may be as our own, and forces us to bear away on the morrow to the sleeping place of the dead the warm-hearted and affectionate friend of yesterday. A groaning creation still travails in pain, the dense darkness of earth's dreary night is still upon us, although we begin to discover in the eastern horizon the dawning of eternal day. But until that day comes, though others may hope to fly away at death as disembodied spirits "beyond the bounds of time and space," we much prefer to cherish the solid comfort imparted by Jesus when he said (John 6: 40): "And this is the will of him that sent me that every one who seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day."

The Iceberg's Voyage.

Away up on the coast of the land that we call Greenland, but which ought to be called Snowland, the icebergs are born. The one I am going to tell about came from an ice river. Did you ever hear of a river, all solid ice from bottom to top? There are many such. This great ice mountain was pushed slowly down toward the sea by a glacier, or ice river of which it was a part. At last it trembled and toppled on the brink of a steep precipice. But the ice behind kept pushing, and a great fragment, weighing hundreds of millions of tons, fell off the cliff into the Arctic Ocean, and made waves larger, a good deal, than a pebble does when you toss it into the brook. After plunging about awhile, and washing off the Greenland mud, he settled down for a voyage. The clear Arctic sunshine flashed upon the great ice cliffs, that gave back in return the most brilliant colors from their prismatic shapes. There seemed to be castles, towers, temples, palaces, and mosques of ice upon the berg, as it slowly set sail for the South.

"Beware of the Northwind," said a hoary old headland, who had seen icebergs sail away from Jacob's Bight for thousands of years, but never one came back again. But the sea-gull, who had traveled extensively over sea and land, and who knew what became of the ice, took care, as he sailed in dizzy circles around its purple top, to warn Iceberg against the real dangers of his voyage. But, remembering how iron-strong his own deep heart of ice was, Iceberg laughed at both warnings and moved away.

No sooner had he set sail than the winds began to conspire against him. "I will wreck him before he gets away from his native land," said Westwind. "I will blow a hurricane at him off the cold Labrador." "But I," said Northwind, "will rack his joints with cold. I'll crack him to pieces. I will kill him with rheumatism." "And I," said Eastwind, "will blind him with " brothers, if he escapes the rest of you, and, when I get my cloud blanket over his eyes, I will smuggle him off into Hudson's Bay, where I have carried thousands like him; and, when I get him fairly bagged, he may coast around its narrow shores till he dies." "And I," said Southwind—but they all laughed at him, and wouldn't let him go on. "You're too mild to hurt any body, brother," said Northwind, and that ended it.

Before Iceberg got out of Baffin's Bay, Westwind grounded him in water only a thousand feet deep, for you know, that is shallow for an Iceberg. But his steadfast friend, Undercurrent, lifted him off and carried him safely through, though Westwind fought hard to drive him ashore. But when Westwind gave it up, fierce old Northwind came down out of his ice-mountains, mad to see Iceberg broken away from his chains, and getting safe out to sea. Very savagely did he roar about the walls of the berg, until the ice came to be a deeper purple, and cracked open with cold. "Ah!" said Iceberg, "Northwind cracks my sides, and makes me blue with cold, but all this cold and bluster makes my great crystal heart strong, and sends me more swiftly toward the South."

"Let me at him, brother," said Eastwind, impatiently. "Let me give him a wet-sheet-pack." With that, he swept his great arms full of fogs, and threw them into Iceberg's face, smothering him almost to death. When he was fairly blinded, Eastwind threw his arm about him, and went tugging away to pull him into his great bag of Hudson's Bay. But, you know, the whole iceberg family live with seven times as much of themselves under the water as they have above. What we see above the water is a huge mountain, but, after all, it's only the head of the iceberg out of water. Now, while Eastwind was tugging away at his head, Iceberg's good friend, Undercurrent had a stronger hold on him, and pulled away toward the South. For though the fog was around his head so that he could not see, Undercurrent knew the roads through the sea, for he had traveled these dark paths for a thousand years. So all the fog, and all the plotting of Eastwind, came to nothing. Iceberg sailed on to the South.

At last came the Southwind. His gentle breath smelled of spices and orange-groves. Iceberg liked him. But Undercurrent tried to pull him away. Iceberg liked the balmy Southwind the better, because he had never been used to such caresses.

Then Southwind introduced him to a new friend called Gulfstream. Now Gulfstream felt genial and warm to the heart of Iceberg, and he said: "I've never had anything but snow and cold in my life, and there can be no harm in enjoying my new friend's." So he left his good, steadfast friend Undercurrent to follow Gulfstream. For weeks, Iceberg enjoyed the gentle songs of Southwind and the soft caresses of Gulfstream. Then he found there were rills of water running from his side, and that the waves made inroads upon him, so that great caves were forming all around him. He did not feel as strong as usual. "I will get out of this," he said. But alas! his good friend Undercurrent was now far away. There was no help for him. And so he rotted in the sunshine until he was only a shell; whereupon all the other winds fell upon him, and, because his strength was all gone, he perished miserably.

Not the rude storms of life are our greatest enemies, but the blandishments that take away our strength by degrees. —S. S. Scholar.

A Critical Greek and English Concordance of the New Testament. Prepared by Charles F. Hudson, under the direction of H. L. Hastings. Revised and completed by Ezra Abbot, LL. D., Assistant Librarian of Harvard University. Pp. 534

This is the first Greek and English Concordance ever prepared and published in America, and in many respects the most valuable ever published anywhere. It contains

1. References to all places where every Greek word in the New Testament may be found—four or five constantly-recurring particles excepted.

2. All the English words and phrases by which these Greek words are rendered, both in the text and in the margin of the common version.

3. All the various readings derived from hundreds of ancient manuscripts, written before the discovery of printing, and embodied in the four best editions of the Greek New Testament—those of Griesbach, Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles—to which are added the confirmatory readings of the very ancient but recently-discovered Sinaitic Manuscript.

4. An index of English words, by means of which persons entirely unacquainted with the Greek language can find the original for any English word in any passage, and can trace and ascertain its usage and the manner of its translation throughout the entire New Testament, and can also detect any various readings occurring in the four critical editions above named.

It is prepared to supply the existing demand for a Greek Concordance so critical that it will present the latest results of sound textual investigation, and afford the most learned student valuable information which he can nowhere else so easily obtain; so simple that the mere English reader can use it with facility in his studies of the Word of God; so cheap that the multitude may purchase it by a trifling outlay; and so compact and portable that it may be made a constant companion of the traveler, the student, and the evangelist.

It leads the English reader to the Greek original and its various readings. It leads the Greek scholar to the common English translation. It saves space by omitting extended quotations, referring inquirers to the passages themselves for further information. It furnishes the Greek alphabet, with rules of pronunciation, which may be mastered by an hour's study, and thus obviates the necessity of an imperfect representation of the Greek words in the English characters. It classifies the passages where each Greek word occurs, reveals at a glance the number of ways in which it is translated in the New Testament, shows in what senses it is most frequently or more rarely used, exhibiting in their order, first the primary, and afterwards the several more remote senses of the different terms. It presents all the important various readings. It combines with these peculiarities a cheapness of cost and convenience of form which bring it within the means of the student, enabling him to have it always beside him.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 10, 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

IT is said that half a century ago Jewish converts to Christianity were rare; now there are three thousand in England and twenty thousand on the Continent. But this does not prove that the Jews are all to be converted; it only goes to show that the gospel is fast accomplishing its work of taking out of all nations a people for God. May the number of the elect—the true Israel, soon be made up.

ONE writes to an exchange, commending an article that had appeared in its columns on "the state of the dead," "the old wine is better than the new." The oldest doctrine we know of on that subject is found in an early page of Genesis, and teaches of the state of man in death—"Unto dust shalt thou return." Later ideas must be stamped "new wine," and no improvement.

WE are often referred to the fact that Theodore Parker declared that Jesus taught eternal misery; and the impression is given, that so far he was an impartial judge; and we ought to accept his understanding the gospel thus, as very strong evidence that the doctrine is really there. But our good friends forget that Theodore Parker was just as strong an immortalist as any of them. We freely admit that if man is immortal then the letter of the gospel, directly and by inference, does clearly teach everlasting conscious misery. It can only be got rid of by an allegorizing interpretation, such as was the [illegible] of Origen. But man is not immortal: therefore everlasting punishment does not imply his everlasting existence.

A correspondent of the Secretary says on Eph. 1 : 21:

> We suggest that the common interpretation is the true one. We would translate and paraphrase thus: When (epeide) it was manifest that the world by wisdom knew not God; that philosophy, and culture, and science, falsely so called, befooled men; it pleased God in his wisdom, through the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

—Science taught that death was the final extinction of being, that to enjoy this life was the highest wisdom; or else it taught a kind of faithless half-hoping immaterialism. But when God sent his Gospel to save men by "the foolishness of preaching," its first messengers preached "Jesus and the resurrection" —the Life-giver, and the time of reward. They never mentioned immortal souls, not even once. How different now. Shall we return to the old ways and preach "Jesus and the resurrection," instead of Paradise or heaven, or hell at death?

WE write this editorial upon the back of a solicitation to publish the following advertisement:

DIVORCES.

Absolute divorces legally obtained in New York, Indiana, Illinois, and other States, for persons from any State or country, legal every where; desertion, drunkenness, non-support, etc. sufficient cause; no publicity. No charge until divorce is obtained. Advice free.

—This is the second application we have received within a brief period for the publication of similar announcements. We put it on record as a sad sign of the times. There is not only a general loosening of the marriage tie, but men are found not only ready to make gain of such cases as present themselves, but who publicly tempt the dissatisfied, from whatever cause, by promise of secrecy. A wife or husband may be divorced and know nothing about it. Such cases are of continual occurrence: their increase is invited, and the public morals are so loose that public opinion cannot prevent the open prosecution of this vile traffic in our courts of justice. And besides all this, it is well known that nine-tenths of these secret divorces are early followed by a new marriage. This fact reveals the iniquity of the whole business.

Dr. Bonar bemoans the fact that "the tendency of the world's religion just now is to reject the blood and to glory in a Gospel which needs no sacrifice—no Lamb slain." Various "Evangelical" journals have taken up the lament. But why is this? is a fair question. Has not the church, itself, unconsciously introduced this contempt for "the blood" by sinking the Scriptural doctrine that "the life is in the blood," and substituting therefor the notion that the life resides in an immaterial immortal essence? Only in the light of the Pauline doctrine that "Christ is our life," can the shedding of blood in sacrifices be understood. The world's reasoning from the Church's premises is plain. The church says, You are all immortal, and must live forever. Then we are not dependent upon any one for existence. But, says the church, unless you believe, you will be eternally miserable. The day has been, perhaps, when people generally believed this, but it has gone by. They quietly say—There is a mistake somewhere, and adopt the best refuge they can discover, from their doubts,—Restoration, or what not—and "reject the blood" just because they do not know what it means. It means that Jesus purchased life for us with his own life: that "God hath given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son," not in our own immaterial souls.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

MONDAY, Dec. 27. Being detained at Savannah, on my way to St. Joseph, from our meeting at Empire Prairie, I called in to see some Freedmen who were keeping Christmas in a social religious way. They were singing as I entered, and their spirit and deportment showed that they had made a good use of the liberty they have enjoyed for a few years past. I addressed them for a short time with words of encouragement and then bade them good night. I hope that I may ever conduct myself towards this poor and oppressed race as a friend, and a Christian. The wicked prejudice so long cherished against them, has no foundation in right or justice. It is a violation not only of Christianity, but humanity. For a colored man has right and justice on his side, when he asks, "Am I not a man and a brother?"

I enjoyed the hospitalities of Br. J. Fellows, long a friend of the colored race. I was made welcome, and felt at home, although he does not entertain Advent views. He thinks the moment he dies his conscious spirit will go to heaven, to God who gave it. He is a sort of Spiritist; pleasant and genial, but firm and fixed in his opinion.

At 10 a. m. took the cars for St. Joseph. On the way our engine broke down, at some distance from any depot. Eld. I. G. Encell, of the Christian church in Maryville, Mo., in whose chapel I spoke last week was a passenger. So we had time for an exchange of views, on baptism, the state of the dead, the resurrection, and the new earth. He has some views in common with the Adventists, though not of us. He told me that they had a number of members in their church, who hold to the sleep of the dead and destruction of the wicked, and they are allowed to enjoy their views on these subjects and esteemed as acceptable members.

After two hour's delay we were enabled to continue our journey.

My plans for meetings in St. Joseph not being carried out, I met by invitation, with the M. E. church this evening, in their protracted meeting. A brother of the pastor, Eld. Stocking, spoke from John 5 : 25, explaining it in reference to conversion, and spiritualizing the whole subject, as I used to do forty years ago. It sounded old fashioned; but I now see it is not true. Yet he made a good turn of the subject to bring souls to Christ. Many texts are used to convert men that are sadly misapplied. Mr. Abbot, called "fighting Abbot," one of the early Methodist preachers, once took the text in Luke 19 : 21—"But I feared thee because thou art an austere man." He read and explained it—"Because thou art an oyster man." He went on to show how oyster men dug the oyster out of the mud, and compared it to digging sinners out of sin and wickedness. At the close one of his hearers said, "Br. Abbot, you have misquoted and misapplied your text. It reads "austere man." "Oh, never mind," said Br. Abbott, "seven souls were converted."

But the spirit, earnestness, and sincerity of these brethren in their work, is worthy of the highest commendation. And in taking the part to which I was invited, I felt free, and spoke out of the fullness of my soul. At the close, I was invited to preach to-morrow evening, and so I shall stay over one day.

I was invited to enjoy the hospitalities of Mr. Geo. Buell, one of the city council, an enterprising citizen, and a successful manufacturer of woolen cloths of all kinds. He is a Baptist in religion, but liberal to all. I found a generous welcome and had a free conversation on the questions relating to the Advent faith and hope, with him and his pious and intelligent companion, who is inquiring into "these things" that we teach.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 28. Have had interesting conversations during nearly the whole day on the prophecies. Many are eager to get an understanding of these things. At night I spoke in the M. E. church, North, for Br. Stocking. I had a kind reception and spoke on the first and second advents of Christ. There was good attention to the subject. The pastor, and others followed me in remarks, and the meeting seemed like an old fashioned Methodist meeting. They have a good state of things among them, and quite a number have been converted of late.

MONDAY, Dec. 29. Left for Columbus, Kan. Stopping in Kansas City about noon, I called upon Br. Lougan of the Christian, in whose office I found the TIMES of Dec. 20. At this distance from home, it is more pleasant to see THE TIMES, though I may have seen some of its contents before. I spent my time in the a. m. in Eld. Lougan's editorial "sanctum." The Christian advocates the doctrine of the late Alexander Campbell, and is prospering.

I took supper with Eld. Logan at a restaurant I was surprised on looking over the bill of fare to find prices so high. 75 cts. for tenderloin, and 50 cts. for sirloin steaks, and other meats in proportion. 20 cts. for one slice of bread made into a milk toast, and ten cts. for a glass of milk. These last sufficed for my supper. But to eat a full meal would cost a dollar and more. I told the proprietor I thought his prices "rather steep." He replied that he thought I must have come from the East. I told him I did, and that we had no such prices there. No, he said, and you do not pay such rents and taxes as we do. I pay $2,200 rent, and taxes are five per cent. Well, said I many of you must fail some day. Yes, he said, forty or more have failed since I have been in business here. But I did not see how he could fail at his prices if he had much custom.

The Kansas City Times says to-day, that "taxation is eating out the life of the far West. The poor are becoming poorer every day, money is getting scarcer, and agriculture less remunerative. All taxes are heavy, but heaviest of all is the School Tax. In Kansas City it is now one per cent on the valuation of all assessed property, while in Illinois it is only one-eighth of one per cent. Things in this country are going ahead too fast, and a crash must follow."

At an early hour I took a bed in the sleeping car, on the Fort Scott Railway, though they did not leave until 11 p. m. In the morning when I arose, I was near my stopping place at Columbus, one hundred and fifty miles away. This is very different from jolting over the prairies in an open wagon with the thermometer ten degrees below zero. But we must take things as they come.

COLUMBUS KANSAS.

On arrival I went directly to the residence of Hon. Amos Sanford, who with his family greeted me kindly and made me welcome to their home. After breakfast we made arrangements for our meetings, and I shall enter at once upon my labors here.

Columbus is a new town, not two years old, and located on the Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad, which is to be carried through the Indian Territory, to Texas and the Gulf of Mexico. The village is on the open prairie, and one looks in vain for any timber, or elevation, as far as the eye can reach. It makes a New Englander feel that he is living out of doors. The wind has full sweep, but the climate is mild, and comfortable in winter, and genial for the rest of the year. The land is rich and yields plentifully both fruit and grain. It is indeed a beautiful country. Much of the land in this vicinity was originally given to the Cherokee Indians, and is called "neutral lands." When the Kansas City and Fort Scott Railroad was projected to run through these lands, Mr. J. F. Joy of Detroit, Mich. secured by purchase a large portion of these lands in Cherokee, Crawford, and Bourbon counties. Many people were then living upon them, and had made valuable improvements, which they have refused to give up. They claim that the land they occupy is government land, and are willing to pay the government price, $1.25 an acre, and no more. At present this people are in conflict with the government, and have brought the matter before the United States Court for a decision.

THE MEETINGS IN COLUMBUS

I am to hold a series of meetings here. Our hope and trust is in Christ who always causeth his people to triumph in the way of obedience and holiness. We are to have the Baptist chapel, as at present they have no preacher. Dr. Childs, formerly of Worcester, Mass., is here giving us his sympathy. His father was one of the early believers in 1840, and his children continue to proclaim the faith, in distant States. At night I spoke to a select audience; the county court being then in session, some lawyers and professional men were in, and some of the people that were not often seen at church. I spoke from Ps. 37: 10, 11. At the close, questions were asked respecting the nature of future punishment by the Disciple preacher, and, also, by Judge Fry, which were answered, to the apparent satisfaction of the audience. One question asked by the preacher was—"If the wicked were punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and glory of his power, where are they?" I replied, nowhere. They are destroyed, or if you please, annihilated. He tried to get round this, or meet it by other texts, such as Matt. 25 : 46. But here I showed that kolasin translated punishment meant, cut off, prune, punish, and did not mean eternal life in misery.

SATURDAY, Dec. 31. I spoke at night on the "blessed hope," and pressed on all to secure it, and so be prepared to meet Christ at his soon coming. This is a new doctrine to most of the people here. They look for long years to come, and expect to see these vast prairies of the West all settled before the Lord shall come.

On our return from the meeting, with Br. Sanford, I stopped at the Court House where the settlers were holding an indignation meeting. Word came to-day that the Secretary of War had sent United States troops to the Miami settlement, in Linn County, to remove the settlers, many of whom had squatted on these lands, as government property, and have made many improvements. The people in this county are in the same condition as to their land titles, and so they make common cause, and talk rebellion, rather than give up their homes. The meeting was as warlike as anything I have seen since the great rebellion. It filled me with sadness to see such a state of things among those who had left all in the East to obtain new and comfortable homes in the West. I can but hope that some compromise will be made between the settlers, and those who claim to own these lands.

This is the last day of 1870. It has,

"Paid its homage to the tomb;
The tale is told,
The last of all and end has come,
And sadly here
It lies silent and cold upon the bier.
Another laps of time
Has rolled into eternity's abyss
Its cares, its fears,
Its bright sweet days of bliss,
Its hopes sublime,
Its sighs and bitter tears
Has brought decline.

The closing year
Has carried with it to the tomb
Our bosom friends,
Perhaps a father lies beneath its gloom—
A mother dear—
While o'er their pale cold faces memory bends
To drop a tear.

We bid adieu
To the sweet memories and departed hours.
The past is gone.
The present—all that we can claim as ours
We are passing through,
So let our lives with morning dawn,
Begin anew."

But to enter the New Year with all my weakness and unworthiness; with its temptations, and dangers, I feel the need of the help of that dear Savior who has promised to be with his people to the end. And my prayer in the language of the poet is:

"Rock of ages cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee;
Let the water and the blood,
From thy wounded side that flowed,
Be of sin the perfect cure,
Sanctify and make me pure.

Should my tears forever flow,
Should my zeal no languor know,
This for sin would ne'er atone,
Thou must save and thou alone:
In my hand no price I bring,
Simply to thy cross I cling."

As a sinner saved by grace, this is all my hope, and in the last hours of the dying year of 1870, I throw myself at the foot of the cross, and cling to it as my only hope of entering the kingdom of God when Jesus comes with crowns of life and glory for his waiting ones.

The General Conference.

We are receiving requests that this Conference be not held East of Chicago. Thus far the only invitation for the Conference has come from "East of Chicago." If the church in Chicago, or churches further West do not care enough about it to invite its sessions among them, they must not complain if the officers accept a cordial invitation elsewhere.

A Protest.

'Tis Christmas day, and in remembrance of him who came as the Babe of Bethlehem, and bore so much for me, I cannot refuse, to perform what to me is not a pleasant duty, to protest against some of the errors of our times, as he protested against them in the days of his flesh; sometimes in words of sharpness, but mostly in love, with tenderness and gentleness; to those who knew better than they taught, severity; to others kindness was the rule.

Let me then in the spirit of Jesus, address a few words to you Br. Himes: This I think I have a right to do,—first, because I trust we are brethren in Christ. Second, since 1842 you have always found a shelter with me, when in the providence of God you have journeyed this way. Third, because for all these years I have been a supporter of the paper with which your name has been associated as Editor, mostly approving your course, always when you were found planting your standard on the eternal truth, and not led by other influences. Fourth, because you have said, "Write, and I'll publish your articles against our position," when I have privately objected and protested against the course pursued to disseminate error. And, fifth, because you teach the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead, and the annihilation of the wicked, and couple these with the doctrine of the second coming of my Lord, and call it, Adventism, and leave no means untried to make them appear as one and the same; and something, now and again thrown out in THE TIMES, that looks very much like a sneer (I can find no better word, if sneering can be done in print), at the believers in the second coming of Jesus at hand, who do not receive the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead, and utter extinction of the being of the wicked.

One of the most favorite modes in the editorial columns has been to seize upon any and every paragraph from every source, containing an error, or the truth loosely or improperly stated, and to often by a gloss or sophistry make error appear to be truth, seeming to forget, that asserting an error, will never make it truth. [We must protest against this statement. We cannot find room for notice of one half, nay one quarter of the weaknesses of immaterialism that come to our notice. Ed.]

I would not say, needlessly, the things that I do; But shall I suffer sin upon my brother? nor would I grieve one, without cause, who has evidently spent the best part of his life in trying to serve the Lord; certainly not without proof in hand, and from his hand whom I address. Yet not to, nor of him alone, do I write these things; for that which I protest against, has been carried on by the principal writers and supporters of THE TIMES.

Let me cite The Editor's Journal, in THE TIMES, Dec. 13, '70. There we find the proof of the means taken to propagate error. Here the writer seems to know what he says, even appealing to the original Greek for the truth of his position. Was it done that those who are "without education" (viz: a knowledge of the Greek), might take it for granted, that the editor had settled forever the meaning of two difficult passages, which stand in the way of our believing in the unconscious state of the dead and the annihilation of the wicked?

If we still cling to the words of Jesus in their God-like simplicity, we are classed with "Plato and some other heathen philosophers," as holding, "old, heathen, papal views of the nature of man and the future state," and this because when we read the words of Jesus, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Believing that when Jesus says both soul and body, he means two, i. e. soul and body, I care not—at this time—what distinction is made between the soul and body: they are two, and not one and the same thing, any more than two blind men are one, which are in danger of both falling into the ditch together, if one lead the other.

But the point of the sophistry is found in the gloss given to the words of Jesus, "not able to kill the soul." This we are told, means, "could not destroy their hope of the resurrection to eternal life." In this portion of Scripture which is here used (viz: Matt. 10: 28), Jesus says not one word about the hope of the resurrection to eternal life. No, not a word! Nor can he be made to teach it here, only by inference, which, when let loose is a mighty influence and source of error.

The lessons taught by Jesus in the passage under consideration, with its context, plainly were, that whatever might befall them here, whilst confessing him, they would not be forgotten; if he remembered the sparrows, that not one of them fell to the ground without our Heavenly Father's notice, and that the very hairs of the heads of his people are all numbered, is it possible that the disciple can be forgotten? Let them kill the body, if they will, you will be taken care of. What Jesus meant by confessing them before his Father in heaven, does not appear in this connection, certainly he does not teach them here, that, it is the resurrection to eternal life; certainly not the sleep of the dead; but if any thing bearing upon the question, it is the reverse.

The editor says: "On another text, Matt. 25: 46, 'These shall go away into everlasting punishment' he [Benson in his commentary] says, 'Not destruction or annihilation, as some would understand the word kolasin (to mean).' But this is just what it does mean, [says the editor] and not eternal life in torment."

Now this is a bold assertion, and plainly stated—italicised by the editor. Let us see if kolasin, used in Matt. 25: 46, means destruction or annihilation. In Hudson's Greek and English Con. it reads kolasis,[1] Matt. 25: 46, punishment; and the same Greek word in 1 John 4: 18, kolasis, torment. Now why did our brother make such a bold assertion, with the light of an author who held views like himself? Were C. F. Hudson and Ezra Abbott, in the work referred to, mistaken, when they gave to the word kolasis the rendering, punishment, torment? Let us try again: "kolasis, punishment, chastisement; torture, the rack; a punishment or infliction;" etc. Rev. John Groves' Greek and English Dictionary. Not one of these words are what our brother says kolasin means, viz: destruction or annihilation. Quite another word must be found to sustain the position our brother has taken, and one that is not found in Matt. 25: 46.

These thoughts are expressed in love, and not for disputation, but for the truth's sake, and to warn my fellowmen against a growing evil, against which I am bound to protest. That they believe in the unconscious state of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked, I am not protesting. If it satisfies your minds, believe it. But do not make use of sophistry to sustain it, nor mistake a fact to make others believe with you. If you can bring forth true and fair arguments from the word of God to sustain your position, do it: but do not do otherwise, lest you be found handling the word of God deceitfully, and though saved (by virtue of your faith in the atonement of Christ), your works, like wood, hay and stubble be burned up, and you suffer loss.

With these parting words, and solemn protest against the course pursued in the "Voice, now Times," I bid you adieu, making this one request, that you will do me justice, by publishing this protest in reasonable time, in the A. C. TIMES, and send me a copy, but discontinue the paper to me, as I can no longer receive it into my house, until purified from its present course.

THOS. WARDLE, M. D.

Philadelphia, Pa.

THE EDITOR'S RESPONSE.

Dear Brother Wardle: there are many things we might say in reply to your protest, but we prefer to leave all insinuations of knowing better than one teaches, of having convictons of right and truth stifled by influences of whatever nature, and intimations that you are a better judge of what is eternal truth, or its standard than we—let all this go for what it is worth, and we will give our attention to the direct charge you bring.

You charge that we disseminate certain doctrine as Adventism. We do! We did not give it that name; the views bore the name when we adopted them. The name rightly belongs to them, as associated with the doctrine of the speedy coming of Christ and the object of his Advent, and we intend to stand by the name, and the principles for which it stands, while life is granted us, or until Jesus comes.

You charge that we treat opponents with sneers, that we use sophistry in replying to their arguments, or loose statements, etc. Now as to sneers—they are favorite weapons in our opponent's armory; we do not intend to use them. Very likely we sometimes show the same contempt that you yourself exhibit of their improper or loose statements of "truth" you say, but we say error.

The charge of sophistry I deem unjust, and am happy to be confirmed in this belief by the testimony of hundreds of readers, at least as candid as yourself, and some of them converts from the views you yourself maintain.

But let us come to the instances cited. In dealing with Matt. 10: 28, is seems to us you justly incur the very charge you bring against us—of using "bold assertions," rather than giving strong reasons. We read in that chapter, besides the promise of confession, or threat of denial before the Father, which clearly belongs to the resurrection, and judgment, that, "He that findeth his life [Greek psuche—soul in v. 28] shall lose it; and he that loseth his life [soul] for my sake shall find it." Pray tell us when the martyrs of Jesus are to receive the life [soul] they lost for his name's sake? Does not Jesus here plainly use the word life (soul in the Greek) in a double sense? And this being indisputably the fact, is it incredible that he used it v. 28 in the same sense that he uses it elsewhere in the same discourse? We do not accuse our brother of sophistry; but he certainly deals in "bold assertions."

If we had never said anything concerning this word kolasin in THE TIMES; if the argument and all the facts bearing upon the case had never been presented to our readers (they have been frequently), there might be some justice in your attack on us founded upon a construction of a brief passage in our "Journal." But we did not mean or expect to be understood as speaking of the critical definition of the Greek work kolasin, but of its sense in that passage—a sense demonstrated, to our mind, over and over again by a variety of arguments. Benson asserts that it means "not destruction or annihilation, as some would understand the word kolasin," to which we replied that that is a correct understanding of the word kolasin as there used. The Savior reaffirms the ancient doctrine that the wicked shall be "cut off."

Moreover, when you say that Hudson and Abbott render kolasin "punishment, torment," you are mistaken, They simply give in a concordance (not a lexicon) the translations found in King James' version. Prof. Hudson in his works gives a complete view of the uses of the word kolazo, and the argument from it, and from parallel passages, demonstrates, to our mind, that in Matthew 25: 46 it means eternal death. Critically, the primary meaning of the word is to cut off. From this the secondary senses of restraint and punishment are derived. Here is Donnegan's definition in full:

> Kolazo, properly, to cut off, or take from, to curtail, clip, or mutilate; hence to prune; generally, to chastise, lit and met, to correct, to check, to moderate, to chide, to rebuke, to punish, to keep back; to hinder, repress, to keep down.

This is the definition from a standard Lexicon of classic Greek. Robinson sustains it, also. The value of "the Rev. John Groves'" definition, and, also, Prof. Hudson's real opinion, may be gathered from the following remarks of Hudson himself:

> "Now the Greek word in question occurs elsewhere in the New Testament, as a noun or a verb, only in Acts 4: 21; 2 Pet. 2: 9; 1 John 4: 18. In the two former instances it will not be claimed that it should be rendered "tormented." And though our English version renders it by "torment" in 1 John 4: 18, the propriety of this is questioned by Grotius, Hammond, Beausobre, L'Enfant and Schleusner, for various reasons; and it is otherwise rendered in the Syriac, the Arabic and the Vulgate. And the sense of "torment" is given by only one lexicographer of the Greek at large, Sturg, who offers this as a fifth sense, citing a single passage, and allowing even there another sense instead. Moreover, in the Septuagint Greek the word occurs twenty eight times, the actual punishment being literal death in almost every instance. In one case a senseless idol is said to be punished."

Thus Hudson, with more to the same effect. But enough. I kindly submit that no brother animated by the spirit of Christ and love to me, and well-informed upon the use of this word, would have seized upon a carelessly worded expression, with intent to hold it up to the world as a proof of a misstatement of facts with the intention to deceive the unwary.

Much more might be justly said in reply to your "protest," but enough. We have been bringing, and expect still to bring "true and fair arguments from the word of God," and elsewhere, to bear on this question. Not less than ten or twelve correspondents within a week have acknowledged their efficacy, and many similar testimonies, as well as the convictions of our own conscience confirm us in the opinion that our columns stand in need of no such purification, as you suggest to be needful.

We regret parting with an old subscriber to our publications, of near thirty years standing, and the more, because we feel sure that your strong feelings will not allow you to do as some have done—refuse to take the paper on principle, and then read a neighbor's copy. We reciprocate your feelings (except the insinuations) and kindly say farewell.

EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

In the Press Room.—No. 4.

WHAT I THOUGHT AND HEARD THERE.

After our Press and Engine both broke down the same week a little while ago, I had to work quite late one night. Our work had been hard and very trying for some days. It was about ten o'clock, and I was musing upon what lies near my heart—How best to advance the cause advocated in THE TIMES. I must confess that not only had my patience and powers of endurance been severely tried, but that I was tempted to feel discouraged. But in the midst of it I heard a voice, which I easily recognized.

Press. Don't get discouraged.

W. Why do you say that?

P. Oh! I thought you looked rather tired to night, and was afraid you might get disheartened over the disappointments of the few days past. I do the best I can. You know I told you I was mortal, and liable to break down. And if I do the best I can in my place, knowing that when worn out I shall be thrown away and lost, you ought not to be discouraged, even if you should wear out; for I have read enough to know that those who wear out in the cause of Christ, will not be broken up and lost like an old press, but will be renewed by and by in a resurrection.

W. Well, old presses are sometimes made over, so that they are as good, or even better than new.

P. Are they, though? (This thought seemed to give it a glow of pleasure, but it added) Yes, but they wear out again, do they not?

W. Of course.

P. Well, it is good to be renewed, even to last a little while, but it seems to me that the prospect of eternal life, with power and every possible means to enjoy it, ought to sustain you under every trial. Does it?

(That was coming pretty close home. I didn't know just what to say. I could see the force of reasoning, and yet I knew there had been times when I had given way to fears, if not actual doubts in time of trouble. However I could truthfully say, that of late I was trusting more fully than I ever had done before: so I said:

W. It surely should do so; but I have not always leaned upon this hope as I should have done.

P. Well, "confession," I have heard, "is good for the soul." And as my question has called it out, I am glad I asked it.

W. So am I. The thought has done me good already. I feel as though I had been resting.

P. I wish I could ask the same question of all the readers of THE TIMES; perhaps it would suggest some healthful thoughts to their minds.

W. I will put it in the paper for you.

P. That will be good; but after all, I have noticed that things put in the paper don't tell as they do when you can talk right at a man personally. I wish I could talk with them all just as I do with you.

W. But your talk through the paper has done some good, already. We have a good many letters from persons that your remarks set to thinking, some of them very encouraging, too.

P. That may be so. I'd like to see evidence that every one had been awakened to a new interest in the cause we are engaged in. They ought to be willing to do as well as to bear. Why, how can they do too much for a being who offers them eternal life so freely.—I understand, eternal life is a free gift; it isn't earned by works; but I believe a man can't have this hope in him without going to work. Dont the Bible tell about "dead faith?"

W. Yes, it does.

P. Is it good for anything?

W. The Bible compares it to a dead body.

P. Then of course it is not good for anything, unless it is revived. If a dead man is raised to life —revived, he can be useful, but if he remains dead, he only counts as so much inanimate matter in the universe. So if a dead faith is compared to a dead body, it must be a poor thing to have. If any have a dead faith, I would advise them to have it revived, and be themselves created anew in their Savior unto good works. Would'nt you?

W. Yes indeed. I wish these truths printed in the paper made as much "impression" on every one as on you.

P. I think of it every day when I am idle. I say to myself—"From two to five thousand tracts might have been printed to-day, if they had only had the paper. Why dont those who have the means help to do it, I wonder. This Advent doctrine is so good, and it is so evident that it is true, I don't see what they are thinking of, not doing more to sustain it. They ought to get new subscribers, and circulate the papers and tracts so freely that I should be kept busy all the time. Why don't they do it, I wonder." There, you can tell them what I think about it.

W. I will.

P. Are you going to have any new tracts soon?

W. We are getting ready to print Br. Collins Address, and his Objections Removed, soon, in one tract of 32 pp. specially for distribution.

P. That's something that ought to be scattered everywhere. I'd like to print a million of them. How much would fifty thousand cost?

W. I couldn't tell without calculating closely; at a guess I should say perhaps $500.

P. Well I wish somebody would set me at the job. But whether they do or not, don't you get discouraged. This is God's cause, and he will surely take care of, and raise up friends to help it. So keep your eye on the promise of eternal life, and suffer patiently the righteous will of God. No matter what others do, you do right, and keep to your work, and the crown of life will be yours at last.

Here the Press stopped talking, for the papers were all printed, and I felt as though the conversation had paid me well for doing a little "night work."

WILLIAM.

I hold it to be a duty to be liberal and generous even to the illiberal and narrow-minded; and it seems to me a pitiful thing for a man to aspire to be true and to speak truth, and then to complain in astonishment that truth has not crowns to give, but thorns.—Rev. F. W. Robertson.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

During the last three months of 1870, the Crisis received 669 new subscribers. We received during the same time about 300. Hence we conclude that Adventism has been introduced into about 1,000 families within three months, which indicates progress.——In the minutes of the last Maine Q. M. we find the following incident: "One man came out for prayer, and confessed he had been converted among the Baptists, years ago, run well for a season, became interested in Advent views, obtained some of our books to examine. His minister found it out, and warned him against them, advised him to burn the books. He did so, and lost his faith and hope in Christ. Has traveled over a large part of the world since, the last seven years, without light. The Lord led him into this meeting, and awakened his heart to turn to him. There is an example of blind ministers slaughtering the lambs of the flock."——An Advent chapel will be dedicated at Newcastle, N. H., Jan. 18, and another at South Berwick, Me., Jan. 22. These are the results of meetings with the New Hampshire Mission tent.——Br. Workman writes from Auburn, Ill., "We still have the labors of Br. A. S. Calkins, which may the Lord bless more and more, and we see the fruits in this neighborhood. Our prayer-meetings are continued with interest, and well attended."——Br. Shaw sends us two new subscribers and says, "So much for the effort in Oneida (Ill.) last fall. There is a growing interest to learn the truth."——Br. Wm. Ingmire, one of the first champions of Adventism, and over seventy-years of age, is still preaching in Western New York. Recently he preached every day for eighteen days. His strength, physical and mental, holds out remarkably.——While Br. Whitney was absent on his last tour in West Virginia, his trunk containing the best of his clothing, and valuable books, in all worth about $100, was stolen from Br. Chambers' house. He says, "All things work together for good to them that love God;" and looks with new interest for "the better land where thieves will not break through or steal."——Br. Wm. Sheldon is preparing to leave soon for a tour South, in Alabama and Georgia. He will write for THE TIMES concerning his trip.——Brn. L. H. Davis and Wm. McCullock commence a protracted meeting in [illegible] this week.

On the Frontier.

A visit to the churches on the frontier in Hutchinson District, Minn.

Left Minneapolis Nov. [illegible] and met Sr. McKee at Delano, [illegible] to be my traveling companion [illegible] visit. Reaching Lake Howard [illegible] our good pioneer, Eld. Rayn[illegible] in waiting to take us to our first halting place. We found quite a change in the mode of conveyance, it taking nearly the same length of time to pass over three miles, it had taken to go forty-six by steam. But the day was fine and we really enjoyed the change, and gave much credit to our driver for his skill in escaping stumps, and dodging the low limbs of trees, that looked rather threatening as we approached them. In good spirits we reached the comfortable home of Br. Corey, just in time to share with his kind family their frugal meal before going to our evening appointment. Our appetites were keen, and our welcome so hearty that we enjoyed more than we have time to express. The mules were again in readiness, for a ride of three miles to reach our appointment with the Victor church. As the evening closed in the stumps were not so easily avoided, and on several occasions we found ourselves clinching each other and the wagon box, to keep our seats in the old fashioned chairs we were seated in. Br. Corey and family accompanied us, and though the road was rough and limbs frequently brushed our faces, we enjoyed every passing moment, my companion occasionally favoring us with one of the songs of Zion, joined by several of our company.

Arrived at the school-house, Lo! in the hurry of getting off, fixing the little ones so they would not take cold, the lamps had been forgotten. One tallow candle, and two lanterns were all the light we had. The house was well filled, but how should we talk to the people, without light sufficient to see the congregation. The subject chosen was a familiar one, and the silence with which the people listened evinced the deep interest they felt. Several warm exhortations followed, and the meeting closed quite triumphantly. The morning found us refreshed in body and mind, and with Br. Wood, a Methodist minister, Br. Corey and others, we started on our way to the Quarterly Conference at Lake Hook,"a distance of fifteen miles. Our pioneer started ahead to clear away the fallen trees, and guide us along a newly made road. The sisters rode with the baggage most of the way, while the brethren walked. The "blessed hope" was our theme during this novel ride, and often were our hearts lifted up in praise and thanksgiving as we wound around those towering, stately trees. Truly "day unto day uttereth speech," and calls loudly upon man for tributes of praise and thanksgiving to his maker.

The company of our Methodist minister and his niece added much to this day's enjoyment, and when we reached Eld. Wm. Parsons' home a distance of ten miles, we were prepared to enjoy our four o'clock dinner. The weather was that of our Indian summer. Overcoats and shawls were quite burdensome. We could but number this day among the most pleasant of our pilrgimage. Hymns of praise from my companion, joined by several others, increased the joyfulness of the few hours that sped so swiftly by. No one of our little company will ever forget our summer's day ride on this the first day of December.

Though Sr. Parsons was not expecting us until the next day, and was not in readiness to receive so generous an addition to her family, yet the warm hospitality extended made all feel at home. Our sister is a model house-keeper. Every thing around her house showed this; a positive proof that a comfortable log house can be made as cheerful and inviting as the more costly mansions in the city. Eld. Raymond soon after reaching here, took to scouring the neighborhood on horseback to apprize the people of an evening meeting. One would hardly have thought so large a congregation could have been gathered in so short a time. The spiritual standing of the little flock gathered, spoke well for their faithful pastor. A short sermon from Acts 2: 11, was backed home to many hearts by the spirited exhortations that followed. One arose and requested us to pray for her. While most knelt in prayer, solemnity rested on all and it was after the usual hour of closing service when our meeting ended. The next morning it was arranged that Sr. McKee and myself should accompany our faithful guide to call on a sick sister, who would not be able to attend the Conference. We were to ride on horseback. Not having mounted for such a ride in thirty years, I felt a few misgivings about my ability to perform it. Choosing one of the gentle mules for my own safety, while my companion and Eld. R. mounted their noble steeds, they took the lead. My faithful long-eared donkey did the best he could to keep up. An hour's ride brought us to the dwelling of the sick one. Our tarry was short, but comforting and encourgaing to the sufferer. We felt well paid for the effort we had made. Returning we found with quite a delegation from the Silver Lake church, accompained by their pastor, Eld. Randall. All were of good cheer, and we proceeded on our journey. To have seen our wagons and ox-teams would have given an impression quite different from the realiity; for those accustomed to frontier life know well how to provide for emergencies. Bedding, baskets and pails were in abundance. Reaching the Lake our company halted. Oh! how beautiful. The smooth surface of the water on one side, and the towering hight of the trees on the other, with the dense forest in front of us. Soon we reached the school house. It stands alone in the thick forest, and as we had passed but three log houses in our five-miles ride, we wondered where the people would come from to fill the house. The meeting this evening was of good interest; a short practical discourse was followed by many blessed testimonies. Two arose for prayers; the companion of one of the brethren from Silver Lake, and the niece of Br. Wood. Thus the good work began. These precious souls were converted, and ere this meeting closed our Methodist minister joined hands with Br. Parson in the fullest, warmest fellowship. "Thank God" was the unanimous expression of many present, and the feeling of every heart. Eld. Parsons immediately propounded his name for membership with that body. Yes, he who six months before would hardly consent to read a tract, now in fullness of Christian sympathy stood ready to join the despised ones, and was most joyfully welcomed among them. Our meeting closed at a late hour, full of interest.

On Saturday at the close of the Conference service, Eld. Raymond gave us one of his best soul-arousing practical discourses. All were fed. An intermission of an hour and a half gave ample time for dinner. The day was fine and the table spread in the woods, and all invited to help themselves. A more cheerful happy company I never met. At 2 p. m. preaching. Text: "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do." The earnest attention, the falling tear, and hearty response, gave satisfactory evidence that the word was accompanied with the Holy Spirit's power. This meeting closed with an increase of numbers and interest, to meet again in one hour. A request had been made for a discourse on Baptism in the evening. Two expressed a desire for baptism and it was arranged to attend to this ordinance on the Sabbath, which found most of the friends gathering for a prayer meeting at an early hour. The house was too small for our congregation. All could not get in. My curiosity was not a little excited to learn where all the people came from. Some we learned afterward came six miles with their oxen; others, with horses, still farther. The best of attention was given through the entire meeting though the services were very lengthy. At one oclock we repaired to the Lake side. The season was a most blessed one, deeply impressive. The candidates came up out of their watery graves rejoicing. Others would have followed had they have come prepared. After the baptism, all, there were twelve double wagon loads, were kindly invited to tarry until evening service, with Br. Price, who lived quite near the school house. Refreshments in abundance had been provided by Sr. Parsons and others. At an early hour we gathered for our last meeting. Br. Wood gave a short discourse from Ps. 133: 1. A better text could not have been selected, and the many spirited exhortations which followed, led all to feel we had "the best of the wine at the last of the feast." Several more resolved to be identified with the cause of God from that glad hour. One of these was Br. Parsons little daughter. At the close of our meeting a stout-hearted sinner arose and asked an interest in our prayers. Others were deeply impressed with their need of salvation. "Thank the Lord," again and again, was the language of many hearts as then our Quarterly Conference closed.

From J. P. Russell, Montgomery Co. Ind.

The minds of the people in this vicinity are being somewhat exercised on the life and death question, the nature of the Kingdom, destiny of the wicked, etc. We have a few in our neighborhood of Age-to-come Christians. They number eight or ten in all, and have constituted a church. They have a preacher who with his brethren vigorously oppose the doctrine proclaimed from our pulpits generally. After much talk of debate on the above questions, a public discussion is at length arrived at. There are two propositions:

1. That the church of which I am a member is identical in doctrine and practice, with the primitive church in the days of the apostles. Wm. Holt of the Christian (Campbellite) church affirms. The second is in the same words of the first, and A. S. Hatch affirms. Although the points of difference are not mentioned in the propositions, it is expected they will appear in debate. Four or six days will be occupied, beginning Jan. 2.

As far as I am concerned, I can only hope that the truth may in some degree be advanced, and that this may be a prelude, or entering wedge to a better understanding of these subjects. I have membership in the Christian Church of this place. I consider this the best I can do for the present. I cannot unite with the Age-to-come brethren of one faith. Although we agree on some of the principal doctrine yet they hold to some which are irreconcilable with my convictions of Scriptural teaching.

I differ materially, too, with the brethren with whom I am identified; and I shun not to declare my views. Yet we live in harmony. We have regular social or prayer meetings weekly; preaching monthly. The Advent Christian Times to me has become indispensable. Let it still come. Although you, Br. Himes, are to me personally unknown, yet I pray that your labor of love in the Lord may not be in vain; and that you and I and all the saints who look for, and love the appearing of our Redeemer, may attain to immortality through Christ, who is our life.

From J. W. Barroughs, Neponset, Ill.

I have just returned home from a seven week's tour in the Master's vineyard, as usual, tired and worn by excessive labors. When shall I rest? Not till Jesus comes, which I hope will not be long. I left home Oct. 29. Held a few evening meetings in Wilton, Will Co., with good result. Four expressed their desire to be united with us. I next attended my regular appointment at Ancona. Found the brethren wide awake in the cause of truth. Next to Long Point, and held meetings through the week. Interest good. Two came out and united with the church. From there we went to Streator, La Salle Co., a new and thriving town, and a new field of labor. I spent the week here, had a good hearing, and trust some good seed was sown. Some said that they never heard the Scriptures made plain before.

From Streator went to Vermillionville. Found the brethren struggling against the tide of opposition, and remained with them a few days. A goodly number came out and united with the little church there, which gave them new courage. I baptised seven, all heads of families.

Returned to my appointment at Ancona. The church here are holding three prayer meetings a week. Next to Rook's Creek, a new field, where our dear Br. Bailey is laboring. Gave them five discourses, baptised two, and left them feeling much encouraged. On my way home stopped and filled my regular appointment at Long Point, where I found the church in a healthy condition.

I am satisfied that time is very short; therefore I am determined to do all I can for poor fallen man, while time lingers. Soon probation will end. Soon it will be said, "Let him that is filthy be filthy still, and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still.

From "A Friend," Cincinnati, O.

Seeing the frequent allusion in your own paper and others, to the present increasing wickedness of the world, the expression of our beloved Savior on his way to crucifixion, comes to mind, and indeed it is only recently the meaning became clear to my mind: "If they do these things in a GREEN tree, what shall be done in the DRY?" If men are capable of such ferocity at the outset, in the beginning of a dispensation which is to make clearer the plan of salvation, what may not be expected as time advances, and they who are evil disposed have had time to devise new mischief, new plans of torment, toward the end of the dispensation. This state of things must come, before the Savior makes his appearance; persecution of God's people, and a "time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation," will soon be with us, a reality at our own doors. This may not appear probable, but the word of Jehovah, and of Christ, is sure and stronger than probable appearances. Then will be seen "who is on the Lord's side." Our chief support in such time will be a living, acting faith in our Redeemer, and education of our mind to a familiarity with the expected troubles, remembering through all, that our Savior has prayed for us that our "faith fail not." We will find it necessary to have frequent self-examination as to whether we are prepared to move joyfully to the stake, rather than renounce our hope; we will also find inward temptation to sin and iniquity, of a much stronger character than heretofore. Those who have been unaccustomed to swearing, will find themselves in mental ejaculation of fearful oaths; temptations to lewdness and lasciviousness, will be found of increasing strength; all this because it is the "last days" of "the prince of the power of the air," and he knows that his time is short. This question will never again be asked—"Art thou come to torment us BEFORE THE TIME?" for Satan well knows, that at our Savior's next appearing, his downfall is certain, and the period, or age, of his destruction inaugurated. Let us then closely watch our own heart and mind, "that no root of bitterness spring up," giving shelter to Satan or any of his emissaries; let us "put on" now (if ever) "the whole armor of God," and be thankful, constantly grateful, that we have it to put on. (See Eph. 6: 11-18.)

—It is well known to the readers of The Times that we do not look for, or believe that another time of persecution awaits the church. The dangers to the church are of another character. More persecution would do us good. But it is well to be prepared for any event. —Ed.

From E. P. Daniels, Jackson, Mich

We are trying in our weak way to build up the cause of Zion in this wicked city, with the help of our Heavenly Father, in whom we place our entire trust. But we have not forgotten that the enemy of man is also at work, making his appearance in our midst in a form that would hardly seem, to the worldly man, otherwise than the advocate of our dear Lord. Let me now inform you of what is to take place in one of our (so-called) houses of worship. Next Sunday evening, at the Congregational chapel, is to be held a Lottery Festival, to be conducted after this manner: Each lady is to wear a calico apron, and from the same piece of calico of which the apron is made is to be made a gentleman's neck-tie. The latter is to be placed in an envelope, sealed up, and given to the man at the door of the chapel. On entering, the gentleman will pay to the door-keeper ten cents, for which he will receive a sealed envelope containing a calico neck-tie, which he will place about his neck. He advances into the room, seeks out the lady that wears a corresponding apron, escorts her to a table laden with luxuries provided for the occasion, and spends his dollar to feed the little lamb that clings so fondly to his arm. The dollar and ten cents goes for the purpose of purchasing an organ, and hiring a good musician to play it for them!

Would our kind Father be pleased with his people, if through our great desire to become a strong and prosperous branch in his vineyard, we should make his house a den of thieves rather than a house of worship? This is but one of many such deceptive arts that will in all probability be held up as an inducement for the young and old of this city to worship Mammon's pleasures rather than the living God. I pray that the time may soon come when they will see the folly of such things, and that ere it is too late to be saved. How many there are that we might lead to the truth, as it is in the word of God, if those who profess to be the leaders of God's flock would speak against such wickedness.

God grant that our efforts here [illegible] not be in vain. We have no org[illegible] church, but of those in regular [illegible]ance on our preaching ten are of [illegible] Advent faith, and about as many more are deeply interested. Aid us with your sympathies and prayers, that we may not die but have everlasting life.

From R. B. Dutton, Iron Hill, Iowa.

I have just got home from holding a series of meetings about twenty-five miles away. There was some fruit. When I look at the prophecies, and turn my thoughts over to the old world, I can see great need of a speedy preparation to meet our blessed Lord, and to be awake to the interests of the unconverted. May the good Lord send more laborers into the vineyard, and especially into this part of his moral heritage. I expect to leave home soon again, to work for my Master. Sometimes I feel as though I am fulfilling one Scripture, at least, and that is, in forsaking all for Christ. Nearly all the preaching I hear (except myself) is once a week, and it comes a great way through the sunshine and storms, but not with noise and bustle, like the fashionable preaching of the day, but with a still small voice, like the Spirit of him who raised up Jesus from the dead. It is THE TIMES, Br. H., and how it gladdens my heart to read its pages. And while I read I feel that Spirit attends the word. I would to God every family could have it to read, and I am trying to do all I can to induce men to take it. But times are hard, and hearts a great deal harder. But they will soften by and by.

From J R. Preston, Windfall, Ind.

Our readers, especially those in Indiana, will be glad to learn of the interest at this point. I came here Dec. 17, and commenced a meeting in the village of Windfall and continued one week with good interest. We then moved out to the school house near Br. Junk's mill, where we have been at work since. Day before yesterday I baptized four happy souls in the likeness of Christ's death. To-morrow six more very promising young persons are to follow in the same path of obedience. I some expect Br. E. C. Andrus to be with me over Sunday; at least I have written him to come. If he does he will tell you of the interest after this date.

I expect to organize a church next Sunday if the Lord will. I realize more and more the blessedness of our glorious hope. I desire to be found giving meat in due season when Jesus comes. I expect to return to Michigan next week to commence another year's labor with the churches of Gilead, Algansee, Camden and Woodbridge. That God will revive his work at all these points is my prayer.

From L. B Lotsfrich, Wayne Co., Iowa.

There is a good work commenced in this part of God's vineyard. Br. S. K. Gibson has held a series of meetings this neighborhood, which I feel has been the means of doing much good. Several confessed the truth as it is in Jesus, and were buried with Christ in baptism, among whom were myself and wife. And I believe there are others that are "almost persuaded." May the word which has been spoken here be "as bread cast upon the waters that may be gathered many days hence.

Our old friends are all opposed to us in our belief, but we are doing all we can to show them the beauties and truths of God's word, that they with us may be watching and waiting for the appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, when he shall change these vile bodies and fashion them like unto his glorious body. We have been making some efforts to secure the labors of Br. Gibson for the ensuing year, and hope we may be successful, as there is a large field, and good material to work on. May God bless him and his labors wherever he may go.

I have received two numbers of THE TIMES and prize it very highly. I ask an interest in the prayers of all God's people, that I may ever be faithful, by patient continuance in well doing, seeking for glory, honor and immortality, and receive eternal life.

Truth is far more certain in the Bible than in the mouth of an angel.

Conference Minutes

Missouri and Iowa.

The S. W. Iowa and N. W. Missouri Advent Christian Conference, met at Maryville, Mo. Dec. 9. Eld. J. V. Himes was present to preach on Friday evening to an intelligent and appreciative audience. The transaction of business was characterized by harmony, earnestness and despatch. Most of the churches reported by delegates, and the reports were of a cheering character. Some of the churches were enjoying a revival season, and receiving additions to their membership. Some who heretofore suffered much from opposition, report that "opposition is melting down. Several new churches and ministers have been added during the year, and many new interests, not yet developed into organized churches are springing up all around us, which greatly cheers us, in the good work in which we are engaged. Some of the churches have no regular preaching, but are, nevertheless, in a living condition.

One important feature connected with the business of the Conference was the inauguration of a plan for the districting of the Annual Conference for Quarterly Meetings. The Committee to whom was commited this matter, submitted the following, which was adopted: "That the Conference consist of three districts, located as follows: First District Adair, Cass, and Pottawattamie counties, Iowa. Second District Page and Taylor counties, Iowa. Second District Page and Taylor counties in Iowa with Nodaway Co., in Missouri. Third District Andrew, DeKalb, Gentry, and Davis counties in Missouri. Two brethren in each District were appointed to call and organize each of the above Quarterly Meetings. In the First District Brn. A. Collins and P. Nokes; Second District D. Q. Kent and D. O. Hink. Third District H. Billmire and A. F. Dugger.

It is expected that these meetings will be so arranged, as to time, that no two meetings will occur at the same time, so that there can be a correspondence kept up with each district by delegation, or otherwise, and thus be a mutual help to each. We hope for large results from this plan. Let those brethren who have charge of this matter give due notice of the time and place of the meeting in their respective districts through THE TIMES.

The meetings for worship were well attended and a deep interest was manifest while Br. Himes unfolded the prophetic Scriptures to a deeply interested people, blending the practical with the doctrinal in an earnest, pathetic style that reached the heart, as well as the intellect. Much of misrepresentation, and missapprehension and prejudice was removed by the earnest and practical style in which the prophecies were expounded. The spirit of inquiry has been waked up, and we shall look for fruit.

Our Conference closed on Sunday evening. A church was organized consisting of 16 members. Praise God for this result. We will thank God, and take courage, for God is with us of a truth.
D. O. HINK, Sec'y.

Missouri.

The first Q. M. of the third district of the S. W. Iowa, and N. W. Mo. Advent Christian Conference, met at Reed's S. H. DeKalb Co. in the town of Pope, Dec. 24. Eld. H. Billmire, was elected President, and Br. John M. Blivin Secretary, and Thomas H Griffith Treasurer.

Visiting brethren were invited to take part in the deliberations. Eld. J. F. Nicholson, represented the church in Empire Prairie. It was organized in April 13, 1869, by Eld. A. F. Dugger, with seven members. Under the labors of Eld. Billmire, it has prospered, and now has 30 members, living in unity.

Dea. W. B. Combs said that the church at Hazel Dell, in Clermont, had recently enjoyed a good revival, under the labors of Br. Dugger, and 22 have been added, making their numbers thirty.

The church in Davis Co. is in a low state, and needs help, and will have it soon. Besides there are openings for labor at Wilborn in DeKalb Co. and Elm Grove, Fontainbleau, Rochester and Whitesville, in Andrew Co., and many other places. We feel the need of help.

The Conference is cheered with their prospects, and determined to do more to spread the gospel of the kingdom.

Voted. To invite Eld. Andrew F. Dugger, to labor with us one third of the time for the coming year. And while laboring among us we will give him a support. We will also give our proportion of the expense of providing Eld. Dugger with a horse, in connection with the two other quarterly conferences.

The subject of a campmeeting was suggested, and the other quarterly conferences were invited to consider the matter, that we may unite in sustaining an annual campmeeting, to be held the last of August or first of September, with the Annual Meeting of the State Conference.

Voted, That this Conference do fully sympathize with the General Western Conference, and regret that we cannot bear the expenses of delegates, to its next session in February, '71.

Voted, That John M. Bliven, be licensed to improve his gift.

Adjourned.
JOHN M. BLIVEN, Sec'y.

The General Western Conference.

At the next session of this Conference the following questions will be brought up for discussion:

1. The heathen theory of future life.
2. The Jewish theory of future life
3. The Bible theory of future life.
4. Church government.
5. Church order.
6. Redemption.
7. The Restitution.
8. Future Retribution.
9. The proof of Jesus' Messiahship.
10. Why preach the coming of the Lord near?
11. Should we be a distinct people?
12. Signs of the times, and the periods.
13. The ancient and modern theories of a resurrection.
14. The future home of the saints.
15. The various theories of immortality.
16. What is the soul and spirit of man?

The meeting will probably be held sometime in February. Time and place are yet to be arranged. Any who can attend will please select one or more of the above topics, as subject for essays to read at the Conference. Thirty minutes will be allowed for the reading of each essay. Those who choose topics will please signify their selection to Eld. Wm. Sheldon, Brodhead, Wis., by letter.

Book Notices, Etc.

If any one wishes to trace the advance of the so called progress of the age we advise them to take Woodhull & Claflin's weekly, and they will get a mirror of the most intense and lawless radicalism of the day. It is published by two able women. Its course in the relentless exposure of the financial humbugs o the day we can heartily endorse. We wish it were as true to God and the Bible as it is to the public interest in those things. Published in New York city $4 a year.

THE ADVENT REVIEW has been enlarged to nearly the size of THE TIMES, and has a fine new dress. Whatever views we may have of its doctrines, we freely concede that "The Review" is ably conducted and contains much interesting matter

THE INDEPENDENT of New York has lost its late talented editor, and is to be henceforth conducted by the able publisher, Mr. Henry C. Bowen We suspect that the change will not really prove a loss; but that the Independent will be found a vastly more acceptable visitor in all Christian families than it has been for some months, or longer, in the past. $2.50 a year Address The Independent, New York city

The "Advent Christian Quarterly," published at Buchanan, Michigan, is received. Every number contains expositions of Bible doctrines from the pens of the best writers, among its own and other denominations. It may be ranked among the best of religious publications.—Allegheny (Pa.) Times

LITTELL'S Living Age is universally acknowledged to be one of the most valuable publications of the day. It has a special field and occupies it so well that no other journal of its class seems called for. It proposes to give to American readers the cream of foreign literature, and keep them fully posted in the literary progress of the old world. This it has done to the satisfaction of the public for many years, and for the coming year they offer unusual attractions

Br. Jacob Blain of Buffalo, N. Y., sent to the Brethren at our last Q. M. at Honeoye, a work called A Recast of the Credibility of the Scriptures, by J. H. McCulloch, M. D., in two vols. Each volume contains 400 pages. He offers to sell the two for the small sum of $1.75. Either one is richly worth $1.50 or more. If was very much pleased with the book. Send and get them, and thereby help dear Br. Blain and at the same time get a good book.
D. COGSWELL.

VICK'S Floral Guide for 1871. The first edition of one hundred and fifty thousand copies of Vick's Illustrated Catalogue of Seeds and Floral Guide, is published and ready to send out—100 pages, and an Engraving of almost every desirable Flower and Vegetable. It is elegantly printed on fine tinted paper, illustrated with three hundred fine wood engravings and two beautiful Colored Plates. The most beautiful and the most instructive Floral Guide published. A German Edition published, in all other respects similar to the English.

Sent free to all my customers of 1870, as rapidly as possible, without application. sent to all others who order them for ten cents, which is not half the cost. Address James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

Appointments.

NOTICE.

At the Ohio State Conference, Br. C. D. Jefferson proposed to furnish a Mission Tent for the State, provided the Conference furnish two preachers to go with the tent. The following brethren were appointed to solicit pledges for the above purpose, and report to the president of the Conference, on or before the first of Jan., the amount pledged; and if sufficient is pledged, Br. Jefferson will proceed to furnish the tent, and we shall endeavor to put two good and faithful laborers in the field to labor for the cause of truth: A. B. Benedict, Nevada, O.; J. M. Treadwell, Fairfield; Martin Agner, Rockbridge; S. F. Rodgers, Norwalk; A Mackey, Seal; Martin Bacon Bucyrus; P. T. Light, Plymouth; Dr. H. Kester, New London; Br. Beadly, White House, Lucas Co.; Thos. Boardmann, Shiloh; Henry Rust, Stryker; Wm. Sednall, Pioneer; Geo English, Montpelier; N. R. Cheadle, Delta; Geo. B. Terwelligar, Antwerp. Dear brethren, now is the time for action. Will you take hold of this matter at once, and report your success, so that we may know what to do? and the Lord will bless you.

E. MCCULLOCH, President of Conf.

P. S. Churches desiring the first quarterly conference held with them, will please notify us immediately E. M.

The church in Buchanan have invited the General Conference to hold its next session in this place. If any other churches desire it, let them speak soon that the officers may arrange.

Those of you who wish my labors, will please write to me soon. Some have written at times when I could not go. If you still wish me to come, write and I will try and arrange with you. New fields are desirable.

MINNESOTA.

The Ninth Annual Conference of the Advent Christian church at Minnesota will convene at Winona, Friday morning, Jan. 20, at 9 a. m.

Special attention is called to the following, to facilitate the business session.

1. The officers of the district Quarterly Conferences will prepare written reports of business transacted in their respective districts the past year, together with amount of money raised by quarterly and church [illegible].

2. As it is desired to close up the statistics of the Conference at this session, each church is requested to report its present membership, and the number added the present year.

3. Each church is entitled to one delegate for every eight members, and as business of special importance will be transacted, every church ought to be represented.

4. In case any of the preaching brethren are not able to attend they are specially requested to report by letter.

There will be a service on Thursday eve previous. Persons coming on the cars will be met at the depot by Brn. P. Ramer and A. A. Gilbert. Those coming with teams will call at either of their houses.
EDWIN T. HIMES, Sec'y.

Br. Ramer informs me that the Advent Christian chapel at Winona is so far completed that it will be ready for the use of the Conference. It is built on Broadway, near the corner of Winona street. He also says he will effect an arrangement with the Winona and St. Peter railroad so that brethren can come over that road at reduced rates. We can not state positively that the arrangement is now made, but before buying tickets on that road let the friends inquire for excursion tickets Conference at Winona.

AT HOME.

Albert Barnes, the celebrated commentator of the Scriptures, died at his home in Philadelphia, on Saturday, Dec. 24. He was seventy-two years old. His various Commentaries have reached a circulation of over a million of volumes, and have exercised no small influence upon the theology of the age.——It is an astonishing fact that men in New York are making money by sending out circulars offering a large sum in counterfeits for a small sum in genuine greenbacks. The fact that they receive frequent responses speaks badly for the morals of the community. Of course they simply keep the greenbacks they receive, and never send anything in return.——For four years past the adjoining borders of New Hampshire and Vermont have been the scene of more than fifty marvelously successful burglaries and robberies, and only of late has the leader, or any of the assistants in these depredations been discovered. The leader has at last been captured. He is only twenty years of age, and his band was composed entirely of young men, mostly sons of substantial farmers. What next?——Mr. Wm. Welsh, one of the special agents of the government to inquire into Indian affairs, reports frauds that must make every honest man blush that the country's professed servants can be guilty of such things. The Indian agents with salaries of $1,500 a year, in four years accumulate large fortunes. We have no room for the facts and figures.——Congress will send Commissioners to San Domingo to inquire into the expediency of annexing that island-republic to the United States. The scheme meets with bitter opposition.——It is seriously proposed to build the Darien ship-canal over the mountains, and supply the locks with water by means of steam pumps! Such a canal would probably pay full as well as that across the Suez. It might benefit commerce, but not the stockholders, we should think.——The United States steamer Saginaw, missing for a long time, was wrecked in October last on a barren island in the Pacific. A portion of the crew, after intense sufferings, made their way to the Sandwich Islands. Help has been despatched, which it is hoped will reach the island in time to rescue the ninety souls left there, from starvation.——Election riots, with loss of life, are reported at points in Kentucky and South Carolina

ABROAD.

The War.

It is almost impossible to obtain any definite idea of the progress of the war from the brief, crude, and conflicting despatches that reach us through the cable. The Prussians have certainly captured some of the French positions, forts, on the east side of Paris, and seem to be closing in upon the city. Elsewhere, in all engagements of any importance, they are still successful. But the French are making herculean and desperate efforts to rally their forces, and, apparently, have no intention of surrendering, or giving up the unequal combat. There are rumors of an attempt on the part of the French to carry the war into Germany. The late fighting seems to have been quite severe, and the Germans have met with severe losses. Indeed, there seems to be great sacrifice of life on both sides.

Not All Union.

Details of the discussions in South Germany relative to the adjustment of the new Confederation show that, in spite of the brotherhood in arms, and the general increase of patriotic feeling, the old distrust of Prussia is not yet dead. Even the war has had its share in developing this, since, in the language of a writer at Dresden, "the 'suspicious elements'—namely: the Bavarians, Wurtembergers and Poles—have almost always been placed in the front, the Prussians being usually brought up as reinforcements, and often obtaining the credit of a victory which they only helped to secure after it had been substantially achieved by their southern allies." This state of feeling is adduced to explain the important privileges demanded for and granted to Bavaria in the new Bund, just as it certainly inspired the bitter sarcasm uttered by a Bavarian radical, that if Prussia continued her arbitrary policy, "she would have to demand from France not only Alsace and Lorraine, but also Cayenne."

Russia Ready.

A Vienna correspondent of the Tribune says: Railroads now connect with the southern part of the Empire, one entering on the Black Sea at Odessa, and the other in the Sea of Azov; and thus the disadvantages which Russia had to contend with in the Crimean war are totally abolished. The Fremdenblatt, a semi-official Vienna journal, has reported that troops are now concentrating by means of these roads: that the Moscow-Kiew-Balk-Odessa Railroad is transporting men to the shores of the Black Sea at the rate of 2,000 per day; that northwest of Jassy, on the Roumanian frontier, the land is alive with Russian troops; that in Poland the soldiers on furlough have been called in: and "under the pretense of preserving the country from famine, the communes there are ordered to fill their granaries, and for the benefit of land-owners, lists are required of all horses available for military purposes." The idea prevails in Vienna ministerial circles that Russia is perfectly armed and ready for war. Some doubts have been expressed here of the capacity of Russian generals; but the same may be expressed of the other Powers. The Prussian journals are urging the adoption of the Russian personal obligatory military system.

Austria.

Never has a constitutional State had such a budget to show as this Austrian budget of 1870. It would have been better, says the Presse, to have acknowledged frankly that Austria could not pay her debts this year, than for her to have fumbled in the State-purse, as she has done, and at last have brought out before the eyes of the astonished world her very last kreutzer. But the worst has yet to come. If, as the Neue Freie Presse thinks, the expenses for 1871 will be quite equal to those for 1870, and if, as in the plain fact, Austria has no more capital to fall back on; the empire will be saddled at the end of next year with a deficit of 56,000,000 or thereabouts.

It is certainly time for Austria to set her house in order, and keep her eyes steadily averted from anything like a warlike foreign policy. And this is no doubt the view of all her responsible statesmen. The empire is passing through a great political and financial crisis. The late liberal measures have as yet brought little fruit but discord. A people which all at once finds itself free, after centuries of despotism, is not wont to exhibit the graces, directly it has received the privileges, of freedom. Whether Austria will in the end be able to form a nation out of the 16,000,000 Sclaves, 9,000,000 Germans, and 5,000,000 Magyars who fall now under her sway, or whether these diverse elements will eventually be attracted to one or other of the two great kingdoms which lie to the north or east of her, must be determined mainly by the actions of her leading statesmen during the next few years.—Tribune Vienna Cor.

The Mont Cenis Tunnel.

This victory of Peace which is heralded by the cheers and congratulations of the workmen in the Mt. Cenis Tunnel would have brought more renown to Napoleon III., were he now on the throne of France, than all the improbable triumphs of the impossible campaign in Germany which he planned six months ago. French engineers suggested and French commerce built the Tunnel under the Alps as clearly as that French genius conceived and French prowess accomplished the Passage of the Splugen. The mighty work was begun when Napoleon was at the hight of his power and popularity, but before it was finished his overthrow was complete. A main incentive to the work was the commercial rivalry of France and Germany. It was thought in France that if the project of Mt. Cenis became a reality before that of Mt. St. Gothard, the connecting link between the Northern and Southern railway systems of Europe would be under the absolute control of France. Now she is not only powerless to prevent the completion of the Mt. St. Gothard Tunnel, but Germany has possession of the Rhine and its parallel iron routes to Switzerland, and thence through neutral territory access to the completed Tunnel. Further, France may yet lose the territory of Savoy, in which the Tunnel lies, and with her authority all that control of the line which accompanies possession of the country through which it runs.

Greece.

Affairs in Greece have taken a new turn. There has been a change in the ministry, which has been transferred from Russian to the power of English influences. As the new Premier has been the advocate of a Turkish alliance and co-operative system in the suppression of brigandage on the frontiers, as well as the uncompromising enemy of Russia, it is possible that Greece will enter into the Eastern question much as Sardinia entered into it during the Crimean War

Spain.

Gen. Prim did not live to see the new king he had placed in power. He was shot by an assassin, and after lingering a few days, died Dec. 29. The assassins, a party of six, have not yet been captured.

W. A. C. P. ASSOCIATION NOTICE.

At the next meeting of the Association the following amendments to the Constitution will be offered for consideration and action:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. The Board of Trustees (or the Association,) shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to ART. III., Sec. 2. But the person filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of ART. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That ART. IV. be amended to read:

ART. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

SEC. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

SEC. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed

SEC. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate; and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty-five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

ART. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences: each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to ART. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make ART. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

The precise date of the meeting at which these amendments will be considered, has not yet been fixed. It will probably be in March; and may be held in Buchanan.

WM. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

New Appointments.

Preaching brethren will please make this department interesting by sending in their appointments, for new fields especially. In appointments, give place and date of meeting; and make "notices" brief, pointed and stirring.

☞ Always write appointments on a slip of paper by themselves

EXCURSION TICKETS.

Persons coming to the Minnesota Conference from stations on the Winona and St. Peter Railroad—St. Peter, Mankato, Owatonna, Utica, etc.—can obtain excursion tickets of the station agents, which will be good from Jan. 19 to the 25th, inclusive.

THOS. K. ALLEN.
PHILIP RAMER.

The next Q. M. of the Hutchinson District of the Minnesota Conference, will be held at the H. mer S. H., near Br. Truxel's, Silver Lake, commencing Feb. 3, and holding over Lord's day.

S. R. WOOD.

There will be a Q. M. of the Iowa Christian Conference at Boylan's Grove, commencing Jan. 27. All who can attend are cordially invited. Come praying that the cause may be furthered on by your coming. May the Lord's blessing attend this meeting. ALONZO RAYMOND, Sec'y.

THE

ADVENT CHRISTIAN

QUARTERLY,

EDITED BY

JAMES H. WHITMORE AND WILLIAM L. HIMES.

The Quarterly is one of the most interesting and valuable publications of the day. Its articles are comprehensive, and give full or complete views of the subjects treated, in the handiest form for preservation. And it is the intention of the editors to give the best writings, original and selected, of the best writers on all topics related to the Second Advent. No articles will be inserted which are not deemed worthy of permanent preservation by the Bible student for study and reference. A year's numbers form a volume of 320 pages of matter, containing besides the valuable original articles, which can be found in connected form nowhere else, the cream of books, magazines and other publications, that would cost ten times the price of the Quarterly.

It will be the ambition of the Editors to make the Quarterly so interesting and valuable as to be a necessity to every well-informed and well-posted Adventist; while the publisher will endeavor to offer it on such favorable terms that none can afford to be without it.

The contents of the two numbers already issued, of the present volume are as follows: Loss and Gain, by A. A. Phelps; The Restitution, by O. R. Fassett; The Popular Superstition—Ghosts, by the same author; Object of the Present Dispensation, by Dr. McNelle; The Kingdom of God, The Davidic Covenant, and The Time of Reward, Editorial; Review of Stuart on Future Punishment, by Henry Constable; The Doom of the Unjust, by the same author; The Final Punishment, by an able orthodox scholar and minister; A Question for the Times, or the Parable of the Leaven, selected; The Witch of Endor, by Prof. Walter Scott. The Stumbling Block, by Rev. Samuel Minton, with other valuable articles.

The next number will be issued early in January; and contain articles by Edward Falconer Litton of Scotland (on Jewish Knowledge of a Future State); by H. Bonar (from the Quarterly Journal of Prophecy); by J. H. Whitmore (a Review of Dr. Clark's essay on the two fold nature of man, containing the arguments which Methodist journals assert made an immaterialist of Eld. R. Wendell); by the Editor of the Rainbow; by Prof. Barlow of Dublin, and others.

Remember that only a limited edition of the Quarterly is published. Subscribe at once, and secure the entire volume. Only about a dozen sets of Volume I. remain, and they cannot be duplicated.

TERMS: Single copies, one year, $1. Seven copies to one address, $5.

SPECIAL RATES.

To all subscribers for the ADVENT TIMES the Quarterly will be furnished at 75c. a year.

To new subscribers for both, we will send the TIMES and Quarterly one year for $2.50.

The Quarterly and Bible Banner one year, $1.50.

To ministers, of any denomination, we will send the Quarterly for

FIFTY CENTS A YEAR!

320 pages of valuable reading matter

FOR FIFTY CENTS.

☞ Will not the ministry call the attention of their congregations to these liberal offers, and endeavor to secure new subscribers; thus extending our circulation and enlarging our usefulness.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 31, 1871

A YEAR ago it seemed that the military preparations of Europe had attained their utmost proportions; and the people could not possibly bear greater burdens in this direction. But the present war has revolutionized military affairs, and a new era has commenced, which promises to make every ablebodied man a soldier. Sweden is already moving for a re-organization of its army, and the German system will, undoubtedly, be adopted, in whole or in part. Austria proposes a total "war budget" of $41,000,000 for 1871, not for purposes of actual war, but to bring her army into a condition of efficiency rivalling that of her neighbors, that she may be ready for war. How much Russia is doing in the way of military preparations, no one but her rulers can tell. We only know that she is putting forth immense efforts to make herself the strongest military power of the world.

And able statesmen now declare that England must arm as never before. She has allowed Germany to crush France, with scarcely a verbal protest, and out of the conflict united Germany has risen, to become a great naval as well as military power, and dispute with Great Britan the sovereignty of the seas. England must enlarge her navy, and increase her armies, or become a second or third-rate people.

And, worst of all, these preparations for war, mean actual war. It must come. Exactly as for years the present conflict has been anticipated because of the preparations for it, so the world looks for a general European war, because the nations of Europe are all getting ready for the fray. It is not the Millennium that is at hand, but trouble, and wo, and sorrow. It is not better days for the world, but "worse and worse." We do not mean, either, that there are not better days in the immediate future. We mean they are not there as the church and world expect. We have seen the signs that proclaim the kingdom of God "nigh at hand." Light is breaking for God's people; but the lamp of the wicked—men and nations—is about to expire in eternal night.

THE political power acquired by Romanism in this country was manifested a few days since in a most unexpected way. France had been freely congratulated upon the overthrow of the Empire, and a great meeting was called in New York to congratulate the Italians upon the completion of their unity by the addition of Rome to the nation. But this was to endorse the action of Victor Emmanuel in taking away the temporal dominion of the Pope, which is execrated by American (not Italian) Romanists. Leading men, politicians of all parties were called upon to assist in this demonstration recognizing the 'advance of civil liberty in a long down-trodden land. But not a politician dare attend. Says the Evening Post (N. Y.): Politicians of both parties, refuse to approve in public the union of Italy, for fear of offending the Roman Catholics." And the philosophic Nation declares that virtually Romanism is the established religion of the State of New York, controling the city, and through it, largely ruling the State.

This is a remarkable state of affairs. The rulers of our greatest city and State, of both the leading parties, are corrupted by the Catholic Church!

Nor is this all. A scheme is in progress, which will, doubtless, be successful, for adding another Romanist State to the Republic, namely, St. Domingo. While the country is asleep, the Roman hiararchy is at work day and night, no longer laying its foundation in this land, but building thereon a structure which may yet be the prison of our boasted liberties. God's curse is out against the nations that uphold the apostate church of Rome. Shall America share in it?

ADVENT.

"Now it is high time to wake out of sleep."—(Rom. 13: 11.)

Awake—again the Gospel trump is blown—
From year to year it swells with louder tone,
From year to year the signs of wrath
Are gathering round the Judge's path,
Strange words fulfill'd, and mighty works achiev'd.
And truth in all the world both hated and believ'd.

Awake! why linger in the gorgeous town,
Sworn liegemen of the cross and thorny crown?
Up from your beds of sloth for shame
Speed to the eastern mount like flame,
Nor wonder, should ye find your King in tears,
Even with the loud Hosannas ringing in his ears.

Meanwhile he paces through the adoring crowd,
Calm as the march of some majestic cloud,
That o'er wild scenes of ocean—war
Holds its still course in heaven afar;
Even so, heart-searching Lord, as years roll on,
Thou keepest silent Watch from thy triumphal throne.

Even so, the world is thronging round to gaze
On the dread vision of the latter days,
Constrain'd to own thee, but in heart
Prepar'd to take Barabbas' part:
"Hosanna" now, to-morrow "Crucify,"
The changeful burden still of their rude lawless cry.

Yet in that throng of selfish hearts untrue
Thy sad eye rests upon thy faithful few,
Children and childlike souls are there,
Blind Bartimeus' humble prayer,
And Lazarus waken'd from his four day's sleep.
Enduring life again, that Passover to keep.

The Anxious Cry.

I am anxious to put before you, as clearly as I can, a few of the events that will take place at the sounding of the trump, that our hearts may be led to wait more earnestly, and that we may be stirred up to send forth the cry with increasing urgency, "Lord Jesus come quickly.

Does he not wait to hear the cry? When king David was returning to his kingdom, after the defeat of his enemies, he might have made a triumphant entry at once, but he would not. When he came to the borders of the land, he waited in order that he might send a message to his own beloved people, his flesh and blood. He sent to the house of Judah, saying, "Why are ye the last to bring the king back to his house? Ye are my brethren, ye are my bones and my flesh; wherefore, then, are ye the last to bring back the king? And when the message reached the people, we read that he bowed the hearts of all the men of Judah even as the heart of one man, so that they sent this word unto the king, "Return thou and all thy servants." So the king returned, and came to Jordan, and Judah came to Gilgal to go to meet the king to conduct him over Jordan." May it not be for this message of welcome that our gracious Lord like king David, is waiting? Does not his loving heart long that his own flesh and bones, his own church, for whom he gave his life, should as one man send up this cry, "O Lord return?" I believe that we are beginning in these days to hear the sounding of the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh;" that he is sending many a messenger to us to lead us to pray for his return; and I earnestly hope that we shall have our hearts bowed as the heart of one man, and that our united cry may be, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." I think he waits for it.

And what will happen when he comes? What will be the first great event that shall take place when his trumpet sounds? "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God." And what will he do? Will he first of all set in order the things of the universe, and occupy himself with the great affairs of his universal and glorious government? No! there is something nearer to the heart of Jesus than those important matters, and that is to have his people with him. That is the first thing. "the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." (1 Thes. 4: 17). Like David's brethren, we shall go to meet the King, to bring him back in triumph. Does not that, dear friends, give us a glimpse into the Savior's heart? Does not that show us his great love, and what lies nearest his heart? Yes, his first thought is to have his Church, his bride, with him. He said, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also;" and he will keep his promise. He will take his people home. Oh, what a wonderful scene that will be, when he comes in his glory!

But it is asked: "Have we any reason to think that this day draws nigh?" I believe, in common with many, that we have. God has given us signs, and bidden us consider them. He has told us that we may "see the day approaching," and that when we "see" certain "things come to pass" we may "lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh." There is to be a "cry" made "at midnight;" there is to be a knock at the door; there is to be the "day-star" before the dawn. It was one of the rebukes to that generation which could not see the glory of God in him; "Ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" God has written the sure word of prophecy, "unto which," he says, ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place."

There are many signs, but time will only permit me to touch upon a few. There are moral signs. One of them is the denial of the truth of the books of Moses. There shall come in the last days scoffers, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" and denying the fact of God's solemn judgment upon the ungodly world by the flood. If there is one thing prominent in these days in the professing Church, it is that there are men calling themselves ministers of Christ, who are undermining the authority of the inspired Word of God, casting contempt upon the history written by him, and saying that it is an allegory, not to be literally understood. They deny the truth that God visited the world of the ungodly with judgment, and they would thence infer that he never will interfere with the world that now is. As in the case of the Jews, who, in the closing day of their dispensation, cried, "Where is the God of judgment?" so the tendency of the present day is to get rid of the thought of coming judgment. Such is one striking sign of these days—a denial of the inspiration of the Word of God, by men calling themselves Christians, and a consequent denial of the plain and solemn expressions of the living God as to eternal judgment.

Other signs of the last day are given in 2 Tim. 3: 1-5. If you read these verses, you will see what we are lead to expect—and mark, to expect among professing Christians. The characteristics there detailed have existed in all ages among heathens, but the "perilous" nature of "the last days" will consist in their being found in the professing Church. Covetousness, the effort to excel others, insubordination, heartlessness, the want of common honesty, independence, and waywardness of spirit, rushing after pleasure in any shape; are not these characteristics of so-called Christians in these very days? And yet there is plenty of the outward show of religion; churches are multiplied and filled, religion is respectable, meetings are crowded, sermons are listened to. Thus the prediction is fulfilled, that, with all these evils, there shall be great profession, for the description concludes with these words: "Having the form of godliness, but denying the power." Look at the headstrong lawlessness and insubordination of the day: It pervades all classes, whether it be the insubordination of children to their parents, servants to their masters, or the masses of the people to the constituted authorities. A revolutionary and a lawless spirit is abroad working like leaven; everybody seeks to be able to say, "I am my own master."

But enough. The signs I have dwelt upon are numerous, and to my mind, and the minds of many, most striking. Moral—chronological—and political—they combine to send forth the cry, "The Lord is at hand." Singly we might not consider them of importance: it is not one swallow that makes summer, nor one falling leaf, autumn; and there may have been times when one or another of these signs have been manifested with more or less distinctness. But there never has been a time when, as at the present, they have all been manifested together. It is this which to me gives to their appearance such significance and weight. Surely it is not without meaning. Surely it is a warning, encouraging word to God's children, repeating in clearer and still clearer accents, "Behold I come quickly;" "Surely, I come quickly." May "the Lord direct our hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ!" (2 Thes. 3: 5.) And "seeing that [we] look for such things, [may we] be diligent that [we] may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless." (2 Pet. 3: 14).

Reader, are you saved? Are you ready for that glorious appearing? Whether you concur in the belief that the above mentioned signs herald his quick approach or not, it is certain that "the end of all things is at hand," and that "in the days of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God [shall] be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets."

When the last trump sounds, on which side will you be? Whether that sound be immediately or distant, the question for you to answer is, "Am I ready?" Are you hoping to be saved, though unconverted? Do you remember how the children of Israel marched seven times round the walls to Jericho, and how, as they fulfilled their task, the doomed people, confident of the strength of their walls, relied upon the works of their hands? Yet what terror and dismay fell upon them when those walls fell flat, and the Israelites marched every man straight before him, and took the city. But the great shout of victorious Israel, and the trumpets of the priests, will be as nothing to "the shout" of the Lord, "the voice of the Archangel, and the trump of God." The sound of the last trump will extend over the universe; all the people of God will be raised from the dead, quickened and changed; and a shout of triumph will burst from them at the glory of that coming Savior. But it will bring dismay to those who have despised his warnings. If you are waiting in the hope of finding a more convenient season, if you are letting your life ebb out its little stream, and know that you are not yet reconciled to God, and have not a true confidence in Jesus Christ, oh, let me ask you now, even now, to look to him that died for sinners.

There was one person in that city of Jericho who was saved from the general destruction, and that one was Rahab. She believed in the approaching judgment. She trusted the promise of safety, and placed her confidence in the scarlet line—the token of the covenant between Joshua and herself. She was a great sinner, and deserved destruction, doubtless, as much as any in Jericho; but "by faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not." She bound the scarlet line in her window—she ventured all on the promise made to her—and she was saved. In that moment of fearful destruction she must have been calm: her calmness may not have been understood by her fellow-townsmen, for they could not see the scarlet line, and knew not the secret of her security. The secret was between her and Joshua.

God holds out to you the scarlet line—the precious blood of Christ. He promises, and he cannot lie, that if you trust in that blood—in that Savior—you shall never perish. Then you may have confidence and assurance. Others may not understand it and may call it presumption, but it is because they know not the secret covenant that exists between Jesus and the soul that trusts him. They cannot see the blood, and they know not its saving power. Then, when on a careless and guilty world, stained with the blood, and rejecting the love of Christ, the last trump peals with its startling and thrilling sound: when many and many a deadened conscience awakes to feel that the day of grace has closed, and that the day of judgment has come; then when the unbelieving cry in their despair to the mountains and rocks to fall on them and hide them "from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb"—you, and all who have trusted in Jesus, will be caught up to meet him in the air, and to be ever with him, to behold his glory, to serve him, to reign with him, and to be like him. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus.—S. A. Blackwood, England.

GATHERED FRAGMENTS.

All "science, falsely called," has thus far disappeared before the tests of secular truth, while genuine science and Christian doctrine have ever been brought more in harmony, and at this day serve to help and illustrate each other upon all points that have been proved.—Methodist.

A LIFE

I came at morn—'twas spring, I smiled:
The fields with green were clad,
I walked abroad at noon—and lo!
'Twas summer—I was glad.
I sat me down; 'Twas autumn eve,
And I with sadness wept;
I laid me down at night, and then
'Twas winter—and I slept!

When some one asked the late Hon. Linus Child whether he thought it possible for a lawyer to be a good man, he instantly replied that he thought it depended very much upon how he behaved. A very fair answer, excepting that it might be taken as putting the lawyers and their clients too nearly upon the same level.

Jeremy Taylor thus sums up: "Prayer can obtain every thing; can open the windows of heaven and shut the gates of hell; can put a holy constraint upon God, and detain an angel 'till he leave a blessing; can open the treasures of rain, and soften the iron ribs of rocks 'till they melt into a flowing river; can arrest the sun in his course, and send the winds upon our errands."

"The world is becoming a great deal too fond of what you call excitement and success. Of course, it is a good thing for a man to make money by his profession, and a very hard thing when he can't do it," added Mrs. Furnival, thinking of the old days. "But if success in life means rampaging about, and never knowing what it is to sit quiet over ones own fireside, I for one would as soon manage to do without it."

HIMSELF HATH DONE IT.

Isaiah 38: 15.

"Himself hath done it." all! Oh! how those words
Should hush to silence every murmuring thought!
"Himself hath done it"—he who loves me best—
He who my soul with his own blood hath bought.

"Himself hath done it." Can it then be aught
Than full of wisdom, full of tenderest love?
Not one unneeded sorrow will he send,
To teach this wandering heart no more to rove.

"Himself hath done it." Yes, although severe
May seem the stroke, and bitter be the cup,
'Tis his own hand that holds it: and I know
He'll give me grace to drink it meekly up.

"Himself hath done it." O, no arm but his
Could e'er sustain beneath earth's dreary lot;
But while I know he's doing all things well,
My heart his loving kindness questions not.

"Himself hath done it." He who searched me through Saw how I clave to earth's ensnaring ties,
And so he breaks each reed on which my soul
Too much for happiness and joy relies.

"Himself hath done it." He would have me see
What broken cisterns human friends must prove;
That I may turn and quench my burning thirst
At his own fount of everlasting love.

"Himself hath done it." Then I fain would say—
Thy will in all things evermore be done;
E'en though that will remove whom best I love,
While Jesus lives I cannot be alone.

"Himself hath done it"—precious, precious words!
Himself—my Father, Savior, Brother, Friend!
Whose faithfulness no variation knows—
Who, having loved me, loves me to the end!

And when in his eternal presence blest,
I at his feet my crown immortal cast,
I'll gladly own, with all his ransomed host,
"Himself hath done it" all from first to last!

The Second Coming of Christ.

When may we expect the period of Christ's second coming to arrive? and what are the signs by which we may know that it is at hand? are two exceedingly interesting questions. "To the word and to the testimony. If we speak not according to these, believe us not." We will take the last question, and consider its import. In Matthew 24 : 6, 7, 12, 14, Christ tells his disciples that the signs which shall precede his appearing are many, and thus enumerates them: "And ye shall hear of wars, and rumors of wars. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for to witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

In Luke 21 : 25, 26, the same Divine authority says: "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and on the earth, distress of nations with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Paul, in the 1 Thes. 2 : 3, 4, 8–10, writes: "Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming. Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish."

The same apostle writes also to Timothy (1 Tim. 1: 2), that "the spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times, some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience serged with a hot iron." "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." (2 Tim. 3: 1–5.) We likewise read in 2 Pet. 3: 3, 4, the following: "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts and saying, Where is the promise of his coming, for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."

From these passages of Divine truth we learn that in the LAST DAYS the world at large, and the church in general, will be in a very alarming condition. For a further description of the state of the church, read Matt. 25 : 1–13. In those verses, Christ, the heavenly Bridegroom, finds on his return an equal number of lamp-bearers only, with those who had, with their lamps, oil in their vessels, and when the announcement was made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," they, to their consternation, found that their lamps were gone out. I would here put a question to the reader, and ask, When Christ has entered the marriage chamber with his Bride, the church, are all who are left behind, worshipers of God? Has the preaching of the gospel prepared the whole of mankind for his appearing in the heavens? We say, no! and will prove from God's word that we are right. In Matt. 24: 30 it says: "Then shall the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." The language here used by the Savior is plain, and easy to be understood; but lest they should cavil at it, and presume to say that "the tribes here mentioned refer to a part of each, and not to the whole, the Spirit (Luke 21 : 35) uses language which cannot, with any degree of reason, be made to express anything else than that it states. We will give it as it is written: "For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." We conclude, therefore, that "all the tribes" in Matthew mean what Luke describes as "till who dwell on the face of the whole earth." There is no ambiguity at all in the words used.

From what the Bible teaches, we conclude that the signs which precede the second coming of Christ and which foretell his near approach are—conflicts with nations, famines, pestilences, earthquakes, perplexities and distress in the political and commercial world; the gospel having free course to the various nations of the earth, and a worldly conforming church, a church resting satisfied with a mere form of godliness, but denying the transforming and renewing power thereof, and we might add, knowledge increasing. Dear reader: Are any of these signs existing in the present day? How is it with the different nations of the earth? Is it all peace and harmony among and within them? Have there been no famines neither pestilences within the, say, last fifty years? Are earthquakes among the calamities that were, but have no existence now? Is there nothing to disturb or perplex the minds of those who legislate; nor anything in the commercial world which causes anxiety or fear? Is ignorance as wide spread as formerly? Is the liberty of the gospel confined to certain countries and localities as once it was? Is the Christian church separated from the world by a line as broad and visible as that which separated the Christians of former years? Let the battles which have been fought during the last half century answer. Let Ireland with its repeated failures of crops, India, and other places like circumstanced, answer. Let the diseases which have baffled the skill of our most eminent and skillful physicians, from the year 1832, answer. Let the destruction of life and property by the upheavings of various parts of the world, and engulfing all in ruins, answer. Let the consultations of crowned heads and high functionaries reply. Let the embarrassments, politically and commercially which have and still are effecting the various countries of the known world. respond. Let the public schools, and the desire manifested by young and old to obtain and impart instruction, answer. Let the Bible Society, the Tract Society, and every other organized society which has for its object the welfare of the human family, answer. And, oh! let the church of every sect and name, with its worldliness, its formality, and the disregard exhibited by each and all to the commands of its founder, Jesus, the Son of God, answer. One voice will then be heard, and one judgment given, and the words uttered will be—"The day of the Lord is at hand!" The signs of Christ our Savior's near approach, are all taking place. They are to be seen in the east, west, north and south; and should be, yea are, the source of joy and happiness to his waiting and watching people, who see the day long foretold, and with their eyes resting on the parable given by their Savior in Mark 13: 28, 29, his people rejoice, knowing their redemption draweth nigh.

Reader: let me ask you, prayerfully to consider the following questions: Did Christ give an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming?" or did he not? If Christ is the bridegroom alluded to in Matt. 25, and there is to be 1,000 years of universal righteousness, precious to his coming to take his bride, who, or what are those virgins on whom the door is shut? Also, what is meant by all the tribes mourning, when they see him in the clouds of heaven? and his coming shall "to all who dwell on the whole earth," be "as a snare?"

Theories of Rev. 13 and 17 Examined.

By a careful examination of Rev. 13 1–10, and comparing the rise of the two-horned or leopard beast with the history of the world, the only power that can be found to fill the prophetic mould is Papal Rome, beginning in the days of the Emperor Justinian, and ending in the wars of the first Napoleon, being a period of 1260 literal years or 42 prophetic months. During that period the Revelator calls it "the beast (not the woman) having power over all kindreds and tongues and nations," i. e. the fourth or Roman kingdoms was for that length of time governed by Papal Rome. Now as inspiration declares, and history records the fact, we are justified in use of the term, "the beast," when referring to that power, even if it is masculine, and at variance with the positive declarations of some good brethren, whose opinions we regard, when not at variance with Revelation. Now as Papal Rome was a unit, as, also, a universal supreme power, and exercised dominion over the nations of earth, of course there could be no other coexisting power exercising at the same time, all the power of the first wild beast seen by the Revelator. Hence it follows that the earth, which is the location of the two-horned beast is beyond or this side of the sea, measured off by the 42 months, the place and time allotted to Papal Rome. Then, again, it follows, that if Papal Rome was itself supreme, as declared by the angel, and did receive that power from Imperial Rome, attested by authoritative history, it is a certainty, that papal Rome was not created by, nor was her power perpetuated by a succession of imperial or dragonic heads that rose during the 1260 years.

The imperial powers of Europe thus fixed upon by our brethren as governing heads, were in subjection to the one papal head, and were the executors of the will or decrees of that head. In ch. 17: 1–10, we are told of those seven heads that "five are fallen, one is, and another is not yet come, and when he cometh he must continue a short time." By going back to Roman history we find the following facts which agree with this explanation, viz: Beginning with the regal form established by Romulus, that prior to the first advent of Christ five distinct successive forms of government, each of which did, during their existence exercise control, or govern the Roman kingdom, had all passed away. The one that then bore rule was the imperial form, called in ch. 12, the dragon. This form was the sixth, and continued to exercise dominion in "the eternal city" until it was taken away to give place to the Papal Rome, or Paul's "man of sin." (2 Thes. 2.) Now it follows that if Imperial Rome was the sixth its successor must certainly have been the seventh. But, says the objector, does it not say of the seventh "when he cometh he must continue a short time?" and is not 1260 years too long a period to be thus condensed? Certainly, and no such liberty would be admissible had we not Divine authority therefor. By turning to ch. 2 we have this testimony: "Wo to the inhabitants of earth and the sea; because the devil hath come down to you in great wrath, because he knoweth he hath but a short time." After this "short time" begins, he persecutes the church, or woman in her wilderness state for 1260 years, the precise time alloted to papal Rome, the seventh head. This is, to my mind adequate authority for the applications made above of ch. 17: 10, and removes a stone of stumbling to nearly all commentators with whom I am acquainted, upon this passage; which has led to a diversity of perplexing theories, instead of enlightening honest inquirers after truth. To obviate this difficulty, some more modern writers have assumed to place the seventh form between the breaking up of western Imperial Rome into two kingdoms and the setting up of Papal Rome or the leopard beast, and called it a kingly head; thus making two regal forms. (viz the first and the seventh). By this application the seventh form ended before Papal Rome came up, and there being but one form in the future, they were driven to the necessity of calling Papal Rome that eighth form, and when they come to the two-horned beast and his image, and the papal restored beast, whose deadly wound was healed of ch. 13: 11 18, and the scarlet beast, and the harlot woman that rides upon that beast to the judgment (ch. 17), making in all three or more distinct powers; they consolidate them all into the one eighth head! This is confusion confounded.

A more recent class of writers, to obviate these and other difficulties have gotten up what is called the Napoleonic theory, as a fulfillment of the two-horned beast, the scarlet beast, the eighth head, etc. By so doing they escape the "Scylla" upon which others were wrecked, but split in the whirls of "Charybdis," as will appear before we close.

One class of these writers admit that imperial Rome was the sixth headship, which they extend down through the different imperial governments of Europe to near the days of the first Napoleon, and begin the seventh form with the beginning of his imperialism and end it at his overthrow in 1814–15. From that time until the reestablishment of the French empire under Napoleon III., "the beast was not." All the seven heads being in the past, his government they call the two horned beast, the eighth head, the scarlet beast that is to carry the harlot woman to the judgment, when it is to go away into perdition. Some writers aver these events are now accomplished facts. I must confess that this claim at the present time, looks plausible, which is, in fact, the strongest argument in the whole theory; but as the basis is wrong, the superstructure must, also, be wrong, and the late fall of that emperor and and his empire, and the events that have recently occurred at Rome cannot establish and confirm that hypothesis for reasons following. In their extension of the sixth or imperial form, to the days of the first Napoleon, they ignore the testimony of the angel, of the Revelator, and the history of the world: in this the angel says of the leopard beast; "And the dragon (or imperial Rome) gave him his power and his seat and his great authority." And power was given him to continue (or make war) forty and two months. And power was given him over all kindreds and tongues and nations. History informs us that the "eternal city" was vacated by imperial Rome, which was succeeded, as before stated, by Papal Rome; and by virtue of the Justinian decree, the succession of popes in that city, held and exercised their authority over the saints and over the nations of Europe, agreeably to this prophecy, for the long period of 1260 literal years. Now if that supreme power was given to Papal Rome, and exercised by it, where is the propriety of avering that it was still in the hands of, and exercised by imperial Rome? This would make two supreme universal powers each occupying the same territory at the same time, and would be too absurd an idea to be entertained by any sane and enlightened mind for a moment.

Again if the Imperial or sixth form could be extended down, as claimed, to the days of the Napoleonic dynasties, why not extend it onward to their close? for certainly in these two reigns, there was no change in the forms of government; they were a continuation of imperialism, even down to the late fall of Napoleon III. Hence, if there is any authority for such an extension of the sixth head, the proper time for its end, was in the events of the last summer! To claim that the sixth ended at or just prior to the first Napoleon, and the seventh ended with his overthrow in 1814, is as absurd as it would be to claim that a change in the form of government occurred at the death or downfall of each of the Cæsars, or their successors.

There is still a more recent class of writers, who claim that the two Napoleons are the seventh and eighth heads, the scarlet beast, etc. These merit attention. They admit the existence of the papacy, for the appointed time of the forty-two prophetic months; but claim that for that time it was only an ecclesiastical power, not the beast of ch. 13: 1–10. That this beast consisted in, or was made up solely of the civil powers of Europe, who carried the harlot; that during that period, she sat upon the seven heads as noted in ch. 17; 10.

To maintain this, they assume that those heads were seven consecutive imperial governments which existed during that time, who were the creators and sustainers of the woman, extending down to 1814, thus including the reign of the first Napoleon; when "the beast was not." The scarlet beast, the eighth head, and the two-horned beast, they made their antitype to be Napoleon III. A part of my objections to this last hypothesis are already expressed, and consist in this: they virtually disannul the testimony of the Revelator, and of history. The first declares that the dragon (or imperial Rome) gave to this beast his power, throne and great authority, and that this beast had power over all kindreds and tongues and nations forty-two months. History affirms this to be true. I repeat that this beast was a unit embracing both the ecclesiastical and civil powers of Europe, and not two distinct co-existing powers, occupying the same time and territory.

Again inspiration affirms of these heads, when the revelation was given, that "five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come." History records the fact that at the first advent of Christ, five of these heads were in the past, and that the sixth or imperial had come up; and it requires much positive testimony in addition to theory, to prove they were then all in the future. Lamentable Reports from Maine.

The following is taken from the Report of the Maine Conference of the Seventh-day Adventists—1870:

Br. White made extended remarks on the condition of the cause in Maine, and the difficulties under which it labored, with especial reference to the jealousy and suspicion with which Western ministers had been met when they came to help the cause in this State, by those who had shown greater regard for their own personal interests than for the interests of the cause of God and truth. Believing it [illegible] that these things be now met and [illegible] and right that the [illegible] of the cause have a chance to take their stand and pledge themselves to co-operate hereafter with those who are laboring to advance the cause, he presented the following preamble and resolution:

[illegible]

Resolved, That we [illegible] deplore these great sins [illegible] in the sight of God, and [illegible], and, by the grace of God, we [illegible] pledge ourselves to do all we can to redeem the past in this respect in particular, [illegible]

[illegible] their hands in their arduous labors.

Br. White followed the reading of these resolutions with impressive and instructive remarks and a strong testimony and appeal to those who have stood in the way of the work in this State, while professing to be its friends and advocates.

On motion, these resolutions were adopted by the Conference, after which they were adopted by the body of believers present, by a rising vote.

The chairman of the Committee on Resolutions presented the following, which were also unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we heartily indorse the remarks of Br. White in regard to the labor of ministers in this cause, to wit, that they must either labor in bringing souls into the truth, or in building up those who are in the truth, and that those who do neither of these are of [illegible].

Resolved, That we hereby instruct our Executive Committee to [illegible] with ministers in con[illegible] of the labors done for the benefit of the [illegible] according to the time reported, without regard to what has been done.

Resolved, That we [illegible] our Executive Committee [illegible] the church treasurers to send their means [illegible] to the State Treasurer, and we would also in[illegible] the Treasurer to pay out [illegible] only by order of the President of this Conference.

Resolved, That we express our heartfelt thanks to Br. and Sr. White for their labors [illegible] camp-meeting under the most trying circumstances, and we [illegible] them to retain their interest in the cause in Maine, and not forsake us because of the wrongs of those who have injured them and thrown obstacles in the way of their labors.

From the above it appears that those who preach Mrs. White's visions for doctrine and discipline, find it rather difficult to consecrate their ministers in Maine to that work; and although these ministers have been re-baptised and re-ordained, by law-keeper's hands, yet they have rebelled and "have involved the ruin of precious souls." Sad truth, if true! ! !

These were good and useful ministers in bringing souls to Christ before they sought to be "justified by the law." Are they fallen from grace?" Or is it because they have given up the visions of Ellen, and her use of the third angel's message? They are now, of course, not capable of "bringing souls into the truth" (?) of Sabbath keeping, or of "building up those who are in the truth" (?) but are doubting the obligation upon Christians to keep the law.

It also appears by the above report, that their Executive Committee constitute the supreme head, to determine the amount of benefit done for the Seventh-day cause by preachers, and are empowered to pay them according to their ability to proselyte, and not according to the time they spend, the labor they perform, or the number and needs of their families. It is hoped that these suspended ministers, having seen the snare of Ellen's (vision) testimony, and taken a long step in advance, will confess all they ought, and become once more faithful and useful "ministers of the New Testament."

Good News.

The news of sinners being converted to Christ and his truth is always welcome to the household of faith, I therefore communicate that the Lord is at work in various places in Maine. In Wayne, the Free Baptists have given up their meetings because there was not intrest to sustain them. They allowed their house to be opened for Advent preaching, and although there was but one family of believers in the village, preachers were called and full congregations were gathered. Deep intrest to hear the word was soon manifested. I spent one Sabbath with them and found many anxious inquirers, some converted, others searching the Scriptures.

In Lewiston, a new interest has sprung up. Quite a number have embraced the faith and been reclaimed from their wanderings, several have been clearly converted, one an English Catholic sister, which causes much stir among the Romanists.

At Bath the good work of grace is progressing. Nearly 20 have lately been reclaimed and converted. One very prominent and faithful worker of the Congregational Church, has taken a bold and decided public stand for the truth as we teach it. We will thank God and take courage.

THE CHILD AT PRAYER.

Into her chamber went
A little child one day,
And by a chair she knelt
And thus began to pray
Jesus, my eyes I close,
Thy form I cannot see,
If thou art near me, Lord,
I pray thee speak to me
A still, small voice she heard within her soul.
"What is it, child? I hear thee; tell me all"

I pray thee, Lord, she said,
That thou wilt condescend
To tarry in my heart!
And ever be my friend
The path of life is dark,
I would not go astray;
Oh, let me have thy hand
To lead me in the way.
"Fear not, I will not leave thee, child, alone"
She thought she felt a soft hand press her own

They tell me Lord, that all
The living pass away;
The aged soon must die,
And even children may
Oh, let my parents live
Till I a woman grow;
For if they die, what can
A little orphan do?
"Fear not my child, whatever ills may come,
I'll not forsake thee, and I'll bring thee home."

Her little prayer was said,
And from her chamber now
Forth passed she with the light
Of heaven upon her brow.
Mother, I've seen the Lord,
His hand in mine I felt;
And oh! I heard him say,
As by my chair I knelt—
"Fear not, my child, whatever ills may come,
I'll not forsake thee till I bring thee home."

A Child's Opinion.—"Pa," said a little boy, as he climed to his father's knee, and looked in his face earnestly as if he understood the importance of the subject, "Pa is your soul insured?"

"What are you thinking about, my son," replied the agitated father.

"Why, Pa, I heard Uncle George say you had your houses insured, and your life insured; but he didn't believe you had thought of your soul, and he was afraid you'd lose it; won't you get it insured rignt away?"

The father leaned his head on his hand and was silent. He owned broad acres of land covered with bountiful produce, his barns were even now filled with plenty, his buildings all covered with insurance; but as if that would not suffice for the mainteance of his wife and only child, in case of his decease, he had the day before, taken a life policy for a large amount; yet not one thought had he given to his soul's life.

He Mistook the Light.

And what was the consequence! Why, one of the largest steamships in the world, with a rich cargo, and a company of 800 souls on board, was wrecked, in a dark and stormy night, on the most dangerous part of the coast of Ireland. The noble ship, which cost upwards of £200,000, left her port that very afternoon in fine trim, and with every prospect of a safe and speedy voyage, and at nine o'clock she was thumping upon the rocks—the sea breaking over her with terrific violence, and threatening to send the people, ship, and cargo, to instant destruction.

But how could they mistake the light? Were the captain and his officers on the lookout? Yes. Was the chart closely examined? Yes. Was the compass all right? Yes. And were the common precautions taken to keep the ship on her proper course? Yes. All this was done.

How then could she have met with such a sad disaster? Why, because a light appeared which was not noted on the chart, and the captain was deceived by it! He mistook it for another light that was on the chart, and so, when he supposed he was running out to sea, he was really running in upon the breakers! How great a mistake, and how terrible the consequences!

Every reader of these lines is sailing on a more hazardous voyage than the Great Britain attempted, and has the command of a nobler vessel, and a richer freight than hers; yet, richer than all the treasures of the world! Thousands of plans are laid to mislead and divert him from his course. False lights are purposely held out to betray him, and tides and currents of almost resistless power set against him from every point of the compass. Will he steer clear of them all? Shall we see him push out into the broad sea, with a bright sky, a fair wind, and sails all set for the desired haven? Will he accomplish the voyage, and his fears and perils all be exchanged for the tranquility and joy of a happy home?

It will depend on two things—(1) Whether he has the true chart, and takes good heed to it. It is known as the Holy Scriptures, and it lays down the position of every light on the voyage; and he may be sure that any light that is not found upon the chart is to be shunned. (2) Whether he commits himself and the whole direction of the voyage to him whose footsteps are on the sea, and who rides upon the wings of the wind.—Selected.

Notices, Etc.

W. A. C. P. ASSOCIATION NOTICE.

At the next meeting of the Association the following amendments to the Constitution will be offered for consideration and action:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 9, as follows:

Sec. 9. The Board of Trustees (or the Association,) shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to Art. III., Sec. 2. But the person filling those two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of Art. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

Sec. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

Sec. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate; and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to Art. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make Art. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

The precise date of the meeting at which these amendments will be considered, has not yet been fixed. It will probably be in March; and may be held in Buchanan.

THE
TIMES,

A large, neat, eight-page weekly paper, thoroughly devoted to the advancement of the cause of Christ by the faithful advocacy, defence and dissemination of what is called Advent doctrine,

EDITED BY
JOSHUA V. HIMES.

The Times contains, weekly, matter expository, exegetical, illustrative, practical; including communications, selections and original matter, with letters from those of like precious faith in all parts of the country, the news of the body, and a faithful digest of the news of the world bearing upon the signs of the times; with news of the progress of our cause in different parts, and also news of what our opponents are saying and doing, with expositions and refutations of their arguments; articles on prophecy; notices of current and useful literature; short sermons; a column or more for the children; choice bits of poetry—in short matter enough in every number to make a good sized book, and all furnished for only FOUR CENTS A WEEK, or $2 a year. No paper of its class furnishes so much reading matter, even when a greater price is charged.

The paper has been very useful in the past, and can be made more so by extending its circulation. To our friends who are working faithfully for this end, we make the following offer: We will send

THE TIMES, POST-PAID,

to any address in the United States or Canada, on trial

FOR THREE MONTHS,

for 35c. For one dollar, we will send The Times to any three persons, three months, post-paid; and any larger number at the same rate.

Who will take advantage of this liberal offer, to introduce The Times in a village, a neighborhood, a church. For

TEN DOLLARS

you can send a live Advent paper to

THIRTY PERSONS,

or into thirty families, post-paid, for three months. Could it fail to do good? Five dollars will pay for fifteen copies; and one dollar for three.

We make this liberal offer solely to introduce the paper in new fields and localities.

Will the ministry please publish it to their congregations?

Will our friends please tell it to their friends.

Will you who love the cause and wish The Times to prosper, pay for 3, 5, 10, 50, or 100 copies, on these liberal terms. We have now 300 names, of partially interested persons, among whom we could obtain perhaps more, could we send them the paper free for three months.

FIFTY PERMANENT SUBSCRIBERS,

Who will send at once? Send in the names, with 31½ cents for each name, and (if you give the P. O. address plainly) we will guarantee the delivery of thirteen numbers of The Times, free of postage, to each one of them.

Three thousand three months subscribers, on this plan, will give us a large and permanent addition to our list.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 31. 1871

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions to our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is not to be held responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and [illegible]

A writer in the Christian Union thinks "the next age will regard this as one of rather gross superstition." No doubt; and the superstition growing, chiefly, out of its immortalism.

Our "pigeon hole" for "brief" articles for THE TIMES (which all delight in) is empty. That for long articles (which must possess real merit to secure a general perusal) is quite full, though we have no more, even of this class, than we like to have on hand, to secure variety. Write.

A LITTLE while since a Kentucky paper was credited with a statement that a man was drowned while being "baptized by immersion"(!) in its neighborhood. Several papers who believe in immersion by sprinkling, made more or less capital of the report, in favor of their own views. It now appears that the report was a hoax, and these moralizings against immersion are all lost.

"EUSEBIUS" writes from Rome to the New York Observer, that the angels used to attend the brutal exhibitions in the Coliseum at Rome, waiting "to conduct the spirits of the suffering saints to receive the palm of victory and the crown of martyrdom on high." That they were present as "ministering spirits" we doubt not; but we would like better authority before we believe that dead saints' spirits get the palm and crown promised to the saints themselves.

THE people are sometimes congratulated upon the decay of certain vices when the fact is that they still exist with unabated virulence, only in new forms. We may mention gambling especially. While gambling houses are not so openly patronized as formerly, we have instead horse-racing, lotteries, gold and stock gambling involving in the aggregate amounts of money before which the famous stakes of the London gambling-houses seem insignificant. The vice itself was never more [illegible] than now.

ONE [illegible] has of late been quite active in opposing "soul-sleepers," once called at our office, in order to procure information concerning our views. We conversed as freely as our limited time would allow, and on his departure gave him an assortment of works, from which he might gather correct ideas of our theology. Some months afterward we met him, and inquired if he had read those tracts. "No, he had not had time." Yet he has tried to oppose us. We would advise all opposers to find out first, where we stand, before they declare that our foundation is not of Divine workmanship. We declare that it is. When [illegible], we will [illegible]

IT is a solemn fact that no person persisting in any of the following sins can ever enter God's everlasting kingdom; fornicators, adulterers, idolaters, effeminate, abusers of themselves with mankind, thieves, covetous, drunkards, revilers, extortioners. Nor such as are guilty of uncleanness, lasciviousness, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders and revellings. (1 Cor. 6: 9, 10. Gal. 5: 19-21.) And, in short, persistency in any error, vice, or sin, must result in our eternal destruction. This is plain talk, and the words have just the sense they carry on their face. Forsake sin and live, through Christ; or cling to evil and die. God will not have the wicked live forever. Repent, that you may enjoy eternal life.

AN opponent says, "All the efforts of soul-sleepers can never put or hold in the grave the inward man." "Soul-sleepers" do not exert their efforts to put any man or part of man in the grave; their earnest endeavor is to keep men from dying. And they are confident that even those who for a time fall into the hands of the enemy, may be redeemed forever from his grasp, through Christ. But "soul-sleepers" do not propose to set themselves up as wiser than the holy men of old, moved by the Holy Spirit, and assert that the soul does not go to the grave, when they declare that it does. For David said—"Thou hast brought up my soul from the grave." "Redeem my soul from the power of the grave." "Soul-sleepers" do not "put" or attempt to "hold" "inward men" in the grave: they only believe the record God has given of the condition of the dead. And more than this, they do not spend futile efforts to take out of the grave that which inspired men have declared to be in its "power."

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

LEWIS IOWA.

MONDAY, Jan. 16. There is a good deal of excitement in town this morning about the meetings of the Adventists yesterday. It was a day of much interest and success, which stirred up some of the citizens who thought I did not preach the truth. Among these was the Congregationalist preacher, who thought we were propagating the doctrines of materialism, in reference to man and his inheritance. He assumes that man is immortal and immaterial, and his future inheritance is the same; and, hence, that the doctrine that the saints in the resurrection will have material bodies, like Christ's, is heretical, as also, that the saints will "inherit the earth" renewed. He affirmed that Wesley nor other Orthodox teachers referred to by me, believed this doctrine of the inheritance, by which he showed his ignorance, if nothing more.

The future abode of the saints as set forth by Wesley, Hitchcock, Chalmers, Knapp, Tholuck and others, is the earth renewed. They take the ground that 2 Pet. ch. 3 is to be literally fulfilled; and that, v. 13—"Nevertheless, we according to his promise look for new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness," is to be literally understood. They argue that whatever may be said of Is. 65, or even Rev. 21, that this passage is literal. And distinctly teaches that this earth is to be "burned up," that is, all within it, or upon it, combustible will be consumed, without the loss of a particle of matter now existing. Thus purified, from the contamination of sin, and surrounded by a new atmosphere, or heavens, and adapted in all respects to the nature and wants of spiritual and sinless beings, it will become the residence of the righteous. Of the precise nature of that new dispensation, and of the mode of existence there, the Scriptures are indeed silent. But that, like the present world it will be material,—that there will be a solid globe, and a transparent expanse around it, seems most clearly indicated in the sacred record.

He adds, "that the wide-spread opinion that heaven will be a sort of airy Elysium, where the present laws of nature will be unknown, and where matter, if it exist can exist only in its most attenuated form is a notion to which the Bible is a stranger. (See Religion and Geology, Edward Hitchcock, D.D., LL.D., pp. 370-408.)

He also says (p. 405); "Among men who understand Biblical interpretation, and, also, the principles of science,.... the more scriptural, philosophical, and animating doctrine is embraced, that there will be only a change of form and condition of our earth and its atmosphere, and that the matter of the universe will survive, and successively assume new and more beautiful forms, it may be eternally."

I visited the schools here this a. m. They have as fine a building and furniture, as I have seen in the West. I was much pleased with Mrs. Walker's school. She is a noble Christian lady, and one of the best teachers. Mr. S. D. Cook and wife have the charge of the High School and are doing well. I am glad to see the interest in education in this western country.

In the p. m. I went to Waveland, with Br. Geo. McClure, twelve miles over the prairie, and spoke at night, on prophecy. I had a fine hearing from intelligent Eastern people, many of them from Vermont, and some with whom I had been acquainted at the East. This is a fine settlement, both as to inhabitants and land. It is in Pottawathamie county, some twelve miles southwest of Lewis.

I went home with Br. Alfred Collins, formerly of Waterbury, Vt. He is pleasantly settled here, and maintains his faith and hope, which too many moving West fail to do. We hope the truth will be permanently planted here.

TUESDAY, Jan. 17. In my calls today, one gentleman said—"If I understand you, your people hold that the wicked will not rise from the dead; but that their death is an eternal sleep." "Who told you that?" "A man that lives in another part of the county." I told him we did not as a people believe this to be a Bible doctrine, though some hold it. "Nor do I," said he; "the Bible speaks too plain on that subject, to doubt." The wicked will be punished in gehenna (Mark 9: 43; 47) after they are raised out of hades. (Rev. 20: 13.)

At night I traced the history of the world, in a line of prophecy from 600 years before Christ to the present time, showing that the prophecies are nearly all fulfilled, and next comes the kingdom of God. The word was received with great solemnity and favor, and at the close they asked me to continue the subject the next evening, which I had reserved for rest. But

"Here is no rest."

We look forward to the rest that remains for the people of God.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 18. We are having very cold weather, the mercury below zero. The change from the warm climate I was in a week since where the mercury stood at 70°, makes the cold weather severe upon me.

At night I spoke on the signs of the times, which indicate the speedy coming of the Lord. I think our labors here will not be in vain in the Lord. Br. Collins and others intend to sustain prayermeetings, which will not fail to keep them alive in the work of God.

THURSDAY, Jan. 19. Bade the friends adieu, and came to Lewis, where I dined with Br. Pratt, one of the firm believers, and workers in the Lord. He has had conversation with one of the ministers here since my meetings, who bitterly opposes the Advent doctrine, but who knows little about it, and is blinded by a wicked prejudice. We have many such opposers. How much better it would be to meet us in the spirit of Christ, and compare what God has said with our own opinions, and then abide the result.

In the p.m. came to Atlantic, and put up with Mr. John Keyes, the Banker here. He is a stirring and successful business man, but as yet makes no profession of religion. Sr. Keyes is one of the devoted and waiting ones. Their hospitality was abundant, and here I was refreshed.

At night I spoke in the Congregationalist church to an appreciative audience. But the people at large have no interest in these things. The present world has too strong a hold upon them.

FRIDAY, Jan. 20. Visited the schools now under the care of Mr. Manning. They have just opened their new school-house, which is a credit to the citizens. They have 180 scholars.

This evening we had a much larger attendance, and deep interest to hear on the prophetic word, which is being fulfilled in our time, in the downfall of Rome, and the "drying up of the Euphrates," or Turkish power, in both of which we have the sure indications of the approach of Jesus, and not the conversion of the world.

SATURDAY, Jan. 21. My attention was called to the fact, that the Methodist Book Concern, in New York, was founded in 1789, eighty-one years ago. It was commenced on a capital of six hundred dollars, which was loaned by a traveling preacher. In 1836 the establishment was burned, with a heavy loss. At present after giving the Southern Methodists their portion, after the division in 1844, the Concern is said to be worth a million and a half of dollars. Their agents have ever been faithful, until within the last few years, complaints have been made against some of them, which have caused no little scandal, and the investigation has certainly been mismanaged.

Our establishment in Buchanan, was begun with less than three hundred dollars in 1864, and it being conducted which the object of spreading all the light possible, on the missionary principle, we have not built up a property interest as we might have done; and yet through the aid of kind friends East and West, with industry and economy we now have an establishment that would cost us some thousands of dollars, if we had to purchase. And what is cheering to our hearts is that the enterprise is onward. The only difficulty we have, is to supply the demand for publications for missionary work and gratuitous distribution. Thankful for all help in the past, we still look for greater things. And as what we do, is for the present time, believing the Lord is soon to come, we ought to do more than we are now doing, if we would give an acceptable account to our Master. The Lord help us all to see, and feel the measure of our present responsibility. What we carry into the kingdom, of our substance will be in the good we do to men here, who by our agency will enter and enjoy the Paradise of God.

In the p. m. went out to Troublesome Creek, about seven miles, with Br. Morphy, and others. This is one of his fields of labor among the farmers. It is an excellent neighborhood and meetings are well attended. Here I put up with Br. Ariel Slater, formerly of Square Pond, Ct. He is settled here with his children, contented and prosperous, and the Advent meeting here is much appreciated by them.

I spoke at night on the peace of Christ in the soul of the believer. The house was filled, and the audience gave me the best attention, and some were blessed. I find that Br. Morphy is much esteemed, and is doing good in this field of labor.

SABBATH, Jan. 22. We had a great gathering of the place to-day, the greatest they ever had. I preached three times, and had a blessed day. Many came to hear for the first time. One gave herself to God. Eleven subscribed for THE TIMES, and many bore cheering testimony to the truth. Br. Morphy has reason to thank God and take courage. The cause is onward.

MONDAY, Jan. 23. Took leave of the dear friends here, and came to my next appointment, at Dexter, Iowa.

AN UNMIXED EVIL.

The New Jerusalem Messenger enters this vigorous protest against church gambling:

The churches will come to see, after a while, what irreparable harm they are doing in giving a religious sanction to this crime, and holding it up before the people as a commendable thing. After the great Sanitary Fair in Brooklyn, in which raffling abounded, the teachers of a large boy's school found the boys utterly carried away with this gambling spirit. They were raffling their pencils, pocket-knives, toys, and every article of property at their disposal, and it required the most stringent and persistent efforts to eradicate the evil.

This indicates the kind of influence which nearly all the religious bodies of this country are exerting upon the public mind, the kind of lessons they are teaching to the rising generation. Whenever a religious body makes use of a lottery, no matter by what name called, to obtain money, it says, most emphatically, to the children, as well as others, entrusted to its care, "Gambling is commendable and right." And can any one doubt for a moment that a single religious fair will do more to inculcate this lesson than all the gambling hells in New York? For gambling under its proper name is disreputable; but when it is sanctioned and commended by the church, though under other names, the spirit is excited, and strengthened and approved, and the after protestation of teachers and parents will prove of little avail in checking the spirit or preventing its indulgence.

—A church living near to God could not eng[illegible] in the ministry of worldly ple[illegible] for sake of gain.

[illegible]UTURE PUNISHMENT.

Le[illegible] fairest star be selected, like a b[illegible]us island in the vast and sh[illegible]a of the azure heavens, as th[illegible]ome of the criminals from the [illegible]nd let them possess what[illegible] [illegible]ost love, and all that it is [illegible]r God to bestow; let them [illegible]d with undying bodies, and [illegible]ls which shall forever retain t[illegible]ntellectual powers; let no Savior ever press his claims upon them, no Go[illegible]veal himself to them, no Sabbath ever dawn upon them, no saint ever live among them, no prayer ever be heard within their border; but let society exist there forever, smitten only by the leprosy of hatred of God, and with utter selfishness as its all prevailing and eternal purpose, then, as sure as the law of righteousness exists, on which rests the throne of God, and the government of the universe, a society so constituted must work out for itself a hell of solitary and bitter suffering to which there is no limit except the capacity of a finite nature! Alas! the spirit that is without love to its neighbor, is already possessed by a power which must at last create for its own self-torment a worm that will never die, and a fire that can never more be quenched!—Dr. Norman Macleod.

—But who would believe that God would allow the continuance of such a moral fester upon his universe. Were therein it a star or a planet, in a never so distant or obscure spot, where sin must eternally exist, and especially if it must be manifested in the never ceasing sufferings of immortal beings, that spot would mar the Creator's handiwork, and be a living witness, either of his inability to destroy evil, or of its necessity to his government. Either thought is almost if not quite blasphemous, and not to be entertained. There is a better hope. Evil is to have a final end. Its lesson will have been learned; its authors and practicers will be extinguished from conscious being; and only the holy, and therefore supremely happy, will live in all the universe of God.

"A PECULIAR PEOPLE."

Who are they? Shakers are peculiar in their dress and some habits of life. Quakers are peculiar, or used to be, in their dress. The Methodists used to be peculiar in the same respect, and in their manners in public worship.—and a great many "peculiar" people can be found in the world, some of whom are real Christians, and some are not. But who are Peter's "peculiar" folk. One may be numbered with any other peculiar people, and not derive any especial advantages from the relation: but he who belongs to the sort Peter tells of, is rich indeed. How may we become a member of that society?

Here are some their peculiarities. No single one of these marks is sufficient to stamp them with Peter's brand; but if they have them all, they are the "peculiar people."

They believe in God; hope for grace at the revelation of Jesus; have purified their souls by obedience to the truth; have unfeigned love for God's children; have laid aside malice, guile, hypocrisy, envy, and back-biting; they desire to know the truth of God, at any expense; they are living stones in a spiritual temple; a holy priesthood offering spiritual sacrifices; they shew forth the praises of God; and have obtained the mercy of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. These are some of the marks of this people, who are a purchased people, and kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time. Their ranks are not yet full. Come and join their company, now. Soon 't will be forever too late.

Holiness first and pardon after, says the sinner; but God's way is pardon and peace first, holiness after.

SUFFERING FOR TRUTH.

Edward White, in the last Rainbow, tells us of a sister in England, a school-teacher, who has been thrown out of her situation, because of her faith in the New Testament doctrine of "Life in Christ," and branded as "a dangerous person," unfit to instruct children. After having been a faithful supporter of the gospel, she is now suffering for the necessaries of life. We propose to send her a trifle as from friends of her faith in America. If any wish to join with us, let them send their contributions at once on the receipt of this paper, and we will forward them with our own. We make this statement, not that there are no demands for means at home; but we feel this will be a proper thank offering for the noble defences of the truth that have come to us from England, to cheer our souls.

The people who thus persecuted this sister are known as Plymouth Brethren, and claim to be God's special people. Let us send a thank-offering to England.

A NUMBER of Christian gentlemen, who, we trust, are sincere, have been for some years past holding conventions with the object of introducing a direct recognition of Almighty God into the Constitution of the United States. They now propose to add recognitions Jesus Christ and "the Sabbath" to that instrument. This scheme, carried out would only be the entering wedge for a State religion. It would, also, be a fruitful perjury. Our politicians are sufficiently corrupt. Let them not be compelled to swear to belief in God and his law, when it is well known that many of them disbelieve the existence of one or both of them. Let not a nation of rebellious sinners, containing millions of real or practical infidels, be made a nation of perjurers by a formality in their constitution, the principle that introduces a formal recognition of God and Jesus Christ into the Constitution of the nation legitimately opens door for similar articles concerning baptism, the Sabbath, endless torment, immortality of the soul, or any other dogmas of religion. Christ's "kingdom is not of this world." If his followers only understood this, they would have less to do with governments, their forms and policies. The church has misunderstood and perverted her mission, and is trying to do the work God has reserved for himself—namely, establishing his kingdom. This will be done after the destruction of all earthly kingdoms (Dan. 2.), which have universally proved failures. Let the church give herself to making ready a people for that kingdom: God will do the rest.

—But we may rest assured that the proposed alteration in the Constitution will not be accomplished. The effort is worthy of notice chiefly as one evidence of how widely the church has mistaken her mission.

Truth Dearer than Life.

Among the multiplied varieties of human sophisms and vain speculations with which the world is flooded at this age, there is only one way by which truth may be distinguished from error, and that is this: by making constant use of God's great detective—the New Testament. It will clearly distinguish the counterfeit from the genuine. And the reason why there is so much counterfeit religion, is because the detective is so little used. Bless God, this detective is common property. It is the privilege of all to use it. And in this age of intellectual and progressive infidelity, it becomes the imperative and absolute duty of all who would know the "truth as it is in Jesus," to always have have this detective at hand. The cloaks under which the pernicious principles of "anti-Christianism" are being presented to and diffused among the people of to-day, are of such varied character, and their merit is being urged with so much zeal and importunity, by men of both high and low degree, that it requires the closest scrutiny, and most diligent improvement of all the Divine helps that God has placed in our reach, to sail clear of the shoals and breakers. But, thank God, t' ere is a map upon whose [illegible] drawn the delineation [illegible] and narrow path." I [illegible] the selfish and unch[illegible] de[illegible]nciamentoes of theologic[illegible] dogmatics and enthusiasts. No, no The truth as it is in Jesus" is not found here. It is not found in the authoritative edicts and pronunciamentoes of councils and ecclesiastical bodies. No, no. Not here even is the "truth as it in Jesus" always found. Where can it be found? Answer, It may be found in its purity, without any mixture of error, in the New Testament. This, then, is the great fountain from whose perennial streams of light and truth the humble inquirer after the true faith is to drink.

After having sought in the mighty quarry, and judiciously separated a few pebbles of truth from the massive rocks and miry clay of superstition and error, shall not those precious pebbles be dear to us? The doctrine of the New Testament, in connection with the Old is the embodiment of the revelation of God's great will concerning man. It treats of the most sacred interests of man. It teaches man what he is by nature, and what he must be by grace. It shows his present and his future. In short, it is the truth; whereas, all other systems of theology are false and untrue. Ah! yes, it reveals the only road to eternal life; all others lead to death. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life." Truth like this certainly must be precious. Who, that has tasted of its sweetness and realized its worth, would give it up for any consideration? The gold of Ophir, or the fame of princes sinks into insignificance, and we turn away from them with disgust, and seek under the balmy wing of truth a home, knowing that it leads to an abiding inheritance and to an unfading crown.

These reflections carry me back in imagination about fifteen hundred years, into a dark age of Romish superstition and heathen idolatry. Ambrose was Archbishop of Milan. He prosecuted the sacred work of his office with diligence and success. The Nicene Creed was his oracle in the great theological question—Arianism—then agitating the religious element throughout the Roman Empire. The view of the Trinity propagated with great zeal by a factious party called Arians, followers of Arius, was regarded by him as fallacious in the extreme. By accident, the Empress Justina assumed the dictatorship of the royal palace. She had long since imbibed the Arian heresy, and by careful diligence had sought to instil it into the mind of her son, the youthful Emperor Valentinian. The earnest efforts and successful ministry of Ambrose in the interest of the true faith displeased her exceedingly. She sought redress by calling the Archbishop to an account. A first attempt to bring him before a council for trial proved a failure, because of the interposition of the people in his behalf. A second was more successful. The haughty Empress required immediate recantation, in defalcation of which the severest penalty would be inflicted. The meek but resolute answer of Ambrose was substantially as follows: "My life and fortune are in the hands of the Emperor; but I will never betray the church of Christ, or degrade the dignity of my holy office. In such a cause I am willing to suffer whatever the malice of my enemy can inflict, only wishing to die in the presence of my faithful flock and at the foot of the altar." Let these words, so big with meaning, from the lips of this great man, inspire our hearts with a new afflatus of zeal and resolution for the promulgation of the precious truth of God, even in the most adverse scenes of persecution. If preaching the truth should lead to our ecclesiastical execution, let us falter not. God's comforting Spirit will stand by us even in that critical hour. Should the faggot and stake seek us as a prey of persecution, we will not be dismayed, for Peter says, "If any man suffer as a Christian let him not be ashamed, but let him glorify God on this behalf." (1 Pet. 4: 16.) We will rejoice, then, that we are accounted worthy to suffer for Christ's sake, and for the truth's sake.

The truth, the whole truth, AND NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH, is our motto. Let this be our watchword in life, and in the cold waters of death it will be to us a staff and rod upon which we may lean and be comforted. "Lord, evermore, give us thy truth." Amen.

Peter's Estimate of Prophecy.

Believers under the Old Testament had but the prophetic word and this not fulfilled in Christ, as we have it. We possess double testimony: first, what the apostles saw, experienced, and testified; secondly, we can compare the events of the New Testament with with the Old Testament prophecies, which constitute a lasting testimony, and a source of light and assurance of the truth of our holy religion, against all false teachers, to the end of time.

Vv. 19–21.—"We have also a more sure word of prophecy [we have also more sure the word of prophecy]; whereunto ye do well to take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts." Some expositors construe this last sentence thus—"We have also more sure the word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that take heed in your hearts, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place," etc. This construction, being not against the Greek, is evidently preferable. "[illegible] day-star" is considered to be id[illegible]al with "the bright and morning st[illegible]" (Rev. 22: 16), which our blesse[illegible]vior applies to himself.

The question now arises, In what respect is the word of prophecy more sure than the testimony of transfiguration of Jesus Christ? Evidently the apostle Peter contrasts the two. Without infringing in the least on the deep importance of the transfiguration, we shall show that the word of prophecy, as an evidence of the Christian religion, is more sure than that event.

1. However the apostles were confirmed in their faith in Christ by the transfiguration of our Lord, it does not equally confirm the faith of those who favored with that wonderful sight, as does the prophetic word. Fulfilled prophecy has become history, and can be appealed to, and this with confidence, against all rationalists and unbelievers, as an unanswerable evidence of the truth of Christianity; because even profane and undenible facts attest its truth. This is one reason why sceptics, and free-handlers of the Word of God, are ever anxious to disprove phrophecy by denying the authenticity of the prophetic Scriptures, and, in some instances, the truthfulness of their authors. Why has the history of Jesus Christ been represented as a myth by some daring infidels of the present day, but to be enabled thereby to deny the miracles and the prophecies contained in the Gospel?

Prophecy—though alas! so unaccountably neglected by otherwise good men; and by others wofully misinterpreted and perverted—is the greatest boon to the people of God. What should we do without this unerring guide regarding the future? Should we not be in a state of complete bewilderment in reference to events whose forecast shadows make thoughtful men tremble? Why do all civilised nations emulate with each other, and wise men rack their brains, and try who can invent the most destructive engines of war? There must be some reason for all these things;—yes, some secret apprehension of fearful events looming in the unknown future; and a conviction that the confidence once existing among nations is gone. These, and similar signs of our times, show the student of the "sure word of prophecy," that our present dispensation is fast drawing to its close.

Prophecy was to the Old Testament saints the greatest solace in their otherwise dark dispensation. The promises of the coming Messiah kept ther hope alive amidst their varied trials and sufferings. The same should prophecy be to us, regarding things to come. Rightly considered, the prophetic word should keep us ever watchful for the coming of our blessed Lord and Savior. His return in glory is held out as the believer's hope throughout the New Testament.

Then, while fulfilled prophecies afford the most palpable evidences of the truth of Christianity, they are likewise a pledge to believers of the literal fulfillment of yet unfulfilled prophecies. As those predictions were fulfilled, that had reference to Christ's first coming, so will those be fulfilled, which relate to his second advent.

2 Prophecy is accessible to all. Whoever will, may inform himself of Christianity by studying fulfilled, prophecies. He will be surprised to find how literally they were fulfilled. Prophecy therefore, as alluded to, is a standing proof of our holy religion, which does not equally apply to the glorious event of the transfiguration.

3. Prophecy is an accumulative evidence of Christianity. Like as a river, in its course toward the ocean, takes up tributary rivers and streamlets, and thus swells into a mighty stream, so prophecy acquires increasing force, as one prediction after another receives its accomplishment. If we trace up prophecy to Gen. 3: 15, what an accumulation of power of the truth of God's word do we not obtain? Let all that love the Lord rejoice in this abundant and solid proof of the truth of our holy religion!

4 Prophecy may be called "the more sure word," because both Christ and his apostles have borne such strong testimony to its absolute veracity. How severely did our Lord reprove his disciples for their backwardness "to believe all that the prophets have spoken!" (Luke 24: 25–27.) Again in verses 44–48 of the same chapter, we read, "These are the words which I spake unto you that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me," &c. And the apostles who have left us any records, spoke repeatedly of Christ's second coming, and of the blessed results accompanying it. (Acts 3: 2; 2 Pet. 3: 15.) The pre-millennial advent of Christ is indeed a leading doctrine of the New Testament. (See 1 Cor. 15 23–28.) How becoming, then, is the exhortation of the apostle, "to take heed to the more sure word of prophecy, as unto a light shining in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in our hearts." The prophetic word is to the believer what the chart and compass are to the mariner. The mariner would be lost upon the tempestuous ocean, beset as he is with rocks and shoals, and quicksands, were he not to consult these instruments; the same is true of the Christian. He must consult his chart—"the sure word of prophecy"—if he would steer clear of the rocks which beset his path through this deceitful world, and arrive in safety in the heaven of eternal rest. And this will be more imperative, as the days draw nigh which the apostle Paul calls "perilous."—London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy.

To My Friends.

Having made several promises to visit friends and hold or aid in holding meetings this winter, a word of explanation is due, as to why I have not fulfilled my word. My excuse is, a pressure of duties at this office. By remaining here, and doing some extra work at times I can save the wages of one workman. Therefore, for the present I think it best to spend my time and labor here. This requires some self denial on my part, as there are many friends I desire to visit. I hope for the oportunity by and by.

He is of a mind to spend his time in the West, should God open the way, which we pray he may.——Sr. J. A. Rhodes reports four conversions in Eastern Michigan. The Methodist preacher warned the people to stay away—and as a result more came to hear her. Amen.——Br. Hough says the interest to hear, and call to preaching was never so great in his field as now. He adds: "It seems to me, that every tongue that can say, Behold he comes! ought to be engaged in the work of arousing the church and world to their duty at this time."——The church at Moline Ill. has had two additions to its numbers; and they greatly desire help for a protracted meeting. Oh! for laborers!——Brs. Babcock and Crandell are in a protracted meeting at Cecil, O.——Br. Harrison of Steuben Co. N. Y. "happened" to get hold of THE TIMES, and so subscribed for three months. We hope then he will take it permanently. He says he loves the doctrine, and so do we. ——Br. Reed baptised one soul in the Gaudeloupe River, Cal. a short time since. She has left the pleasure of the ballroom and the world, to look for Jesus, and eternal pleasure at his coming.——Br. J. W. Elliott has removed to Oakhurst, Miller Co. Mo., which will be his P. O. Address for the future. ——From Aurora, Ill., we hear of another Methodist minister preparing to proclaim the glorious Advent message. The Lord bless him.——We are sorry to hear that Br. Wm. A. Fenn is sick, so as to be unable to labor.

Correspondence.

From O. Case, Belvidere, Ill.

On awaking this morning these words came to my mind—"He sitteth as a refiner and purifier of silver."

Why is he represented as sitting, instead of standing; It implies the process is of so long duration, and requires such constant attention, an easy attention is necessary. Says the tempest-tossed, afflicted one, "Why is this permitted to come upon me? I shall sink." He still sitteth by as a refiner and purifier and knows just how much discipline is required to separate the dross from the pure metal. Those nearest the throne, come up out of great tribulations, having washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Just such a process is necessary to cleanse us. Every spot and wrinkle must be removed. It may cost many a sigh and groan, but he still sitteth by. Every avenue to permanent happiness may be closed up, no resting here, but there is a resting by and by. Weary or desponding ones, only a few more waves of sorrow. The last is just in sight, will soon have passed. The dark night of weeping is about ended. The day is about breaking. Courage, fellow pilgrims.

From E. A. Dodd, Titusville, Pa

The Times is the only preaching that we have here, that can be called Bible preaching. It rejoices our hearts that we can have the great privilege of reading a paper that teaches the truth, and proves its position as it progresses, by the word of God. I find as yet, very few that are willing, here in this place, to read The Times; but I have found one man and his wife, who believe the Bible doctrine, and I think will subscribe for the paper soon. I am searching for more believers, and hope to find those that are both able and willing to subscribe.

I attended church yesterday, and the speaker took for his text—"So God created man in his own image." He said that man was created above the brutes, as man was the only being that possessed the power of communicating his thoughts by speaking, and that was proof that God could do the same thing. But that was not the great point of likeness between God and man: the great likeness consisted in the fact that man had a soul that was as immortal as God himself: and that geology informed us that the world had existed for millions of years, and the inference was that it would continue for untold ages. And he prayed that the time might soon come when wars should cease, and all mankind be at peace with each other; and such other kindred doctrines of the day.

I could say Amen to the desire that the time of peace might soon come, but not in the way that he taught. He gave us some good ideas, but there was more cockle than wheat in the discourse. Take it all in all, if the world was to be converted, there was a great mistake made in selecting the means to be used in accomplishing it.

We are striving to do the will of God, and are looking for the speedy coming of our Master, and we talk the Advent doctrine to all such as are willing to hear. I hope to be able ere long to inform you that we have been able to form a church here. We will strive to do our duty, and leave the events in the hands of God who doeth all things well.

From Mary E. Fletcher, Cerro Gordo, Ill

Feeling as I do that the coming of the Lord draweth near, I feel to thank God that our eyes have been opened to see the truths that are revealed in his word. We can truly say, Bless the Lord O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name: for his goodness is from generation to generation, and his mercy is over all. Brn. Hurd and Gibson held a tent meeting here in October, which resulted in good. Many are searching to see whether these things are so. There are but few of us here, but we have been holding prayer meetings every Thursday evening from house to house. Our meetings are good. One has confessed Christ, and desires baptism. We feel to thank God and take courage that any are willing to accept the truth and rejoice in it. That some one may come this way to break to us the bread of life, is our prayer.

From I. I. Leslie, North Carver, Mass.

This is the last day of another year upon this still dreary earth. I might not have lived to see it, and only have through the purpose and power of God.

It has been a year to me, partly lost, or in which little has been done by me. Thus it seems, as I review it, yet I have done what I could, and what in the providence of God was placed before me to perform. I trust that another year, if I live to see its close, will witness more accomplished for Christ than the one now nearly passed. And yet I would here say, that I believe we do not know how much God wants us to do, or expects of us. We know not our strength to-day, nor what it will be. How then can we know how much he may expect us to perform in the year to come? The truth is we are not our own, nor in our own hands and keeping. God has our strength, and the amount required to be accomplished by us will be in proportion to the strength of body and mind given us by him. So after all, he is all.

I am now confined in doors by an attack of liver complaint induced by my living at the South. But the Lord is as good as ever, and I am among some of my best friends and lack no earthly good thing. I hope to live and regain my health. I have no desire for death—there is nothing in that state inviting to me. I do not see my propriety in the sentiment beginning the hymn which is attributed to Whitefield:

'Ah! lovely appearance of death!
What sight on this earth is so fair?
Not all the gay pageants that move,
Can with a dead body compare."

Those who expect to live up in heaven when they are dead, may see beauty and loveliness in death. I confess that once I did have this most absurd notion, and would have been glad to go to the grave in order to get to heaven. But I have learned better things than what I was taught in my childhood. I say I was taught it, for I never learned it myself, nor can any one learn it by his own investigations.

I have been here the most of the time since my return East. I came by the request of the believing few here; and in connection with Br. W. E. Hathaway have labored to build up the cause of our soon coming Lord. By God's blessing granted, a good interest has been awakened among the brethren and sisters, which has however, not been wholly confined to them, as two have been hopefully converted who have heretofore never attended our Advent meetings. Also, a church of about thirty members has been organized, and steps taken for the erection of a Chapel, which is already begun, and will, if the weather is favorable, be finished in two months. The house will be twenty-eight by forty-two feet, built of the best materials, and in a plain substantial manner. It will be built by the freewill offerings of the Church and people, many of the citizens not committed to our faith contributing to its erection. This house will be free for all, saint and sinner. Free seats and a free gospel to the poor and rich, if they will come and hear it. Brethren hereafter coming here to preach will find a good house and a united, warmhearted Advent church.

A great blessing is prayed for here; and it is expected that as the tithes are being brought into the storehouse of God, it will be poured out upon this people. Br. Hathaway has labored here long and hard, and is now seeing some of the fruit of his labor. He is a true self-sacrificing brother in the gospel, and will have a great reward by-and-by.

I shall remain here at present, and if health permit, until the chapel is finished and dedicated.

From Phrosie Wright, Hillsdale Co., Mich.

I wish to say a few words for my Master. I love his holy name, and am trying to serve him. Although I am a stranger to you, I trust I am not to Christ. It is nearly two years since I first gave him my heart. Since that time I have been trying to serve him with my whole heart fervently. But I come so far short in so many things, and feel myself unworthy. It seems that our little church has had trials, more than it could endure. Some have gone back to the world, we have lost some of our best members by death, and others have moved away. Oh! pray for those that remain, that we may all—every one—prove faithful to the end; which is not far distant. I feel like putting all that I have, am, or ever expect to be upon the altar of Christ, and consecrating myself, soul, body, and spirit to his service.

From Abigail M. Barnes, Clinton, Mass.

God bless the dear children in the Western country. I am rejoiced to hear that the truth is spreading far and wide, notwithstanding all the opposing influences which are brought to bear against it.

Dear Brethren, be of good cheer. "Be not weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." My heart says, Lord bless the truth everywhere. Give power to the word spoken, and inspire the writers with new energy, that this last message may reach the hearts of the people, and more be brought to a saving knowledge of God, before it is forever too late.

From John Ongley, Crawford Co., Pa

I find a few that are interested in the truth we advocate, but the majority are heedless, and overcharged with the cares of this life, going on with railroad speed to the judgment, which according to the signs of the times is soon to come on a doomed world. Oh! for grace and wisdom to enable us to do our duty in warning them to prepare for the great day of God's wrath, and try to get some to "be able to stand." When we see how good God has been to give "his only begotten Son" to die that we might have life; and also through his blood the possession has been purchased, and an offer made to us of our Home with the curse taken off it. how strange that so few are willing to accept the same, on the easy terms of faith in Christ, obedience to him, and a godly walk and conversation. Pray for us that we may be able to stand.

From Moses Winslow, Mt. Sterling, Ill.

I attend Sabbath-school and preaching from Sabbath to Sabbath. I often sigh for the privilege of hearing an Advent sermon from some of our strong men, for we have them in the Advent ranks. But I hear at our prayer meetings every week, at a single meeting, much about our immortal souls, and of going to heaven at death, of angels meeting us to convey us home to heaven, and the wicked to be transported to immortal suffering in hell, at detah. I go home to examine God's word to see what it says on these subjects; but find among the very many texts that speak of the soul or spirit that not a single one ever has immortal or immortality or anything that conveys an idea of an existence as consciousness between death and the resurrection, unless the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. When I find that the word immortality is only applied to man in the resurrection, when "this mortal shall have put on immortality," that is, those who had while in the probationary state on earth by patient continuance in well doing sought for glory, honor and immortality; when I find the word immortal only five times in the Bible; when I realize the fact that I hear more about it in a single prayer or exhortation than in the whole Bible, I am forced to believe God's word and reject the theology of the present age. I have seen it stated that the first teacher of the natural immortality of the soul was Tuales of Miletus 640 years B. C. [A mistake. Ed. Times.] Anaxagoras, one of his disciples next taught it. That 50 years after, 580 B. C. Pythagoras taught the same natural immortality of the soul. That B. C. 469 Socrates, the most distinguished man of his age taught the same doctrine. That Plato about 429 to 348 B. C. taught the same heathen theology. That neither Christ nor the Apostles taught it. Also that among the early teachers in the Christian church that in an Epistle to Diognetus A. D. 135, is the first trace of the doctrine of natural immortality, and that only supposed to have been written by Justin Martyr. That not until the third century do we find Turtullian, who affirmed the doctrine of endless torment. Now if these historical statements are correct (and I have seen no denial of them), we can see how this popular doctrine of immortality crept into the church with all its other kindred notions of going to heaven and hell at death, by tradition from heathen mythology taught by Thales, Socrates, Plato and others of their school, until a man who now takes the Bible view is put down as a skeptic, and one dangerous to society. I thank God that there are men who are not afraid to think, speak, and act, even against popular opinion.

I have been an honest believer of the natural immortality of the soul and its hundred doctrines of going to heaven or hell at death, thus doing away with the necessity of the resurrection taught by Christ and the apostles, fifty-eight years out of sixty of my life; for I was taught it from my earliest recollections. My dear brethren and sisters, let us cultivate a higher tone of piety, take God's word and understand it just as we understand the same language used in the every day affairs of life, and not have two meanings for the same words—a Bible meaning, and another for the affairs of this life. When we see destruction, let it mean so, not an endless life in misery. And so with perish and all the words that speak of the future condition of the wicked.

Brief Extracts.

Br. John Idel writes from Macon Co. Mo.: Br. Higgins is the only Adventist we ever heard. It is through him and your papers that we got on the right track, and are now looking for the return of our blessed Lord and Master. We have suffered much from sickness, and are poor, but are hoping that the Lord Jesus will soon return and drive all sickness and all trouble away.——————C. L. Jones Boylan's Grove, Iowa, says: My heart was pained when I read that you must bid adieu to many subscribers because they would not pay for the paper. I am sorry that our brethren do not feel more interested than to allow their subscription to fall behind. Oh! how I wish all would keep paid up. It would be better for them and for you. I am trying to let my light shine, to live for Jesus, that when he comes I may meet him with joy.——————Sr. Julia Shaw, Carlisle, O. says: I am trying to live for Jesus. He is a wonderful and glorious Savior, and has done all things for me. I live among the Presbyterians, and have no other meetings, except through The Times. If it were not for it I should have little real gospel preaching to enjoy. I lend and give away my papers, and the Quarterly, and they are making a stir among this people.——————From Northern Minnesota Br. H. B. Baldwin writes: One year ago I lost my beloved wife, who for twenty-seven years had rejoiced with me in "the blessed hope." This faith enabled her to rejoice in the midst of her sufferings, and at last she quietly fell asleep in Jesus. Since then I am all alone, with no one to sympathize with me or to talk with on those important truths. By the grace of God I hope to be found faithful at last.——————Br. John Barnfield, Tuscola Co. Mich., says: The Times is all the preaching I get. I would say to those whose letters I read, and all who read the paper, Let us live nearer and nearer to God. Let us be alive and in earnest in the Master's cause, and show by our walk and talk that we are the Lord's.——————Br. L. D. P. Armstrong, Detroit, says: I rejoice that light upon Advent truths is taking root in the minds of honest inquirers after the truth. The Lord will have a believing people when he comes; although they may be a little flock, yet they hear his voice—"Fear not little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." We are truly living in startling times. The present state of the nations of the old world indicates their speedy downfall. The King of kings, the Lord of life and glory is coming. We almost hear the rumbling of his chariot wheels. Oh! let us be ready to welcome his appearing, and be enabled to say, "This is our God, we have waited for him; this is the Lord, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."——————Br. E. Brintnall, Sanilac Co., Mich., says: I have been made to rejoice many times in reading the letters from my brothers and sisters. It gives me strength to hear of their faith. I trust the time is not far off when we shall meet; when Christ will come in his kingdom. And I truly thank God for the light I have seen on his blessed truth. God has blessed the labors of Brn. Mackey and Durand in this place. My prayer is, that God would give his ministers strength for their work. And I desire the prayers of all, that I may be faithful to the end.——————Sr. J. Meek, Tipton Co., Ind., says: Brn. Preston and Andrus have been here holding meetings, and a little band of soldiers in the army of the Lord has been organized. We have prayer meetings once a week and are trying to build up the cause. We rejoice in the hope of soon being with the Savior. Let us not cease to pray for the Lord to bless us and give us grace to be faithful to the end, that we may receive the crown of righteousness, which is laid up for us. I fully believe in the "unconscious state of the dead," a "literal resurrection," and that the future home of the saints will be in the renewed earth. It has been but a few months since I commenced work in the Lord's vineyard, but I have received many blessings, and "go on my way rejoicing." "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want."——————Sr. Mary Sayre, Louisiana, says: I should be very lonely without the paper. It is my church, for we have no preaching in this neighborhood. I have tried to get some to take or read the paper; but they laugh, and ask me if I think I "can revive that old Millerism again." The people think very little about religion. And there is but one person who will read my papers. I have placed them, and my books and tracts at her disposal.——————Br. James Meehan, Lenawee Co., Mich., says: The Times has come regularly, filled with precious truth, the truth of Jesus. And I hope the brother, whoever he is, that sent me The Voice a few years ago, and paid one year in advance, may be recompensed with good when Jesus comes. I thank him in my very heart. And I want the paper still, because I like it. It breathes of peace and good will to man. It gives the honor and glory to Jesus for life and immortality to be given, through obedience, when he who is our life shall come again to earth. Oh! I am glad that we have hope in the resurrection from the grave. I have learned to put my trust in Jesus, for life and immortality, who only hath it. (1 Tim. 6: 16.) I have not as yet joined the Advent church. But on the very first opportunity, God willing, I intend doing so. I am with you heart and hand.

Conference Minutes

Minnesota.

The Third Q. M. in the Saint Paul District was held at West St. Paul Jan. 6, 7 and 8. Preachers present, G. W. Miller, J. Raymond, E. T. Himes, Srs. L. E. Fassett and H. Dubey. Friends were present from Minneapolis, Mendota, St. Paul, Newport, Cottage Grove, Pine Bend, Castle Rock, High Prairie, St. Anthony. At the six preaching services the following facts were set forth:

1. The fruit which we bear will determine the character we possess; and if we would be successful in correcting the faults of our brother, we must first illustrate that which we teach by our own example.

2. The world, the flesh and the devil are our three great enemies; we sin when we yield to their temptations; but by the help of God we may overcome them, and be exalted to sit with Christ in his throne of glory, and at his second coming.

3. Sinners were admonished that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by, and as the blind man was healed so they may also be healed of sin—by faith.

4. Jesus finished the work God gave him to do, by his death and resurrection. The result of this work is (1) An unconditional salvation from the first or Adamic death; and (2) A conditional salvation from the second death.

5. By the parables we are taught that the harvest of the world is near at hand, when the reapers will go forth and gather the wheat into the garner and the vine of the earth into the great wine-press of God's wrath.

6. The seventh trumpet is the next to sound, when the mystery of God will be finished: therefore what we do for the salvation of souls must be done quickly.

Saturday morning in the social meeting the habit of tobacco-using was brought up and discussed at some length. Some testified that by the grace of God they had been enabled to break off the use of tobacco after indulging its use for many years. Others regretted they had ever learned to use it, but were ready to lay it aside if it was a sinful practice. A vote was called to decide this question, in the estimation of the Conference, by the light of God's word; but after further consideration, it was referred to the next session of the Annual Conference.

We all enjoyed a season of deep spiritual interest, which closed with hymns of good cheer, hoping to meet to part no more, when Jesus comes.

E. T. Himes, Sec'y.

Iowa and Missouri.

FIRST DISTRICT, Q. M.

The first Q. M. of the First District of the S. W. Iowa and N. W. Missouri Conference, met at Lewis, Iowa, Saturday, Jan. 14.

Organized by the appointment of Br. Alfred Collins, President; Wm. Morphy, Secretary, and G. L. McClure, Treasurer.

The subject of a camp meeting this year was taken up, and the subject freely discussed, after which it was voted that we agree with our brethren of the Third District in their suggestion, for the change of the annual meeting from winter to August or September, and hold the Annual Conference and a Camp meeting together. Eld. Morphy was appointed to act in conjunction with committees that may be appointed from the Second and Third Districts to carry this plan into effect.

Visiting brethren were invited to take seats with us in conference. The next Q. M. was appointed at the Slater S. H., seven miles east of Atlantic. It was voted that Montgomery Co., Iowa, be added to this Conference. It was also determined to give Brn. G. L. McClure and Emerson Blanchard a license, each, to hold meetings.

Preaching by Eld. Himes, Saturday eve and Sunday morn and eve, to full houses.

This Conference was a complete success, although some brethren were absent that we desired much to see. Six persons united with the Lewis church. The brethren have taken new courage. When we look back two years we are constrained to say, What hath God wrought! We believe we have the truth, and that this truth is just what the world and church both need, now, in order to arouse them to prepare for the judgment by taking refuge in Christ. May we be filled with the Holy Spirit, so that we may be fully alive to our responsibilities, and be clothed with power fearlessly and faithfully to proclaim our message to a sinful world.

Brethren, attend the Conferences if you would get good and do good.

WILLIAM MORPHY, Sec'y.

Illinois.

Q. M. AT ROCHELLE.

The second Q. M. of the DeKalb District, convened in Shockley Hall, Rochelle, Jan. 4. Preachers present: F. Burr, E. H. Burington, S. B. Mabey, D. S. Clark, N. W. Spencer, M. McCullock, and H. G. McCullock.

The following resolution was presented and passed:

WHEREAS, Buchanan is not a central point, we suggest to the officers of the Ministerial Conference, to locate the meeting at some point as far West, at least, as Chicago.

Resolved, That we are in sympathy with our Publishing Association in Buchanan, and will give it our aid and support.

Resolved, That we request the preachers and officers of the churches to solicit aid for the expenses of the delegates to the General Ministerial Conference, the same to be sent to the Secretary of the Conference.

Voted, To appoint a Committee of preachers to visit the church in DeKalb, hold a series of meetings to encourage and help them to rise from their depressed condition.

Adjourned to meet in Genoa, the first Wednesday in March.

The preaching was spiritual and excellent. Interest good. And we had the best of evidence that the talents of our young ministers have not lain idle.

H. G. MCCULLOCK, Sec'y.

BOARD MEETING.

At a meeting of the Board of officers of the General Conference of Northern Illinois, held at Rochelle, Jan. 6, the following brethren were appointed as delegates to the Western Ministerial Conference: D. S. CLARK, WM. MCCULLOCK, E. H BURINGTON. The following resolution was also passed:

WHEREAS, The Q. M. of the First District have voted to request their churches to help defray the expenses of said delegates,

Resolved, That we as a board do hereby recommend the same to all the churches: that their officers do lay the subject before them, and that said means be sent in as soon as practicable.

SILAS B. MABEY, Sec'y.

The General Western Conference.

At the next session of this Conference the following questions will be brough up for discussion:

1. The heathen theory of future life.
2. The Jewish theory of future life.
3. The Bible theory of future life.
4. Church government.
5. Church order.
6. Redemption.
7. The Restitution.
8. Future Retribution.
9. The proof of Jesus' Messiahship.
10. Why preach the coming of the Lord near?
11. Should we be a distinct people?
12. Signs of the times, and the periods.
13. The ancient and modern theories of a resurrection.
14. The future home of the saints.
15. The various theories of immortality.
16. What is the soul and spirit of man?

The meeting will probably be held sometime in February. Time and place are yet to be arranged. Any who can attend will please select one or more of the above topics, as subject for essays to read at the Conference. Thirty minutes will be allowed for the reading of each essay. Those who choose topics will please signify their selection to Eld. Wm. Sheldon, Brodhead, Wis., by letter. J. V. HIMES, President.

Book Notices, Etc.

THE BAPTIST UNION makes a fine appearance in its new dress, and hailing from New York and Chicago as offices of publication. It is a continuation of the "Christian Freeman," the Western F. W. Baptist paper, which failed to be supported.

WE are requested "as an act of personal courtesy" to announce the existence and object of the "Woman's Journal," of Boston, Mass. Its object is to bring about female suffrage. If we were politicians, we should be in favor of the movement. The "Woman's Journal" is the best of its class of papers.

I wish to say to those who write us letters of inquiry on the Atonement, Covenants, New Birth, and Millennium, that while always glad to give our views to all who ask, or will hear them, yet it requires more time than we can devote to write private letters to numerous inquirers, and to do justice to the subjects by elaborate arguments. These subjects are all presented and clearly argued in "The Plan of Redemption," which can be obtained at the office of THE TIMES, for $1.25. If any point in that needs further explanation, we will readily give it. I. C. WELLCOME.

THE ADVANCE has entered upon its fourth year under most favorable auspices. Its popularity has increased with each year, and it now stands in the front rank of American Religious Journals. It is able, candid, and independent in its editorials, full and fresh in its Church News of all the large denominations, attractive in its Children's Department; in fact it embraces in its columns—Agricultural, Scientific, Commercial, and Literary—a complete summary of current news of the day, with correspondence from all parts of the globe. The Advance Company of Chicago are publishers.

NEW TRACT.—All who subscribed for the publication of Br. Geo. Thomson's tract, are requested to send the amount to Eld. Himes at once, as the work is now ready for delivery. And any who would feel it a privilege to assist him and aid in its circulation, are requested to do so. Send such sums as you can. Any who desire shall receive books in return to the amount of their donations.

The work contains 32pp. and is a review of Warren's "Modern Sadduceeism." It will interest and be of use to all. 10c. post paid; 75c. a dozen.

Address: Eld. Geo Thomson, Attica, Wis., or M. D. Peavy, Arena, Wis.

THE BIBLIOTHECA SACRA for November was, to us, a number of unusual interest. The article on the inscription upon the monument erected by the Moabite King, Mesha, about the time of Omri and Ahab, and lately discovered, is the clearest and best we have seen upon that topic. "The significance of Jewish Sacrifices," is full of most suggestive ideas. Prof. Reubelt on Eschatology, or the last things, interested us intensely; while "Theories of the Resurrection" is valuable as showing the tendencies of modern theology. The Rev. Mr. Rose pleads as best he can for "the silence of women in the churches," and says all that can be said on this side of the question. But the fact will remain, that women, though not usually, are called to the public ministry, as well as to more private labors in the church.

THE BIBLIOTHECA SACRA, which stands at the head of the American Theological Quarterlies, has just entered upon its forty-first year. The January number announces the consolidation of the THEOLOGICAL ECLECTIC with the BIBLIOTHECA, and the addition of Geo. E. Day, of New Haven, to its able editorial corps. The table of contents is as follows: Protestant Sisterhoods, as they exist in Germany, and as they may be organized in the United States, by Rev. Francis Wharton; St. Patrick, and the Primitive Irish Church, by Rev. Enoch Pond; The Incarnation, by Prof. John A. Reubelt; What can be done for Augmenting the Number of Christian Ministers? by Prof. Edward A. Park; The Decline of the Religious Sentiment, by Rev. James H. Fairchild; Cicero, and Remarks on the Ciceronian Style, by the late Prof. George Shepard; Origin and Significance of Jewish Sacrifices; Literary Intelligence.

Obituary.

WISE. In Baltimore, Nov. 27, 1870, Br. Geo. Wise: in the 70th year of his age.

His end was peace; and he died in the full assurance of the advent near. When asked if Jesus was precious to him, he exclaimed, "Oh! yes! and I can from my inmost soul say,

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly."

And he repeated nearly all of this, his favorite hymn.

HURLBURT. At his residence in the town of York, Green Co., Wis., Dec. 27th, 1870, Eld. Augustus Hurlburt: in the 76th year of his age.

A discourse by the writer from a text chosen by Br. H. several weeks previous to his death (Ps. 17:15)—"As for me I shall behold thy face in righteousness, I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness," in the Baptist meeting house at Postville. The services were largely attended by the citizens, who showed their sympathy for the bereaved, and their friendship for our venerable and much esteemed brother and fellow-laborer in the vineyard of the Lord. May the widow's God and Father pour into the sad heart of the widow the consolation she so much needs. Br. Hurlburt died, as he had lived, in the sweet enjoyment of the true believer's hope, which no storm of earth can overthrow. It defies the power of earthly charms, and is an equal match for the king of terrors, as the sweet composure of mind and the strong confidence expressed by our brother at the close of his earthly pilgrimage attested. M. A. HITCHCOCK.

MANNING. In Manchester, Iowa, Nov. 1, 1870, Edward A. Manning: aged 66 years, 4 months and 18 days.

He was converted in 1843, under the labors of Father Miller, in Andover, Mass. Ever since he has been a firm believer in the speedy personal coming of Christ to reign on David's throne. This being his hope, he lived a life of devotion to his Lord, and died firm in the faith that his sleep will be short. May the Lord sustain the children, a son and three daughters, in the loss we all so deeply mourn, F. H. KENNY.

DRUM. Jan. 8, 1871, at his residence in Laporte Co., Ind., Br. Z. Drum, in the 81st year of his age.

Br. Drum had been a resident of this county over thirty years, and for the last sixteen years a firm believer in the speedy coming of the Lord Jesus Christ to reward his saints and establish his kingdom. This hope sustained him in his last moments, and he sleeps in Jesus, "Blessed sleep, from which none will ever wake to weep." Services by the writer.

D. MATHEWSON.

DUBEY. Castle Rock, Minn., Dec. 21, 1870, Br. Nicholas Dubey: in the forty-fifth year of his life.

His family sorrow not as those who have no hope. His companion desires the prayers of all, that she may receive strength to go forth and continue to preach to a dying world Jesus and the resurrection, which is her only hope in this affliction. Sermon at the funeral from John 11:35—"Jesus wept."

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, ... MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 31, 1871.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association of Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS { Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; the literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil; the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of his people, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,
To whom all communications should be addressed.

Business Agent's Department.

We have a supply of Eld. Wm. N. Pile's pamphlet—"The M[illegible]" Price 25c.

Who Sent $3.00?

Last week we received a letter enclosing $3 (the letter said [illegible] it contained only $3), to pay a balance due on TIMES, with NO NAME or P. O. ADDRESS [illegible]. Can any one inform us?

Bible Panorama.

We had the pleasure last week of viewing a Bible Panorama, consisting of [illegible] Dozen Tableaux, exhibited in this place by Br. [illegible] of Fort Wayne, Ind. We were highly pleased with the entertainment and can heartily recommend it.

We have received the new translation of the Psalms by the American Bible Union. 1 vol. $1.25 post paid.

Br Aaron Rittenhouse of Wooster, Ohio, is dealing in self adjusting saw handles and [illegible] that are giving entire satisfaction to those using them. Address him for circulars.

SHEET MUSIC. We have a sheet for sale containing the following tunes by Geo E. Lee: "Will You be There?" "Christ is Coming," "A Little While," "Cease Repining," "A Home for the Weary," "Jesus is Coming Again," "We'll Stand the Storm," "I Will come Again." Sent post paid for 30c.

A Colporteur's Notes.

We have just published a little pamphlet with the above title by Br. J. B. Wadsworth, the well known pedestrian Advent Colporteur, whose walks through the country have interested us so much within a year or two. It gives some incidents of his travels, and an exposition of the faith, with other matter. Sent post paid for 10c. tf.

Registered Letters.

We cannot advise our correspondents to send us money in registered letters. They are no safer than letters sent in the ordinary way. If you cannot obtain a post office order, send us a plainly directed letter, the ordinary way. Your 15c paid for registering does not insure safety. Over a thousand registered letters were stolen last year, and the government makes no restitution in case of loss.

To Correspondents.

P. B. PRRAITT. Refer your case to one who we think will help you. Advent ministers are few, compared with the work demanded of them. [illegible] WHITNEY. Your last will was filed Jan. [illegible] [illegible] W. SOUTHWICK. [illegible] MASON. The "Arena" package was sent [illegible] SEXTON. Write to Dr. [illegible] B. F. W. COOK. You are correct. Will bring your request before the ministry in that section. B. J. GOODWIN. Will send to the widow. [illegible] A. TIBBETS. The paper has gone to E. K. T. The Times.

AT HOME.

A severe snow storm last week prevailed throughout the East, delaying the mails; and in large cities there was much suffering among the poor.—We also observe a very small war-cloud, in the shape of a Washington despatch, announcing that unless Mexico voluntarily ceased to encourage smuggling along our borders, we must appeal to arms.—A great many large fires are reported. Be careful of your fires.—The Pacific Railway has been the scene of another great robbery, this time of the mail. A portion of the plunder has been recovered.—"Shocking chapters" of crime continue to occupy a prominent place in the daily press. The details are made up from every part of the world.—A late dispatch from New York says: Murders were never more frequent here than now. During the forty-eight hours ending Monday noon, there have been five homicides and thirteen attempts to kill; nine men were shot and stabbed yesterday alone.—Within a brief period the Erie Railway has laid out nearly $2,000,000 on lawyers and for other legal expenses.—There are registered in the country at large 696 grain distilleries, having a capacity for using 196,298 bushels of grain a day, yielding 870,984 gallons of spirits. The total quantity of distilled spirits in the United States on the fifteenth day of November last was 45,902,564 gallons.—Prof. James C. Watson, of the University of Michigan, who went to Sicily to observe the eclipse, has written home that he was completely successful; that he devoted himself entirely, during the totality, to the observation of the phenomena connected with the corona, and that the data he obtained show conclusively that this corona really belongs to the sun, it being composed of gases held in suspense high above the hydrogen flames, or protuberances, already so well observed.

Last Friday night the boiler of the Steamer W. R. Arthur, exploded when the boat was a few miles above Memphis. 87 lives are reported lost.

ABROAD.

Since Queen Victoria took her place on the English throne, thirty three years ago, every other throne in Europe, from the least unto the greatest, has changed occupants.—The South African "diamonds" are only quartz.—The vast prevalance of contagious diseases among the cattle, sheep and swine of Europe and North and South America gives evidence of the rapid approach of a period when the meat question will be an exceedingly important one. Authentic reports show that at this time cattle plague exists in Austria, in the Provinces of Transylvania and Galicia; in Belgium, in the districts of Blois and Jamoigne; in France, in the districts of Alsace and Lorraine, Seine and Marne, the Ardennes and Moselle; in North Germany, in Prussia proper, Rhenish Prussia, Brandenburg, and Pomerania; in South Germany, in Bavaria, Baden and Wurtemberg; in Russia, in Poland, in both European and Asiatic Turkey. Pleuro-pneumonia prevails in Holland, Turkey, Germany and Great Britain; and several of the United States. Foot and mouth disease exists in many parts of the United States, in South America, in Great Britain, France, Italy, Denmark and North Africa. In addition to this list of specific diseases, which might be much extended, various other fatal diseases are reported as prevailing among cattle in Texas, Virginia and other States, and generally over Europe.—It is asserted that the island of Aurora, containing some 180 square miles which lay about 900 miles east of Australia, has sunk.

The revived German Empire enters history with an area of 211,[illegible] square miles; and its population, which was 38,521,700 in 1867, may now be safely reckoned at 40,000,000. Its area is thus more than four fifths of the States of Texas, and its population a little greater than that of the whole United States.—The Cologne Gazette says that after the settlement of the preliminary question, Frankfort-on-the Maine is to become the capital of the Germanic Empire and the seat of the Government of the Confederation.—The Pall Mall Gazette says that the German Confederation can command the services, in case of need, of 60,000 seamen, a very large number of whom are now living or have served and have learned their business in the English mercantile marine.—M. Kuhn, recently the Austrian Minister of War, declared that he could place 270,000 men in the field in eight days, and double the number within a month, all armed with the breech loader and provided with an effective and improved artillery.—Up to Dec. 18, the Twelfth Prussian Army Corps has lost in the war 70,000 men, killed, wounded, and missing.

In Asia

The impending conflict between British and Russian civilization in Asia has long been foreseen by everybody who has watched the movement of the Czar toward Hindostan, but few realize how far that movement has gone, and how difficult it must now be for England to meet and check it. Practically the rival powers are only five days' march apart. Russia has no facilities yet for the rapid concentration of troops on the Oxus, but her advanced posts are surrounded by friends and allies; she has acquired a complete ascendancy in Persia; and on no part of her Asiatic frontier is she especially vulnerable. England, on the contrary, is open to serious attack in her North-Western provinces of Hindostan, where she holds in more or less precarious subjection a disaffected population who look upon Russia as their predestined deliverer. English statesmen undoubtedly appreciate the danger which they see not how to avert, and the settlement of the questions of Luxembourg and the Black Sea will be governed in a great measure by considerations of the chances of a campaign in Afghanistan.

Future Influence of Germany.

M. Michael Chevalier, a French writer who has been popular in England, has been writing upon the effects which the triumph of Bismark may have on this country. If France be blotted out from the list of Great Powers, Germany can command the Western sea-board, from Norway to Gibraltar. She will have navies and sailors; and, in the case of a war with America, he asks, "Would the situation of England be an enviable one? Would she have reason to congratulate herself on having held herself aloof from Continental affairs in 1870? Would she not bitterly regret having coldly allowed her faithful ally to be thus mercilessly crushed? "An invasion of England," he says, "would be popular in Germany." English travelers and correspondents tell us that the idea of one is so already. "The Germans are not mere dreamers: when they make war, they make it pay."

"They act as utilitarians with a vengeance. Booty has great attractions for them; they have a weakness for 'loot.' Independently of requisitions and war contributions they find a charm in individual plunder. Werther ever thinks of Lotte and the children, and is mindful of the pleasant home on the banks of the Elbe and the Oder, which can be embelished by knick-nacks and articles of vertu. Their pockets, their knapsacks, and the wagons they can lay their hands on, are filled with these souvenirs intended for home. Now, what a place England would be to plunder: how many touching, rich, valuable mementoes of his visit the landwehrman—good husband and tender father that he is—would he not find in the ancestral seats of the peerage and the comfortable houses of the English middle class? What a mine of wealth would he not find in London, the rendezvous of the capitalized wealth of the whole world. Supposing England invaded, she would then experience—what she pretends to ignore—the manner in which Prussians carry on the war, and the respect which they show for the rights of humanity. She would learn the bitter lesson taught by showers of bombs rained down upon open and defenseless towns; villages burned with petroleum as a punishment for harboring a few volunteers or militiamen, whom the Prussians might not choose to acknowledge as belligerents; she would have her experience widened by the outrages on her wives and daughters, (as at Bazeilles;) by having her Mayors flogged and dragged at horses' tails; by her Judges and most eminent citizens made to ride on the engines drawing trains laden with Prussian troops or ammunition; in short, by all that France has witnessed, suffered and experienced for the last four months."

M. Michael Chevalier's conclusion is that by helping France to resist, and check the overgrowth of Prussia, England would act in her own interest; and he puts the matter practically enough when he says that once France is crushed, the English home army must be raised to 350,000 men. In conclusion, M. Michael Chevalier asks how is it that "the bright intellects" that rule England do not understand that her interests are bound up with those of France? An English journal says "He will find the answer to his question in the apathy with which the country seems to view our seven vessels lying at the bottom of the Seine."

A writer in the Contemporary Review takes an equally gloomy view of the prospects of England as a great Power. He says:

"At this moment we are drifting to the disintegration of our Empire. Few believe it. Few have seen the great currents sweeping away off beyond the horizon, commencing their vast circuits even at the antipodes; but ere long the cyclone will burst upon us, and every one, especially the chief officers, will acknowledge a divine wind, and calmly resign themselves to see the vessel rocked and blown to pieces, saving themselves, no doubt, some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship."

But I believe that all this will not come without a tremendous struggle. There will be a great flurry before this whale rolls over and is stripped of her blubber. She will spout blood first, and a great deal of it.

INDEX OF ENGLISH SENTIMENT.

I lighted the other day, on an index of English feeling—a sixpenny pamphlet on the war, entitled—"The Fight in Dame Europa's School: Showing How the German Boy Thrashed the French Boy, and How the English Boy Looked On." My copy is of the tenth thousand. It begins:

"Mrs. Europa kept a dame's school, where boys were well instructed in modern languages, fortification, and the use of the globes. Her connection and credit were good, for there was no other school where so sound and liberal an education could be obtained. Many of her old pupils held masterships in other important establishments, two of which may be mentioned as consisting chiefly of dark, swarthy youths, decidedly stupid and backward for their years: while a third was a large modern academy, full of rather cocky fellows, who talked big about the institutions of their school, and talked for the most part through their noses."

The whole case is argued out very cleverly, and the result is the same as that arrived at by M. Chevalier.—London Cor. N. Y. Times

Latest.

MONDAY Jan. 30. It is certain that Paris has surrendered, and an armistice for three weeks by land and sea is agreed upon. The Germans will occupy the Paris forts, while the French troops, disarmed, will remain in the city, which will be provisioned. A meeting of the National Assembly will be called at once, and it is said that the following are the Prussian terms of peace:

1. The cession of the province of Alsace and that part of the province of Lorraine known as the German Lorraine.
2. A money indemnity of 1,000,000,000 francs.
3. Forty war ships from the French fleet.
4. One of the colonies now held by France which cannot learn that money indemnity must be guaranteed by municipalities. If this guarantee be refused, the property of each individual will be held until acquiescence is obtained.

The cable gives us a mass of conflicting and and undigested rumors and reports, that we have neither space nor patience to copy.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

Mr. Spurgeon has undertaken the defence of church fairs, or bazaars. He is of the opinion that much good may come out of them." Can "much good" ever come out of violation of principle?—Says the Examiner and Chronicler: Among the humors of the season we may mention the advertisement of Christmas services in a certain Protestant Episcopal church, in which the names of the singers were printed in full, and the assurance given to the public that the music in the morning would be "strictly ecclesiastical," while that in the evening would be of a "lighter" character. Whether there was to be any preaching, and if so by whom, and whether the sermons would be, like the songs, "strictly ecclesiastical" in the morning and "lighter" at night, the types did not tell us—that being a matter of comparative insignificance.—Dean Alford, a most able Scripture critic, died Jan. 2.—The Episcopal has discovered that there is a strong tendency in the Church toward masses for the dead. The same subject was discussed in the conference last February between the Greek Bishop of Syra and Tenos and the Bishop of Ely. The Bishop objected to the invocation of saints, but admitted that prayers for the dead were not forbidden in the English Church.—Professor Dr. Friedrich having, simultaneously with Prior von Dollinger and Professor Dr. Silbernagel, declined to sign an acceptance of the Infallibility Dogma, as well as of the decrees of the Ecumenical Council, demanded of him by the Dean of the Theological Faculty, has been required by the Archbishop to give a written declaration of submission to Papal authority within four weeks.—A clergyman of the Established Church, in England, is teaching the pupils of the schools in his parish that it is "wicked" for them to enter a "dissenting meetinghouse."—Years of famine are succeeding years of plenty. The various denominational societies and boards are fast coming to pecuniary straits. That of Presbyterian Domestic Missions, having run in debt for $25,000 to its own members and $25,000 more to its missionaries, is forced to cry earnestly for instant relief. That of the M. E. Church says, through its treasurer: "For the last three years the treasury has been greatly overdrawn. It is compelled to borrow heavily, and to pay interest to a very large amount. The debt of $115,000, Dec. 1 will be increased by April to nearly $200,000 unless the contributions of the people are largely increased." The American Home Missionary Society and the American and Foreign Christian Union are also out with urgent appeals, showing diminishing receipts, and exhausting treasury, and laborers in the field to suffer severely and to be painfully crippled in their work unless their supporters are willing to make the needed sacrifice at once.—Rev. Dr. Brooks will soon begin to publish in the St. Louis Presbyterian, a series of articles on the premillennial coming of our Lord. "Few have given this subject so much studious and prayerful attention, and we question whether any one is better prepared to set it forth in an intelligent and consistent manner." says a Presbyterian paper.—The trial of D. Lanahan, who exposed the misdoings in the Methodist Book concern, has resulted in his reinstatement in office, and a reference of the whole matter to the General Conference.—The New York Jewish Messenger resents the solicitude for the conversion of the Jews, that is, the fact that the Evangelical Alliance had set apart the 7th of January for the special consideration of the religious condition of the Jews. The Messenger said tartly: Evangelists! you have better work than to try to convert the Jews. Let us alone. We are happy in our "unbelief;" but there are thousands of starving Christians who have a Bible, but no bread; thirty-nine articles of creed, but hardly an article of clothing. Think of their wants, but let us alone!"—The "Year Book of Spiritualism for 1871" is unable to give the location of more than one hundred and ten Spiritualist societies, but claims that there are eleven millions of persons in the United States who hold that faith! There is assurance enough among a few of them to answer the purpose of eleven millions.—Says Robert Collyer (Unitarian): If I can judge rightly, the whole religious life is below zero, and we do but share the general torpor. There are, no doubt, seven thousand who have not bowed the knee to Baal, but they are no more seen than they were in the days of Elijah, the prophet. It was not more true in the days of the Prince of the Prophets than it is now, that the whole head is sick and the whole heart faint. The declension in values seem to have gnawed its way into the temple and tainted even the sacrifice by the altar.

THE ADVENT · CHRISTIAN QUARTERLY,

EDITED BY

JAMES H. WHITMORE AND WILLIAM L. HIMES.

The Quarterly is one of the most interesting and valuable publications of the day. Its articles are comprehensive, and give full or complete views of the subjects treated, in the handiest form for preservation. And it is the intention of the editors to give the best writings, original and selected, of the best writers on all topics related to the Second Advent. No articles will be inserted which are not deemed worthy of permanent preservation by the Bible student for study and reference. A year's numbers form a volume of 320 pages of matter, containing besides the valuable original articles, which can be found in connected form nowhere else, the cream of books, magazines and other publications, that would cost ten times the price of the Quarterly.

It will be the ambition of the Editors to make the Quarterly so interesting and valuable as to be a necessity to every well-informed and well-posted Adventist; while the publisher will endeavor to offer it on such favorable terms that none can afford to be without it.

The contents of the two numbers already issued, of the present volume are as follows: Loss and Gain, by A. A. Phelps; The Restitution, by O. R. Fassett; The Popular Superstition—Ghosts, by the same author; Object of the Present Dispensation, by Dr. McNeile. The Kingdom of God, The Davidic Covenant, and The Time of Reward, Editorial; Review of Stuart on Future Punishment, by Henry Constable; The Doom of the Unjust, by the same author; The Final Punishment, by an able orthodox scholar and minister; A Question for the Times, or the Parable of the Leaven, selected; The Witch of Endor, by Prof. Walter Scott. The Stumbling Block, by Rev. Samuel Minton, with other valuable articles.

The next number will be issued early in January; and contain articles by Edward Falconer Litton of Scotland (on Jewish Knowledge of a Future State); by H. Bonar (from the Quarterly Journal of Prophecy); by J. H. Whitmore (a Review of Dr. Clark's essay on the two fold nature of man, containing the arguments which Methodist journals assert made an immaterialist of Eld. R. Wendell); by the Editor of the Rainbow; by Prof. Barlow of Dublin, and others.

Remember that only a limited edition of the Quarterly is published. Subscribe at once, and secure the entire volume. Only about a dozen sets of Volume I. remain, and they cannot be duplicated.

TERMS: Single copies, one year, $1. Seven copies to one address, $5.

SPECIAL RATES.

To all subscribers for the ADVENT TIMES the Quarterly will be furnished at 75c. a year,

To new subscribers for both, we will send the TIMES and Quarterly one year, $2 50.

"Behold I Come Quickly."

This is the language of Jesus about sixty-three years after his ascension to heaven. His return is declared positively. When? Quickly! What is the force of this word in this place? The Greek is taku, and is defined by Greenfield: "Taku, quickly, speedily, hastily; in the sense of, soon, shortly, immediately, suddenly; by implication, easily, readily."

It occurs in the following passages only: Matt. 5, 25: 28, 7, 8: Mark 9, 39; 16, 8: John 11. 29; Rev. 2, 5, 16; 3, 11; 14, 14; 22, 7, 12, 20. In Mark 9, 39, it is translated lightly.

Did Jesus tell John that he would come in a short time, or that he would come suddenly? It is obvious that shortness of time clings tenaciously to the word in the most of the preceding scriptures; but does not suddenness very strongly imply the same? If a thing is done suddenly, is it not necessarily done in a short time? Would not a long time entirely destroy the suddenness?

When John's condition is taken into account, the preponderance appears in favor of meaning, quickly, shortly, soon. John was in banishment—an outcast from society. The wicked were in power. The righteous were suffering cruel martyrdoms. John had himself been thrown into a vessel of boiling oil! But the Lord had promised to reward him and them. When? "When the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory." (Matt. 19, 28.) But when shall this be? "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." (Matt. 25, 31, 32.)

John needed comfort: so did his fellow-sufferers: and so have all that have suffered for Christ since: and so will they need comfort who may continue laboring and suffering for Christ till he shall return. How cheering to hear him say: "And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." (Rev. 22, 12.) If this could be said in the time of John, how much more vehemently can it be said now, seeing we are almost eighteen hundred years nearer that glorious appearing of the mighty Savior?—Prophetic Key.

The Meaning of the War.

Eighteen hundred and seventy has left its awful mark in history. We had no intention of taking the place of the newspapers, which, for many months contained little else than details of carnage, distress, and misery unprecedented in modern times, and, in some respects, unparalleled in the dismal story of man. Our business was to point the moral of the dreadful fact now and then, to generalize and suggest, not to write the history of fire, agony, and famine with which the world's papers were making the world's inhabitants only too familiar. We keep to our sacred mission, and proclaim that the things which are shaken must pass away to make room for that which cannot be shaken, because it is founded in everlasting righteousness. We need not indulge in words of indignation against ambitious monarchs, because we understand, and have taught for many years, that all "the powers that be" are simply provisional, during the time that God permits the world power to Gentileism, and will pass away forever as soon as Christ, the Anointed Sovereign of universal empire, shall come to his throne. We leave it to the secular press to mete out praise or blame as it sees fit, to emperor, king, or republican, and to devise its own schemes of universal peace and brotherhood, for we know beforehand that all these schemes will fail, and that they are, like the very war which has given them birth, among those signs of the times which speak of the nearness of a crisis, the naming of which only provoks the world's ridicule, and provides satire to the avowedly "religious" as well as the secular portion of the press.

We are not surprised at anything that has taken place during the last six months, because we know that the time of man's probation is fast coming to a close, and that in the face of the universe he must be pronounced a failure once more. That the doctrine of human perfectibility by human agency is utterly fallacious, though proclaimed by statesmen, philosophers, and divines, we are thoroughly convinced, and have been scorned and shunned for saying so, although the reason why we have spoken thus is simply because we prefer the word of God to that of men. There is a divine constitution prepared for the government of the nations, and they will be heaved, and tossed, and shattered, and broken until that be brought into actual operation. The government of the world will be a perfect and most beautiful thing some day, but not until the Second Adam, the Lord from heaven, is "King over all the earth."

The thing that has pained us most of late, however,—i. e. apart from our deep sorrow on account of the poor men and helpless women and children who have been the victims of insanity,—is the ignorance of men who ought to know better. Some amazingly foolish things have been said about "Christianity and the War Spirit." We cannot cease to wonder how it is that men who [illegible] words of our Lord and his apostles can possibly expect the era of universal peace before the Prince of Peace returns to set up his kingdom of truth and righteousness. The world would not have the Prince of Peace when he was here. It preferred the dominion of the Prince of Darkness to that of the Son of God, and what can it expect but upheavings, revolutions, trouble, war? For the Divinely appointed Ruler has not given up his claim to the inheritance and the throne; and one of the worst things that could happen to humanity would be the enjoyment of undisturbed repose under "the ruler of the darkness of this world," who is a usurper, a murderer and a liar. We have had leaflets, and tracts, and pamphlets sent us, denouncing the war—as if any one approved it—and intimating that ministers of the Gospel are to blame for not preventing its continuance, which is something too absurd for criticism.

How little some men know, even at this hour of the day, what the proper function of a minister of the Gospel is! The fallacy of this kind of reasoning arises from the inveterate idea that Christianity is destined to subdue the nations to the will of God—an idea which is not only without the slightest support in the Bible, but which is directly contradicted by its plainest teachings.

"But," we are asked, "is not war anti-Christian?" And as it is correctly assumed that there is only one reply to this pointed question, the querist congratulates himself that he has made out his entire case, that Christianity is "a failure," and that its advocates must be struck dumb by the horrible calamities which are desolating "Christian nations" in the latter end of the nineteenth century! But we are too old to be frightened by a logical superstructure whose foundation is a quagmire. We have but to touch the imposing erection and it sinks into ruin. We admit at once that war is anti-Christian, obviously, emphatically, flagrantly so; and that Christianity has not tamed the ferocity of the human animal, nor sheathed swords, nor subdued the ambition of tyrants, nor diffused the love of peace through the hearts of nations. "The nations have drunk of the wine of Babylon, therefore the nations are mad." The intoxication caused by the poisoned cup of apostasy from God has driven the human race into acts of insanity; and Christianity, though nominally embraced by the chief of the nations, has not exorcised the delirious demon under whose influence they have been wounding and slaying each other from time immemorial. The nations are called Christian, but there is no magic in a name to change them into the likeness of him to whose name they have no right. There are "Children of God," saints and servants of Jesus Christ, in Germany and France, men who sigh and cry because of the abominations that surround them, and they are the living proof that Christianity has done the holy work she professes. She comes to "take a people out of the nations," and gladly welcomes all who submit to her gracious conditions, but she is not responsible for a task she never undertook, and must not be charged with failure in a region where unbelief of men would not permit her to act. The war, then, is another evidence that the boasted "civilization" of the day is only a more highly educated barbarism; another proof of our Lord's prophecy that wars should continue to the end of the age; another most manifest sign of the times, telling us that events are rapidly hastening to the great crisis; and another call upon believers to look for the coming of the blessed Lord, whose presence is so urgently needed in this sin-cursed and terrible, distracted world. This is the lesson we draw from the tremendous conflict of 1870. May it be impressed upon many hearts, so as to lead to a more earnest waiting upon God.—Rainbow.

Rom. 8: 22.

The air is full of strange
And solemn whispers of a fearful wrong,
Whose dire disorders, like a fever-flame,
Consume and blight the bloom on Nature's cheek,
Unspoken grief and dark forbodings crowd
The vaulted sky, like winged embodied sighs.

A universal wo,
Full of a breaking wo, goes up to God
From every creature. In the winds is heard,
By ears attuned to sympathies divine,
A willing cry, caught from the stricken world
That calls for her deliverance.
The same sad, mournful wail rose up to heaven
When sinning Adam fell.

The marching years,
Deep freighted with immortal deeds, and dark
With murky battle-smoke, and stained with blood,
Have borne upon their bosom wide and far
The seeds of youthful nations.

These have sprung,
Like exalations of a summer's night,
And grown from pilgrim bands to empires.

Those in turn
Have flashed like meteor gleams across the wild,
Till then untrodden, wastes of other lands,
And tortured earth for bread.

Yet all,
All change and motion and stupendous toil
Could heal no wound, could soothe no bitter pang,
Nor hush one note of mourning Nature's wo.
Well nigh six thousand years the patient
  Earth
Has borne her blasting curse around the sun,
Through vailing darkness, through the chang ing light,
Through strange mutations, and th' eventful scenes
Of restless, fleeting ages.
Convulsed and shattered by the hidden wrath
Of subterranean fires; upheaved and torn
By vengeful floods, and scourged by rainless winds,
Robbed of her beauty by devouring heat,
By vigorous cold, by scathing lightning's fire
And swift, remorseless tempests. She has felt
The bitter fullness of consuming wrath,
And borne the dark, primeval curse upon
Her bleeding bosom to the very gates
Of her millennial Sabbath.

Yet still she groans,
And still she yearns for her immortal King
To roll the ebbless tide of glory in.
Ah! Earth is weary of her mouldering dead,
Her daily new made graves and living wrongs;
Her breast is panting with a mortal throe,
To shake the slumbering millions from her graves,
And leap along her orbit with her garb
Of ancient glory on.

The years roll on,
And darker still the cloud of vengeance grows
Upon the brow of him who died to save,
And brighter grows the bow of promise, too,
That spans the darkness of the stricken world.

The hour of joy is hastening on apace,
Deliverance, promised long, is on the wing;
The "times of restitution" seems to steal,
Like morning's ruddy glow, across the hills;
The startled curse must flee, as flies the night
Before the blazing day: the groan must cease,
The voice of wailing and the cry of wo
Must die in solemn silence, and a song,
Full of a gushing rapture, shall uproll,
And Earth shall celebrate her jubilee.
Look up! lift up the weary, drooping head;
Watch yet a little longer for the tread
Of royal feet on hoary Olivet.
The day must break, the light must come!
  Hope on!

Retrograde Movements.

We are led to believe sometimes, when looking upon the achievements of man, that the world is really growing better, but when we look the ground all over, we see some very dark pictures that may well cause us to feel some degree of anxiety and apprehension. Let the wheat and tares grow together until the harvest, was the command of our Saviour; and we think, perhaps, the harvest is about to commence; already we may hear the voices of the reapers in the distance. There are two mightier opposing influences at work gathering, than ever before. The wheat is being gathered; the bad also is striking hands in every departments of life. In our national affairs the dark side is seeking to control the nation, and crowd out all that is good and pure. One class would enslave the masses and exalt the few; and to accomplish this, they will sacrifice honor, honesty and purity. There is no work attempted for the good of mankind, but what the adversary of serpent-like cunning, to oppose that work, and prevent the accomplishment of anything for the good of the people. The women have thought that they had a work to do, and many believed it; but no sooner does the prospect begin to brighten, than a retrograde movements is commenced by those that pretend to be helping in a good work, but in reality their influence tends to degrade by teaching to disregard God's commands—breaking down the sacred marriage relation. Could such persons succeed, we would soon drift into barbarism, and the foundations of our government would totter and fall. The permanancy of our Republic is in the virtue and intelligence of the people, let either fall—and with it goes our people's government. We call on every man that loves his country, on every man that loves a higher civilization, on every man that loves his home, to oppose such sentiments as were advocated by a lady lecturer in Farwell Hall this week. The change needed is not that we have a law less stringent, making it easy for villains to break up happy homes. There are cases where divorce may be necessary; but for the good of society, it would be better to grant divorces only for separation, but not permit a second marriage; it would wrong a few, but the suffering of the few would be the salvation of our country. Let people understand that they could not marry a second time, and ninety-nine cases out of every one hundred that now get divorces, would want none; and a large per cent. of those that do, would finally live together. Society would be protected, crime, in every way, would be lessened. The present loose law on the subject, is only an invitation for crime, and should be changed, not as advocated by some, who would drift us into heathenism; but let the marriage contract be made more sacred, let it be guarded by more stringent laws than we have at present.

Since the close of the war, there is manifested every where a general looseness in morals, and the charge brought against us, that, as a people, we will do almost anything for money, is too true. It is said that money will hire one's best friends to dishonor you and themselves. It is said that for money, you can get men to blast the prospects of any man; for money life will be sacrificed, as if it were of no more account than that of the beast. Time was when you could depend on the honor of men; we would not infer that there is no honor now among men, for we find it every where, but it is growing more scarce every day, and it is hard to find men but what will sell themselves and every one else for money. We think honor is worth more than money, and the man that sells it in the markets has got about as low as any man can possibly get. What is there left of a man when his honor is gone? He cannot look a man straight in the face; he cannot ask God to be his friend, for he has been no friend to any one else; he cannot ask him to love, care, and guide him, for he has only hate for those for whom he should have cared. No man can lodge a prayer higher than his head, until he has first done his duty to his fellow-man. He that would know the sweets of being forgiven, and cared for by an all-wise Providence, let him forgive, and love, even while he grieves over the injury of a supposed friend. Many of our blessings that we receive, come through the agency of some one man; so it seems that we find God very easily when we have done our duty to those about us. So I conclude that God helps us about in proportion as we help others. Some men think it makes but little difference how they over-reach, and take advantage of their fellow-man, providing they only pray long and hard. They think they are the Lord's dear children, they have the privilege of doing what they wish and it is all right. It is a downright imposition on God and religion, to ask him for what we do not work and live for. God looks with tender compassion upon a [illegible] dedicated to him, where angel messengers can come and go, scattering light and truth along our pathway. One such temple is worth more to the world than all the grandeur of wealthy temples built with hands.—Life Boat.

GATHERED FRAGMENTS.

A divinity student recently said to Henry Ward Beecher, "How do you preach the doctrine of election?" "Well," was the reply, "when a man is soundly converted, I tell him he is elected. I preach that after the fact rather than before."

As a specimen of Bunyan's homely yet pointed similes we give his forty-first Emblem, "On the Cackling of a Hen:"

"The Hen so soon as she an egg doth lay,
Spreads the fame of her doing what she may,
About the yard, a cackling she doth go,
To tell what 'twas she at her nest did do.

Just thus it is with some professing men,
If they do aught that's good; they like our hen
Cannot but cackle on't where'er they go,
And what their right hand doth, their left must know."

—A Roman Catholic establishment in London supplies instruments of "religious discipline" to the faithful who wish to mortify the flesh. One is called "iron discipline," and is a whip or "cat" with several tails made of wire links, each tail ending in a weight to give momentum, and each link of the tail being armed with two sharp spikes to pierce the flesh. Another is a "bracelet" or band for any part of the body, lined with spikes on the inside! This in the name of the Lord Jesus!

A LAY PREACHER'S TESTIMONY.—Wendell Phillips, in his late Sunday address, spoke as follows: "Is Christianity an inspired faith or not? Shakespeare and Plato tower above the intellectual level of their times. But if that Jewish boy in that era of the world, in Palestine, produced Christianity an inspired faith or not? Shakespeare and Plato that the difference between them and their times becomes an imperceptible wrinkle on the face of the earth.... The miracles which Christ wrought are nothing to the miracle he was. Until you show me some loving heart that has felt more profoundly, some strong brain that even with the aid of his example has added something important to religion, I must, if I use my common-sense, say, no man did all this.

Select Poetry.

The beloved Dr. James Hamilton of London—just before the close of his work—made a fine translation of a German "peasant hymn," with which American readers are not generally familiar. It is so exquisitely fresh and beautiful that it was sung at Dr. Hamilton's own funeral.

Neighbor, accept our parting song,
The road is short, the rest is long,
The Lord brought here, the Lord takes hence,
This is no place of permanence.

The bread, by turns of mirth or tears,
Was thine these checkered pilgrim years;
Now Landlord World, shut to the door,
Thy guest is gone forevermore.

Gone to a realm of sweet repose,
Our convoy follows as he goes:
Of toil and moil the day was full,
A good sleep now!—the night is cool.

Ye village bells, ring, softly ring,
And in the blessed Sabbath bring,
Which, from the weary work-day tryst,
Awaits God's folk through Jesus Christ.

And open wide, thou Gate of Peace,
And let this other journey cease;
Nor grudge a narrow couch, dear neighbors,
For slumbers won by life-long labors.

Beneath these sods, how close ye lie,
But many a mansion 's in you sky:
E'en now, beneath the sapphire throne,
Is his prepared through God's dear Son.

"I quickly come!" that Savior cries;
Yea, quickly come! this churchyard sighs.
Come, Jesus, come! we wait for thee—
Thine now and ever, let us be.

"The Time is Short."

This language was used by the Apostle Paul in his first letter to the Corinthians. He presents a great truth in most emphatic words, "The time is short." The bold affirmation is left without a word of argument. The facts asserted are so patent to all that proofs from a public logician would have been superfluous and unnecessary. Paul knows this, hence he simply states the fact as a fact and leaves it to work its own way and take its own course.

Time is short. Look at it from whatever standpoint we may and it still holds true. There is no view that can be taken of it consonant with truth without incorporating the idea of its brevity. Time is often spoken of as embracing the duration allotted to this economy of God—the space between the Creation and the Judgment. In this application its point of contrast is between the limited and the unlimited—time and eternity. Certainly, considered in this light, it is short. It might seem long to us if it were the measure of our days. There have been already nearly six thousand years since God spake this world, with all the machinery of nature, into existence. And this, if we had it to measure, would, doubtless, appear long to us. But it is only because of our finite comprehension; because we cannot fathom things that are infinite. Could we understand the length of eternity as its broad expanse stretches out into the unceasing forever; could we number the days of God, and count the years of the eternal, then should we begin, at least, to realize the shortness of time as compared to eternity. This we cannot do, hence we shall be satisfied with a faint comprehension of the manner in which God regards time. Peter says, that, with God, "a thousand years are as one day, and one day as a thousand years." (2 Peter 3: 8.) We will surely be satisfied with a faint comprehension of this. How it is that one day is as a thousand years is undoubtedly beyond the reach of human understanding, only as it may be faintly recognized in the fact of God's infinite greatness. Such, however, is God's idea of time, however little we may comprehend it. And although, if we were promoted to the exalted position of God in our present condition, the ages of time would drag out wearily, and be of long continuance, yet time, in its broadest sense, when duly considered and properly applied, is but short, and will be soon passed. The creation to the Eternal is as though it had been but yesterday. It is all present to him. He knows no such thing as finite calculation. This state of things is transient. There is nothing permanent or lasting about it. Close upon the heels of creating power and glory is heard the closing requiem of earth's last hour. With the speedy succession of fast passing ages, nations rise and fall, and with an unerring rapidity the panorama of time closes forever, and upon the last, as well as the first drama, is written—Time is short.

Another, and perhaps more pertinent use of the word time, is in its application to the period that elapses between the cradle and the grave—our life in this world. Doubtless in this sense Paul uses the term in the text, referred to above, when he declares time to be short. "This, I say, brethren, the time is short." (1 Cor. 7: 29.) That is, your life is brief—you cannot stay here always—your being is transient, and soon will your end come. This seems to be the import of his words. And how true are they! Is not life short? Ask the gray-headed and infirm old man, who has crossed the threshold of three score and ten, and is fast sinking into the narrow recess of the silent tomb. Should you ask such an one, "Is time short?" he would quickly reply, "Yes! it is so short that at the moment when I expected to enjoy it I found myself at the end of the journey, with no more time allotted to me." This is true to the letter. The world is flooded with men whose brightest anticipations will culminate beyond their exit from time. Their plans reach so far ahead that death oftentimes cuts them down before they have reached their expected and longed-for goal. How foolish it is to build so much on a foundation so fickle. It has been said "Riches have wings;" so has life, and everything else that pertains to earth or earthly things. They will [illegible] very long at best. Soon they [illegible] be numbered with the past. [illegible]hen behooves mortals to build upo[illegible] sure foundation (which is Christ,) and to lay up treasures in heaven, where they will abide forever.

Days, months and years pass quickly away, and we feel loth to realize or acknowledge the transition. Many events connected with our history, recorded many years ago, are still fresh in our minds, and the only wonder with us is that it has been so long since they occured. It seems like a dream to remember our early life, when at home we spent so many happy days with parents, brothers and sisters; but they are gone, and years have intervened since their exit, and yet we feel as though but yesterday we enjoyed their associations. Can it be? Yes, life is short. At the longest it can't be long. A life-time, although it may be fraught with many years, and those years may be full of sorrow, yet its longest day is short. How important then it time be so short that it be well improved! Every moment should be appropriated to its true purpose. It should be given to the work for which God designed it. During this narrow space man must qualify himself for eternity. His actions in life are to be the only criterion from which judgment can be rendered in the great and awful day of account. Time, then, is a precious treasure. The issues at stake are mighty and big with importance. They lay hold of eternal things. Man's eternal destiny is at issue. Let not, then, a moment of our time go to waste. Let us rather seek to improve it all in the great work of laying up a treasure in heaven, and thus securing the one great end of life—the salvation of our souls, both in time and in eternity.

The Second Coming of Christ. No. 2.

We are now to answer the question "when may we expect this period to arrive?" The day, the week, the month or the year, we cannot with certainty state. "The times and seasons which the Father hath put in his own power" are not made known to us. The Christian's duty is, to, "watch," and "wait." Jesus, the Savior has assured us however, that the world's inhabitants will be unprepared for his coming; for "when men shall say, peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them." Christ says his return will be as unexpected as the destroying waters were to the inhabitants of the old world, and the fiery elements to the people of Sodom; "they ate, they drank; they married wives and were given in marriage" until the judgment of the Most High fell upon them, and destroyed them all; and "so shall it be, in the day of the Son of God." (Luke 17: 26–34.)

But some of my readers may say—"Those passages of Scripture which refer to Christ's coming, may, and can, be used to designate the shortness of life and the certainty, or suddenness of death." Is this so? Will such a rendering be consistent with the language used to specify the Lord's return? We think not. But let us select a few of these passages, and see if they will bear such a construction. But before we do so, let me remind you that God has represented death in his most holy Word, as the wages of sin; and designates him an enemy; and an enemy which shall be destroyed by Christ. And here let me ask you, whether nature does not shrink from the anticipation of death's approval? Do we not shudder at his icy touch? Is not the heart often lacerated and torn with anguish while gazing on the mortal agony of a loved husband, wife, child, parent or friend, while they are gasping in convulsive agony for the breath which grows shorter and weaker? Is there anything beautiful in the attennuated frame, the languid eye or the pallid cheek, which induces the beholder to long and desire to be in like circumstances with the suffering one? Nay, verily! Flesh instinctively shrinks from the grim messenger, and wishes it were so, that, they too, like Enoch and Elijah could be spared the pain or misfortune of dying.

But we will proceed to make the change referred to, and substitute for Christ's coming, that of death. "For as the lightning cometh out of the East and shineth even unto the West, so shall also the coming of death be." "Immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken; and then shall appear the sign of death in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn when they shall see death coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." "And death shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." "But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of death be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall the coming of death be." (Matt. 24: 27, 29 31–39.)

We will pass over the other Gospels and turn to the Epistles: "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of death shall not prevent those who are asleep. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of death cometh as a thief in the night." (1 Thes. 4: 15; 5: 2.) "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of death's coming; for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." "But the day of death cometh as a thief in the night, in which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up." (2 Pet. 3: 3, 4.) He will select no more, for the change is not pleasant. Have I, dear reader, given the true rendering of those passages? If your hypothesis is correct, the change made is correct likewise. It cannot possibly be otherwise; for what can be said is the meaning of one: must of necessity be the meaning of all; for each passage has reference to the same subject. Think of this.

But there are others who will say, that the time refered to, when Christ shall a second time come to this earth, is explained by John in Rev. 20: 7–15. Can this be proved? We will again refer to our Book of books and learn what that teaches. If you, dear reader, are aquainted with the Bible, you know that Jesus the Savior is represented as a "Prophet," a "Priest" and "King." In each of these offices he stands related to man, and sustains each character at separate and distinct periods.

Now when does he sustain these characters? As we proceed we shall learn when. In Matt. 10: 17–23, Christ foretells, that his children shall be persecuted by councils, governors, kings, parents, and children; and, also, of his second coming. In Matt. 12: 41–43, he foretells the destruction of the wicked, and the happiness of the righteous. In the same Gospel (ch. 16: 24) he tells of his second coming, and in ch. 17: 9–12 of his death and resurrection. In ch. 20: 18, 19, of his betrayal, condemnation, mocking, scourging, crucifixion and resurrection. In ch. 24: 1–41, the destruction of the temple, of false Christs and their success; of wars, famines, pestilences, earthquakes, persecutions, false prophets, of the love of many professing Christians waxing cold, the universality of gospel preaching, the signs and wonders performed by false Christs and false prophets, the suddenness of his coming, the signs which shall preceed this event; and the mourning and distress which shall be experienced by all the tribes of the earth, when they shall see him coming in the clouds of heaven; and, in ch. 25: 1–12, he foretells the state and condition of the professing church, when he shall come to claim his Bride.

The beloved disciples in Rev. 19: 10, says: "for the testimony of Jesus, is the spirit of prophecy." Thus we see that the character of the prophet was sustained by Christ while tabernacling here in the flesh, a man of sorrow and griefs. Priest he was not, yea, he could not be; for he was the victim; the sacrifice offered, the Lamb slain. His blood was poured out before God, an atonement for the people. On him was laid the iniquity of us all. But now that he has ascended into the heavens, he has taken the character of "Priest," the "Great High Priest;" a Priest who liveth to make intercession for us. He now stands between unflexible justice and sinful rebellious man, and prevents the sinner from being cut down as a cumberer of the ground. It is because he now, sustains the priesthood-character, that man with his manifold infirmites and weaknesses draws near to a throne of grace and obtains mercy and receives grace to help him in time of need. It is because he is now a Priest, that his pleadings prevail in the sinner's behalf, and mercy woos, entreats and persuades mankind to be reconciled to God. Blessed be God; that, Jesus the Savior of men, now sustains the character of priest, the people's priest. This position he could not have taken while an inhabitant of this world, for Paul (Heb. 8: 4,) says: "For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing t[illegible] there are priests that offer gif[illegible] according to the law." But now he "is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heaven, a minister of the sanctury, and of the true tabernacle." Paul therefore tells us, that, now, in this present dispensation, Christ is a priest, and and a "priest after the order of Melchizedek."

Adventism Worse Than Infidelity.

This grave charge has become a proverb. Some one said so once, and some one heard them, and thus it goes from mouth to mouth, parrot like, and is about as deeply considered and realized as is the parrot's talk. This charge is either true or false. If true let us confess it: if false, let us prove it so. There are thousands of facts (and as many falsehoods) asserted, and the reason entirely unknown to the author. For instance: the little child as soon as it begins to prattle about its mother's knee will notice, and say it is dark; but cannot give you the reason, although the assertion is correct. But when it becomes a little older, it will tell you it is because the sun is set. You ask it, What causes the sun to set? It is again silent for a few years, until its mind is sufficiently developed to understand the solar system. Then it can give you the full cause of the effect seen. This is why there is so much said without proof. They see the effect, and know not the cause.

Now to this charge we plead guilty, and will endeavor in a brief and simple manner to give our reasons. It always seemed hard to me to accuse men who claim to be called of God to preach his gospel (1 Cor. 15; Gal. 1: 8), and to be led by his Spirit (although led in over six hundred different ways), to accuse such men of telling falsehoods, which must be the case, unless this charge be true. Many objects when viewed from different standpoints have as many different views. For instance. I held in my hand a book; passed it to one, and asked what color it was. They replied, blue. I turned it over, passed it to another, who decided it was white. I opened the same passed to another who said it was black and white. [illegible] were honest, and all told the tru[illegible] Each had but one view of the same object, when a general view would have easily explained all. This is why there is so much dispute on religious matters.

Now let us inquire into the reason why Adventism (from a certain point) is worse than infidelity. As we cast our eyes out upon Christendom, we behold them all in perfect working order; not apostolic, but there is system obout the sects that gives vitality to their religion (Acts 26: 5.) We need not ferret out the different limbs and branches of this glorious tree; neither need to speak of its fruits; but refer to its trunk, and all is understood. GOLD that glorious boon, carries an untold power in church, as well as state.

Perhaps to refer to a circumstance which came under my observation early this winter may illustrate the point. Br. B. and I were sent for to go into a certain place and preach the Word. The invitation was accepted. On our arrival there, there had been a man there who taught the people that the time was soon coming when the Bible will be as a last year's Almanac. He had gathered a little flock, and gone undisturbed. No preacher, as far as I learned, said aught against him or his teachings. We held our meeting, and left the result with God. This matter could not be passed by as had been the other. No, no. Great union prevailed among the churches. (Luke 23: 12.) A dear brother, whom I have stood beside in the stand, after our departure, gives notice that he feels it his duty to show up the state of man in death—a subject to which we made no allusion only as it was drawn out in answer to objecti[illegible]hy is this great differen[illegible]e made no attempt to organize a church, and advised members who were in good standing in the churches to remain there; while the infidel urged hard for all to join him. Again, we ask, why was this man passed by unnoticed, while we must pass all the scrutiny and criticism that human ingenuity can invent? The reason is very plain and can be seen by all who will look at it. Although the infidel had gathered a little flock he had injured no church; for they were those spoken of in Acts 17: 5. Now comes the answer to "What harm could the Adventists do, when they organized no church, and said nothing about it? This is very simple and plain. The Rev.——who owns a good farm with outfit and buildings, etc., had received (we are told) seven hundred dollars for his last year's labor. But we found him riding around with a blanket on his back, and the people's sympathy wrought to a high pitch, in behalf of the dear brother to secure him an overcoat. Consequently a festival was gotten up, with glorious hopes and bright prospects. All hearts were merry, until the news that the Adventists were to commence a meeting fell upon their ears, which had about the same effect upon his mind that it would upon his person had his blanket been dipped in the lake on a January morning, and wrapped around his body. There was nothing said, to my knowledge, in regard to the Elder to injure him or his pocket. Our meeting closed, and we returned to our homes, and from thence went to other fields. We were informed the festival produced twenty dollars. Sad disappointment. (Acts 19 27.) And the result was laid to the Advent preachers. And why? There had a certain class of people been listening to certain Bible truths, that had aroused them to investigation, and caused them to feel there was a power in God's word; and this, they say, led to the serious results to the festival. And why should it. That class of people (unlike our infidel friends) were just such as are always ready to learn God's will—the best and most devoted people in the place.

Now who can fail to see that God's truth is more fatal to false doctrine than infidelity? Therefore, when you see a sanctified looking Divine draw down his face, and say "Adventism is worse than infidelity," don't call him a bad man, but remember he is looking on the other side of the book.

Sources of Theological Changes.

That extensive changes are going on in theological opinion must be admitted by every intelligent observer. What they are, precisely, in nature and extent, and what they portend, may be a matter of dispute; but the general fact itself is proclaimed equally by the sorrowings of some and the rejoicings of others. There is an increase of skepticism, in literature and in the popular world. There is a growth of unevangelical or rationalistic Christianity. There is a modification of ancient rigid dogma within the evangelical sects, and a toning down of the harshness of preaching. To what is all this due?

Something is due to the progress of popular intelligence, which awakens a disposition to independent judgment. This is often supposed to be exercised by a departure from previously received opinions; though, in fact, many deceive themselves by simply exchanging one set of masters for another. Not a few men more credulously accept the dicta of their favorite infidel writers and speakers, than either they or their fathers did the words of their religious teachers. Still, increased intelligence has properly led to more general discussion, and to a greater variety of opinion among the people.....

Beyond question, the modification of many old ideas of theology, and even of practical religion, is due to exegetical progress. Biblical scholorship has made greater advances within thirty years. A more correct text of the original Scriptures has been determined. The canons of interpretation are more nearly settled. Higher training and wider reading have brought about more unanimity of explanation among men of learning. Less weight is allowed to single words and clauses, or solitary verses, and more to drift of the context, the well-known sentiments and style of the particular writer, and the general tenor of Scripture. Hence dogma is compelled to rest on a broader and more scholarly exegesis, and theology is occasionally forced to recognize other than logical modes of thought and reasoning, and to admit that an assertion may be true poetically, which is false philosophically; that an idea may be valuable to the imagination, when unimportant to the reason; that language may be used rhetorically, liturgically, popularly, which would be improper in a dialectical, legal, or scientific sense. There has been a disposition among theologians to dictate to exegetes. They are now receiving return payments, and a theological professor in a seminary will have a hard time of it, if he differs from his exegetical brother, unless prepared to meet the latter on his own ground. And this is as it should be, if the Bible is divinely inspired, and is to be our rule of faith and practice. What does it actually teach? That is the question.

And, in answering this, the interpreter cannot rely on stereotyped conclusion, any more than the theologian. That it has been customary in evangelical circles to interpret a certain way; that Calvinistic authors all take this and not the other meaning of a particular text; that "our denomination" has always relied on such a view of such an expression of Christ's or Paul's—these are arguments of little weight now. Authors and preachers are learning to address larger audiences than those of any one sect, and their judges are correspondingly more numerous and intelligent. Part of the contribution which we are all to make to the church of the future is, to surrender some of the untenable expositions of Scripture which our fathers have handed down to us.—Advance.

Guessing Out Prophecy.

The danger of adopting new interpretations, and of making hazardous guesses on so good a subject has been exemplified by several modern expositors that have tried to show that L. Napoleon is destined to become the future personal anti-christ; that he is to become conqueror of the world, exact divine honors from the people, and, in short, that he will accomplish in 1260 literal days all that is predicted of antichrist. Baxter, who published a volume on this subject in 1861, I believe, after laboring to establish this point, says in a foot-note on page 22: "Since the above was published in July, 1861, Napoleon landed some forces in Mexico, in December, 1861, and is rapidly progressing towards its complete conquest. He will, doubtless, soon form an alliance with the Southern States, and not long afterwards invade and overcome the Northern States, and eventually also Canada!!"

It is too much like forging the answer to a sum, as school boys say, to leave the N from Napoleon's name to make it Apoleon, and to make him antichrist, when some future president of the United States is as likely to become that distinguished individual as he is. This shows how cautious we should be in making ourselves prophets, instead of very meekly trying to learn prophecy; and how slow we should be to advance new and unheard of theories which are against all antiquity, as well as against the views of the brightest stars in the intellectual firmament of modern times—Exchange.

Our Young Folks.

The Oldest City.

Damascus is the oldest city in the world. Tyre and Sidon have crumbled on the shore; Baalbec is a ruin; Palmyra is buried in a desert; Nineveh and Babylon have disappeared from the Tigris and Euphrates. Damascus remains what it was before the days of Abraham—a center of trade and travel—an island of verdure in the desert—"a presidential capital," with martial and sacred associations extending through thirty centuries. It was near Damascus that Saul of Tarsus saw the light above the brightness of the sun, and the street which is called Straight, in which it was said "he prayed," still runs through the city. The caravan comes and goes as it did a thousand years ago; there is still the sheik, the ass and the water wheel; the merchants of the Euphrates and the Mediterranean still "occupy" these "with the multitude of their wares." The city which Mohammed surveyed from a neighboring hight, and was afraid to enter "because it was given to man to have but one paradise, and for his part, he was resolved not to have it in this world," is to-day what Julian called "the Eye of the East," as it was in the time of Isaiah "the head of Syria." From Damascus came the damson, our blue plums, and the delicious apricot of Portugal called damasco; damask, our beautiful fabric of cotton and silk, with vines and flowers raised upon a smooth, bright ground; the damask rose, introduced into England in the time of Henry VIII.; the Damascus blade, so famous the world over for its keen edge and wonderful elasticity, the secret of whose manufacture was lost when Tamerlane carried off the artist into Persia; and that beautiful art of inlaying wood and steel with silver and gold, a kind of mosaic engraving and sculpture united—called damasking—with which boxes, bureaus, swords, and guns are ornamented. It is still a city of flowers and bright waters; the streams of Lebanon and the "river of gold" still murmur and sparkle in the wilderness of the Syrian gardens.

"Mamma!

"Yes, dear; what is it?"

"Well, Mamma, I don't understand—many things I want to."

"My bright little girl, what a discovery! And yet I am glad you have made it; for people don't value knowledge until they feel themselves ignorant; and as I know my Nelly is a diligent young lady, I hope she will soon have such a store of wisdom. But what is it you wish to know?"

"Well, ~~Mamma, you ask Eddy and~~ me to pay attention to what Mr. Hope says, and he said this morning, 'It will be put right when Christ comes.' Now, I want you to tell me, please, what he meant by that."

"Well, Nelly, darling, what should he mean, but exactly what he said? Mr. Hope always expresses himself with great clearness. He was speaking of this shocking and wicked war, and of the inability of mere men to rule the world in righteousness; and then he said, 'But the Christian is not to despair, as if the world was finally given over to ruin. The Church is safe in her Redeemer's hands; and, by and by, the world itself will be a place of marvelous beauty and happiness. It will all be put right when Christ comes.' As nearly as I can remember, these were his words."

"Yes, Ma; but as I was walking home with Aggy Norton, I heard her mother say to Mrs. Feld, that Mr. Hope need not have told people that it will be all right when they die. Now, I did not hear him say that. Do you think he meant that?"

"He neither said it, nor meant it, my dear; and I am sorry Mrs. Norton should have so strangely misunderstood him. He meant when Jesus himself comes back to his own world to put away all evil and make it holy and happy."

"Oh! I am so glad, Mamma."

"Why dear?"

"Well, Ma, I hope it isn't naughty, but I don't like to think of death at all. It is so cold and dark, and everybody is so sad; and those strange men in black things coming to take away the ——"

And sweet little Nelly wept again, when she thought of the death and burial of her beloved playmate of eight summers, Amy Joyce, whom the cruel enemy had torn from the arms of loving parents and sent to the narrow home.

"But you like to think of Jesus himself, who is love, and light, and life, all in one, coming back; do you, dear?"

"O, yes, Ma! that is so beautiful! It should make everybody glad!"

"And it would, if everybody loved him; but alas! my child," said Mrs. Leslie, with a deep sigh, "that is far from being the case."

Nelly Leslie knew little of the great black field of worldliness and unbelief and dead profession, over which her mother's mind flashed at that moment, but sympathy with visible sadness kept her silent for a time.

"Mamma," and she looked earnestly at her mother, "if Jesus had returned before, would Amy have died?"

"No, my precious one, no!" and the loving mother pressed her child to her heart. "That is what Martha and Mary said to the Lord about their dear brother. When Jesus returned from Galilee, he raised Lazarus from the dead; and when he returns from heaven he will raise all his sleeping saints to life eternal, and the living ones will never die."

"O, Mamma, how beautiful! I would so like to see Jesus. I wish he would come."—Rainbow.

The Bible Class.

2 Cor. 5: 8. "We are still confident and well content rather to go from our home in the body, and to come to our home with the Lord."—Alford. Substantially: "We should prefer to be found alive at the Lord's coming, and to be clothed upon with our heavenly body." (v. 2-4.)—Fausset.

Heb. 12: 29: "For our God is a consuming fire."

Notice that in the verses preceding, Paul has been speaking of those revelations of himself which God made to Israel in the wilderness, when he appeared in the top of Sinai, in cloud and flame, with thunderings and lightnings. Let us not forget that, he seems to say, even now when we have the milder revelation in Jesus and the gospel, God is a dreadful God, even while he is the merciful and the good God. Let us serve him "with holy fear," remembering that his wrath is like a fearful flame that consumes the firmest things to ashes.—Standard.

It is usual for the shepherd of a large flock of sheep on the farms near Old Windsor, Berks, to go before his flock, and the sheep to follow him. The shepherd walks before his flock, clasping in his right hand a long staff, and turning round occasionally to hold converse with his charge, which know his voice, and the rear of the flock is carefully watched by the shepherd's dog, and so they march on quietly like a commanding officer attended by his adjutant.

Out of some eight hundred thousand various readings of the Bible that have been collated, about seven hundred and ninety-five thousand are of just about as much importance to the sense of the Greek and Hebrew Scriptures, as the question in English orthography is, whether the English word honour shall be spelled with a u or without it. Of the remainder some change the sense of particular passages or expressions, or omit particular words or phrases, but no one doctrine of religion is changed, not one precept is taken away, not one important fact is altered by the whole of the various readings collectively taken.—Moses Stuart.

Mat. 24: 2. "There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down."

Judge Noah (a Jewish judge in America) seems dissatisfied with the fulfillment of prophecy; because, behind and beneath the temple platform some stones, as at the Jews' weeping-place, are left one upon another. But this limitation of the destruction shows rather the exact wording of the sentence to the facts of the case; for, of all those stones which the disciples saw belonging to the temple, there was, in that generation, not left one upon another.

It may even be remarked that our Lord does not say that a stone should not be left there, as pointing to a place out of sight; but he says in effect, There shall not be left here of all these things which ye see. The more the matter is examined, the more we may see the exact truthfulness of his saying, "My words shall not pass away."—Watchman of Ephraim.

John's Ministry.

A correspondent thus writes:—"John's ministry commenced A. D. 26, and lasted about three and a-half years. Proved thus:—St. Luke 3: 1, 2, tells us that 'in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar, the word of God came to John in the Wilderness.' The solution of the query must therefore, lay, in ascertaining what year of our era corresponds with the above date; but history informs us Julius Cæsar was assassinated in the Senate B. C. 44; that he appointed Octavius his successor, who was afterwards called Augustus Cæsar, whose reign in all lasted fifty-seven and a-half years, and consequently died A. D. 13½, was succeeded by his nephew, Tiberius Cæsar, whom he had taken into co-partnership with him in the empire (all laws and decrees being equally issued in the names of both), for the last three years of his reign, i. e., A. D. 10½. And Luke, dating the reign of Tiberius from this co-partnership, as has been done in other such-like cases, would place the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar in the middle of A. D. 26, thus: 10½+15=25½. When Jesus was about thirty years of age he was baptized by John (Luke 3: 23) soon after which he was cast into prison, and beheaded by Herod."

[1] 1 Cor. 4: 4. A new reading.

Upon looking into Liddell and Scott's Lexicon for the word sunoida, I find a similar phrase quoted and translated thus—to have no load on one's conscience," Socrat. Diogen. etc.; and at the same place a reference made to 1 Cor 4: 4. Add to this, that "I know nothing by myself," meaning "I know nothing against myself," is an expression in daily use amongst the poorer classes in the North of England—a remnant, no doubt, of old classical English, as many of the phrases of the poorer classes are—and I think Paul's words, from being somewhat obscure, become as clear as daylight—C. E. Hey, in the Guardian.

Notices, Etc.

W. A. C. P. ASSOCIATION NOTICE.

At the next meeting of the Association the following amendments to the Constitution will be offered for consideration and action:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 9, as follows:

Sec. 9. The Board of Trustees (of the Association,) shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to Art. III., Sec. 2. But the person filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of Art. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at [illegible]

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

Sec. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

Sec. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate; and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty-five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith: and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to Art. X these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make Art. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

The precise date of the meeting at which these amendments will be considered, has not yet been fixed. It will probably be in March; and may be held in Buchanan.

Wm. L. Himes, Sec'y.

At the Ohio State Conference, Br. C. D. Jefferson proposed to furnish a Mission Tent for the State, provided the Conference furnish two preachers to go with the tent. The following brethren were appointed to solicit pledges for the above purpose, and report to the president of the Conference, on or before the first of Jan., the amount pledged; and if sufficient is pledged, Br. Jefferson will proceed to furnish the tent, and we shall endeavor to put two good and faithful laborers in the field to labor for the cause of truth: A. B. Benedict, Nevada, O.; J. M. Treadwell, Fairfield; Martin Aguer, Rickbridge; S. F. Rodgers, Norwalk; A. Mackey, Seal; Martin Bacon Bucyrus; P. T. Light, Plymouth; Dr. H. Koster, New London; Br. Beadly, White House, Lucas Co.; Thos. Boardman, Shiloh; Henry Rust, Stryker; Wm. Sedousll, Pioneer; Geo. English, Montpelier; N. R. Cheadle, Delta; Geo. B. Torwelligar, Antwerp. Dear brethren, now is the time for action. Will you take hold of this matter at once, and report your success, so that we may know what to do? and the Lord will bless you.

E. McCulloch, President of Conf.

P. S. Churches desiring the first quarterly conference held with them, will please notify us immediately. E. M.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 7, 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

We call special attention to our "Correspondence" this week. And we have more of the same sort for next issue. Do not fail to read Br. Brewer's letter.

We give this week the first part of a concise and graphic history of the Franco-Prussian War—on the whole the best we have seen. And, aside from the personal views of the writer, it will be valuable for reference.

It has been well said: There is no surer sign of rottenness in any sect, body, or organization than the appearance of greater horror over the making of an accusation than over the commission of the offence. And the remark applies with equal force to individuals. When we feel greater grief upon the exposure of our sins than we do that we have been guilty of the offence, the case is desperate indeed. We should cherish a holy horror not of discovery, but of sin itself.

"There the wicked cease from troubling and there the weary are at rest" How often those words are quoted as referring to the rest of heaven and how few know that they refer to Job's desire for unconscious slumber, till the judgment should bring him eternal life and its blessedness. If I had died, he says, I should have slept; been at rest, with kings, princes, counsellors, the oppressed and the oppressor, servant and master, the small and the great All are there, in the grave. "There the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary are at rest!" See Job 3: 17, and context.

The Advent Herald gives the principal portion of an essay by a Missouri Baptist on the two resurrections. In the course of some remarks upon Rev. 20, the following truths leak out:

> The word psuke occurs in the New Testament one hundred and five times: is rendered in the common English version sixty times soul, forty times life, three times mind, once heartily and once heart. Its use in the Scriptures seldom — never confounds it with the pneuma: but it rather would appear that the pneuma and the soma constitute the psuke—that is, the spirit and the body constitute the living man.

In Mat. 10 39: psuche is rendered life; but to render it life in v. 28 is—infidelity materialism! In Matt. 16: 25 it is rendered life, but in v. 26 it is soul. Can any one tell why?

We frequently hear or read expressions of regret that any of the Chinese have come to this country. It seems that the feeling is fully reciprocated across the Pacific. But for the dread of the cannon of "Christian nations," the foreigners in China, missionaries and all, would quickly meet their death at the hand of the mob, or assassin. A book or pamphlet has of late been widely circulated, to cultivate this hatred of foreigners. It is filled with the most absurd tales concerning the "outside barbarians" and especially the Christian religion. They are told, for instance, that when converted Chinese die the Christians take out the eyes of the corpse and fill the orifice with lead. The reason for this is, that by compounding a hundred pounds of lead with the eyes of Chinamen, eight pounds of silver can be obtained, and the rest of the lead sold at its original value. The method of making this silver is known only to foreigners, but the eyes of none except Chinamen are serviceable for the purpose. Some of the fictions not so absurd as this, it must be confessed are "founded on facts," while others are too indecent for publication. Some fear further massacres and outrages, while others think the missionaries will soon have greater privileges than ever. There will be some from among the Chinese in the throng that shall stand acquitted at the Judgment. It is to this end that the gospel is finding its way among them by various means.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

SOUTHWESTERN IOWA.

MONDAY, Jan. 23. Just before leaving Atlantic I had pleasant interviews with Brn. Morphy, and McClure. Br. Morphy thinks to arrange to labor more in the Lord's vineyard. He has acceptable gifts, and will be called out, and, we trust, fully sustained in this field. Br. McClure has a good gift, and will go into Missouri to help Br. Dugger. I trust by close application to the study of the Word of God, he will become a useful servant of the church. A trial will decide the matter.

On my arrival at Dexter Father Knox met me as I stepped out of the car, saying the congregation were waiting. I had hoped to rest to-night, but one cannot find an opportunity where there are so many who want to hear "this gospel of the kingdom." At the large schoolroom, I found a good audience, and spoke from John 5: 39—"Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life." I proved from the prophecies the Divinity of Christ, and then pressed all to come to him for life.

Dexter, Dallas Co. Iowa, is one of the new villages which have sprung up on the Rock Island Railroad within the last two years. It now has several hundred inhabitants, some of whom are believers in the Lord's speedy coming. But there are more of this class living in the country than in town.

THE FATHERS.

I have been severely censured by some for not receiving the Christian Fathers as authority for some Christian doctrines. In reading Henry Constable's work on The Nature and Duration of Future Punishment, I find on page 79, the following table which shows the chronology of the three views concerning future retribution, among the Christian Fathers.

ETERNAL DEATH.	Died A. D.	ETERNAL LIFE IN PAIN.	Died A. D.	UNIVERSAL RESTORATION.	Died A. D.
Barnabas	90	The forgers of the Clementina, and Recognitions of Clement, Athenagoras	100	Origen	253
Clemens Romanus	100	Tatian	200
Hermas	104	Tertullian	235
Ignatius	107
Polycarp	147
Justin	164
Theophilus of Antioch	183
Irenæus	200
Clemens Alexandrinus	212

The advocates of eternal torment claim that the Fathers of the first and second centuries were the teachers and supporters of the eternal misery dogma. But the above table compiled by Mr. Constable gives another view of the matter. The preponderance of testimony is in favor of Eternal Death.

On Tuesday evening I showed the importance of the fulfilled, and unfulfilled prophecies to the church at this time.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 25. To-day a minister of the gospel argued that prophecy could not be understood till fulfilled. Then Peter must have been mistaken, when he said (2 Pet. 1: 19): "We have a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place." This "blind watchman," would have the people look only to past fulfillment of prophecy, for light shining in a light place, where all is demonstrated. We are to turn our eyes to the past, and walk backward in the darkness, without the means of knowing what is in our pathway, or any knowledge of where we are going. If this man were an engineer, he would put his head light on the rear of the engine, and so drive in the dark. And if he were a navigator, when he came into port, instead of looking to his chart to find where the rocks and reefs lay, he would trust to discovering them after they were passed, provided he did not perish in his folly.

Those who claim that we can know nothing from unfulfilled prophecy live in darkness and have no light. It is only by this that we can know anything of the future. The second advent of Cl [illegible] resurrection, as well as the signs of their approach, are all subjects of unfulfilled prophecy, which we ought to understand. The Jews rejected unfulfilled prophecy and perished. Jesus wept over them, when he looked upon their city, and said—"Oh! that thou hadst known even in this thy day the things that belong to thy peace; but now they are hid from thine eyes." So they perished for want of the light that could illuminate their way. Just so, with the Gentile church now. She is refusing to look to unfulfilled prophecy, and dreaming of peace, safety, and triumphs, while sudden destruction is impending.

I spoke at night on the history of the world, and the approach of the kingdom of God.

THURSDAY, Jan. [illegible]. I find much inquiry to-day on the prophetic word, and a desire to know more about it. One brother called to say that he liked my exposition of the vision of Daniel, all except my views of the stone. This he thought was not Christ, but the United States, which were to break the kingdoms of the earth to pieces. He had no proof to offer, but said it struck him that it was so. He had never heard the idea from others. I told him that the stone kingdom could not be a republic! It must be a kingly form of government, which the United States utterly repudiates. Besides, when the stone smites the image it will be in the end of all earthly kingdoms, and it, "the kingdom of God, shall stand forever:" and "never be destroyed." Which could not be asserted of this nation.

I closed my labors here to-night, speaking upon the signs, of the coming of Christ.

BABYLON IS FALLEN.

Mystic Babylon is the Roman Church and State. That great union of civil and ecclesiastical power constitutes the Babylon of the Apocalypse. This union was completed in the sixth century. From that time, for 1260 years it was to persecute and "wear out the saints." At the end of this period, a judgment was to sit on this power, to consume, and destroy it, and, finally, to "take away its dominion."

First, then, in order, at the time of the end: An angel was to "fly through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth and every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." (Rev. 14: 6, 7.) This judgment began in the French Revolution, and has continued, "consuming and destroying" up to the present time. The ten kingdoms have "eaten the flesh, and burned with fire," Papal Rome, for the last seventy years.

Secondly. "Another angel followed saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city [or hierarchy], because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." (Rev. 14: 8.) Some expositors have thought this was fulfilled in the great Reformation; others, in the French Revolution and under the first Bonaparte. But in no case has the Papacy been totally, and hopelessly deprived of temporal power, or had its dominion taken away till 1870, when the work was done by the Italian kingdom.

Thirdly. "Another voice was heard from heaven, saying, Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities. Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double. How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God that judgeth her. And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning, standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying Alas! alas! that great city! Babylon [the Papal hierarchy], that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come. And the merchants [who dealt in her merchandise] shall weep and mourn over her." (Rev. 18: 4–11.)

These words of God are now being fulfilled. The Papal kings can do nothing for the Pope. They can only weep and wail. And so, with the cardinals, bishops and archbishops, and the Catholic masses. They are holding meetings all over the world, giving expressions to their deep feelings of indignation against Victor Emanuel, and Italy: and their deep feelings of sorrow for the Pope, and his fallen hierarchy.

CATHOLIC MEETINGS.

The Archbishop of Baltimore, at a meeting of the Catholics to condole with the Pope said:

"The invasion of the Papal territories and the overthrow of the government of his Holiness, and the usurpation of his sovereignty, were against right, and justice—and the circumstances would justify the intervention of Christian government, in favor of his Holiness to his sovereign rights."

In New York at a meeting Dec. 27, Archbishop McClosky, said:

It was necessary that he should be the subject of no civil ruler; that he, in his capacity of divinely appointed, supreme pastor of the Church, his spiritual jurisdiction extending over kings and rulers and emperors, as well as over subjects and peoples—that he should speak with freedom to all; that he should recognize no man on earth as his temporal master; that he should rebuke wickedness in high places. It was necessary, in order to secure this, that he should not be the subject of any temporal prince, and the Catholic world saw and felt that, and all Catholic princes and emperors worthy of the name acquiesced in it. And in the

ORDER OF DIVINE PROVIDENCE

that little State has existed thus for a thousand years, but now bold men have come in to usurp that power, and interfere with that independence. We have a right to enter our protest against this as an injury to our Holy Father, and an injury to us. For when they have robbed him they have robbed the Church; when they have outraged him they have outraged two hundred millions of Catholics throughout the whole world; when they have placed bonds, as it were, around him, and have restricted his independence and his liberty they have of all good Catholics, and done them a grave injustice. You know that the Archbishops and Bishops of the province of New York have already protested against these iniquities. It is right the clergy and the people should do the same, and the opportunity to do so will be given; for the voice of the people should reach the Holy Father, to console and strengthen him in his hour of trouble; and while we pray for him we should also pray for his enemies; but we must pray above all that God, who never deserts his Church, may console the heart of his vicar, may deliver him from the hands of his enemies, and may, in his own good time—which we hope may come speedily—re-establish him in his just rights, and thus strengthen the bonds of faith over the whole earth, and unite the children of that Church once more in charity and peace.

These are the views and feelings of the Catholic world. But he declares that their temporal power is now taken from them, with the estates of the church; and that its dominion has fallen, and now lies in ruins, to the great grief of the whole church, and of the Holy Father himself, to whom they send their sympathies.

And similar public meetings are being held all over the world. There is a general lamentation and wailing over the fall of Romanism. Upon that great city of two hundred millions of souls, is judgment come.

Fourthly. God's people, and all lovers of liberty and right were to rejoice over her fall. "rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets: for God hath avenged you on her." (Rev. 18: 20.)

Protestant christendom is rejoicing everywhere in the fall of Rome. We hear it in all the pulpits, and from all the Protestant and liberal presses of the world. Besides, the leading men of all Protestant parties are holding public meetings to express their joy at the fall of Mystic Babylon.

As a specimen of the general feeling, I will quote the following sentiments presented by distinguished Americans, at the meeting in the Academy of Music, New York Jan. 12, to celebrate Italian unity. The New York Tribune says:

> The demonstration last night was worthy of our city, and worthy of the great and righteous cause whose triumph it commemorated.
> The astounding events which left the way to Rome open to the Italian people have so engrossed the attention of the world that the disappearance of the Papacy from the sovereignties of the earth, and the consequent completion of the plan of Italian unity, have been accepted as matters of course, rather than as political revolutions of the most radical and hopeful character. And what may have contributed greatly to that equanimity with which the nations have looked on at these momentous results, has been the fixed impression, existing for years in the minds of all thinking men, that the liberation of Rome was an event which might happen any day.

Henry Ward Beecher, made a thrilling speech from which we quote:

> Italy has groaned, being burdened through centuries with this government, and now, as part by part it has been rescued, we have been all glad; and now that at length the Pontificial States themselves have had an opportunity to express themselves in regard to their masters, and have blown them up, we are glad of that too, not because they are Roman Catholics, and not because they are priests, but because they are a class government, and one of the most odious of all class governments. America, then, sends back to-night to Italy sympathy, because Italy has thrown off the despotism of the priestly class government. [Cheers.]

He adds on this point,

> I do not despair of the day when there shall be heard in every part of Rome the voice of Protestant Christian people gathered in their several chapels and places of worship; interrupting no other, but exercising their own liberty and praising God as their fathers praised him. [Cheers.] It has not been in your day or mine, but that change has come which has broken the priestly hand; the yoke is gone and the shackle has gone, and I say, God be thanked for it." [Tremendous applause.]

Many other distinguished citizens spoke during the evening. Letters were received from many eminent men in Church and State.

Hon. Chas. Sumner, writes:

> Beside the triumph of the Nation, I see in this event two other things of surpassing value in the history of liberty. First, the union of Church and State is overthrown in its greatest example. The Pope remains pastor of a mighty flock, but without temporal power. Here is a precedent which beginning at Rome, must be followed everywhere, until Church and State are no longer conjoined, and all are at liberty to worship God according to conscience, without compulsion from man.

Henry Wilson wrote,

> Though I cannot be with you, I join with heart and soul in the expression of the congratulations of the commercial capital of the republic for what has been achieved by "the free vote of the Roman citizens," and in the expression of the hope that "civil and religious liberty" will be established and guarded by the people of United Italy. Surely, American citizens, who are imbued with the vital spirit of their own institution, will gladly join in sending such congratulations and hopes to the Italian people.

J. G. Whittier, writes:

> It is a matter of congratulation that the redemption of Rome has been effected so easily and bloodlessly. The despotism of a thousand years fell at a touch in noiseless rottenness. The people of Rome, 50 to 1, cast their ballots of condemnation like so many shovelsfull of earth upon its grave. Outside of Rome there seems to be a very general acquiescence in its downfall. No Peter the Hermit preaches a crusade in its behalf. No one of the great Catholic Powers of Europe lifts finger for it.

Thrilling letters were received from many others

At the conclusion of the meeting the Chairman rose and said: Before we separate, I deem it right to state to you that I have sent the following dispatch to the king of Italy at Florence: "More than ten thousand American citizens are celebrating to-night the union of Rome with Italy, and send congratulations." [Immense and prolonged applause.]

In reply to the [illegible] Ambassador's inquiry, What would satisfy the Pope, in a way of a compromise, cardinal Antonelli replied by command of the Holy Father, that nothing would satisfy him but the entire restoration of his estates, and Temporal Dominion.

This cannot be effected. The power of the Pope is therefore hopelessly gone.

A WORD IN SEASON.

We have just received a letter from Dr. Henry Ward Poole, of the city of Mexico. The following brief extracts arrest attention:

"I give you my opinion, and that of all the Mexican friends capable of judging of your excellent translation of the new Testament called El Nuevo Pacto. It is an elegant language, and in conformity with the original Greek. You may make use of me in distributing copies, or in any way in which I can serve the cause."

John W. Butler, of the same city, writes in equally strong language, and offers to aid in every suitable way to circulate our books.

Rev. Thomas M. Westrup, in the city of Monterey, Mexico, is equally decided in recommending our Spanish Testament, and equally ready to aid in circulating any number which we can afford to donate. He has six Baptist churches under his charge.

The pastor of four congregations in and near the city of Mexico fully accords in these views, and has freely expressed them to us in person.

We have, from time to time, as the Lord has granted us means, furnished copies of this excellent version for circulation in Spain, in Mexico, and in South America; and scarcely a week passes in which we do not donate some. More than 18,000 copies of Spanish Scriptures already have been printed from our plates, and nearly all are in circulation.

At this period of the year we wish to do more than usual. New Year's Gifts are seasonable. None can be better or more appropriate than the pure Word of God. We wish to send to Mexico within thirty days, more than 2,000 copies of Spanish Scriptures. We are now giving orders, both to printers and binders, to prepare them.

But we have not the means of paying for them.

There are already seventy-three congregations of Evangelical Christians in Mexico, and we wish to see the whole country evangelized. The most effectual means for this object is the pure Word of God, the seed of the kingdom. Who will send us means to furnish this New Year's Gift to the Mexicans? Wm. H. Wyckoff, American Bible Union. 32 Great Jones St. New York.

—We are informed that over 2,000 Romanists have of late been converted, in Spain and Mexico. The circulation of the Scriptures is one of the principal means of this work; and the Bible Union Version in Spanish is undoubtedly one of the best. Ed. Times

TRUE DOCTRINE CORRUPTED BY THE FATHERS.

The editor of this sheet has been publicly classed with "infidels" for an affirmation that the doctrine of the Bible was early corrupted by the so-called Fathers of the Christin church. The following extract, strongly corroboratory of our position, is from that staunchly orthodox periodical, the Congregational Review:

This cruder conception of the state of the departed by degrees shaped itself into the later Greek theory of the upper and the nether regions of the future home of mortals, with the same accompaniments of purifying pains for all save the most abandoned of the bad. This was substantially the doctrine of Pythagoras and Plato, who thus provided for the cleansing of the soul from the impurities contracted by imprisonment in the body. It could not immediately return to the Deity at death, even if its earthly life had been virtuous, by reason of the mortal disorders of a fleshly inhabitation. Some are too vile for restoration, and they are doomed to the Tartarean hell. Others are less infected by sin, and they are recovered to God through the intermediate probation of Hades. (Cf. Knapp's Christian Tehology.)

The Hebrews of the earlier times held much the same views of this subject as their neighbors; nor did they advance much beyond these vague ideas until the Christian age. The connection of later and current purgatorial and restoration doctrines with those venerable myths is obvious. The early Christian Fathers did not throw off entirely their influence, for these beliefs had been woven into all their previous philosophical and theological speculations. Hence they shaped the Christian doctrine somewhat to the older mould. "The idea of Hades," says Hagenbach, "known to both the Hebrews and the Greeks, was transferred to Christianity, and the assumption that the real happiness or the final misery of the departed did not commence till after the general judgment and the resurrection of the body, appeared to necessitate the belief in an intermediate state, in which the soul was supposed to remain from the moment of its separation from the body to this last catastrophe."[1] While some of those early writers, as Justin, Origen, Tertullian, strongly held this belief, others of them are silent on the subject. But enough of seed was sown to ripen into the wide harvest of Papal indulgence and error. Starting from the old ethnic faith, and enforced by the teaching of the Greek fathers, whose theology was much tinctured with Platonic infusions, the dogma of purgatorial probation beyond death took the definite form, in the Roman church, which it now holds. But it has made this important change from the Platonic and Origenic conception—that, while this regarded suffering of souls for their sins only as a means of disciplinary purification, the Papal purgatory is expiatory, and is intended to make a real atonement for transgression.—(Cf. Knapp.)

The Fathers on Future Punishment.

In this inquiry into Scripture Teaching on Future Punishment, Dr. Angus ("Future Punishment." By Joseph Angus, D. D. Clarke & Co. 1870.) has entered upon the further inquiry as to the opinions of the early fathers on this important question. Mr. White has already exposed Dr. Angus' argument from Scripture; we propose to show how utterly he has failed to support his view from the early fathers.

Dr. Angus professes to be well acquainted with their writings. He remarks, with much propriety, that "the fathers are at best a kind of Saul's armor, nor should they be used by any who have not first proved them."(p. 7) We do not know whether Dr. Angus had us in his mind when he wrote thus, but as a considerable part of our pamphlet on "Future Punishment" is occupied with the opinions of the fathers, we think it probable that he had. We will only say that we should not have ventured upon this difficult field if we had not, in our own judgment, "proved" the armor with which we fought; and that we should indeed be ashamed if we exhibited as poor an acquaintance with our weapons as Dr. Angus has. We will now show our readers how the President of Regent's Park College speeds, clothed in the armor of Saul.

At p. 60, the second edition of our pamphlet on "Future Punishment" we stated that "from beginning to end" of the apostolical fathers "there is not one word said of that immortality of the soul which is so prominent among the latter fathers. Immortality is asserted by them to be peculiar to the redeemed. In the preface to our pamphlet we challenged contradiction to this statement.

Of the apostolic fathers Clement of Rome is first and chief. He was the valued and loved fellow-laborer of the apostle Paul. (Phil. 4: 3.) His opinion on this question would indeed be of consequence. It would rank next to that of inspiration. At page two of his work accordingly Dr. Angus gives us what he professes to call a quotation from Clement of Rome. It is this: "All souls are immortal (athanato), even of the ungodly, to whom it would have been better not to be incorruptible" (upthurtous). When we first read this in Dr. Angus' pamphlet we could scarcely believe our eyesight "Can this be true?" we said to ourselves. Have we read the epistle of Clement some dozen times and failed to see this startling statement? Have we ventured in print that has been read by, we are happy to say, many hundreds of readers, to say that Clement never said anything of this kind, and are we not convicted of having made a most rash and unwarranted statement? We took down our Clement again from the bookshelf, and, with a positive sigh of relief, ascertained beyond a question that whoever wrote the above quotation Clement of Rome did not.

But where did Dr. Angus get it? That was our next inquiry. We remembered that there were in existence two large works bearing the name of Clement, through which we once felt it to be our weary duty to wade, unaided by what would have been a most welcome, and sometimes, we do not blush to say, a most needed translation. These works are "The Recognitions of Clement" and some nineteen "Clementine Homilies," of which we gave some account at pp. 63, 64 of our pamphlet. Dr. Roberts has given us a translation of the former in his valuable "Ante-Nicene Christian Library;" we hope, as we are a subscriber, that he will not feel it his duty to translate the "Homilies" also. They are a sad parcel of rubbish, with few jewels interspersed, and in substance are presented in "The Recognitions." Whatever they are, it is in one of them that Dr. Angus met with his quotation from Clement of Rome. Dr. Angus has fallen into the mistake of taking a wretched forgery for a genuine work of Clement, and quoting what was written by nobody knows whom as written by the companion of Paul. Verily, the first step Dr. Angus has taken in Saul's armor he stumbled and fell.

As we mean to found an observation or two addressed to Dr. Angus in particular upon this famous quotation, we will give it somewhat fuller than the Doctor thought necessary for his purpose to do. In "Homilia Undecima" (11) we read: "The soul, even of the ungodly is immortal (athanatos), for whom it would have been better not to have it incorruptible (apthurton); for being punished by quenchless fire, by unending torture, and not dying (me thneskousa), it can to its loss find no end." This is the passage on which Dr. Angus fell in his researches through the fathers. In one point of view, namely, as an authoritative opinion, it is absolutely valueless; in another point of view, as showing us the indisputable sense of a most important scriptural term it is a passage of very great importance. We beg to draw Dr. Angus' attention to it, and, as an honest man, we ask him to follow it out to its conclusion.

When a Greek writer, who, as both Dr. Angus and we alike allow, held the Augustinian view of future punishment, wishes to convey beyond any question or doubt his view that it would consist in an endless existence in torture, he can find in the copious language of Greece no stronger term to express it than by saying the soul "does not die" (thnesko) in hell. This is not, let us remember, the language of a heathen classical writer, though the idea that the Greek of the New Testament was different from the Greek usually spoken and written by heathens is of all ideas one of the most supremely ridiculous. This is the Greek of a Christian writer, which we hope Dr. Angus will allow to correspond with that of the New Testament. If he does not allow this, he must divide Greek into at least three distinct languages—classical, New Testament, and Clementine Greek; but we suppose he will not insist on this.

Well, then, we see that the phrase the soul "will not die" in hell, is one of the most significant, clear, unambiguous phrases that can be chosen to express the idea that the wicked will continue to exist in hell. Dr. Angus thinks so; and Dr. Angus is quite correct in thinking so. There is no ambiguity about it here. We will only ask Dr. Angus to carry on this just idea of his to the New Testament, to the sayings of Christ, to the writings of Paul. In the New Testament we are told that the wicked "shall die" in hell. (Rom 8: 13.) We ask Dr. Angus to give the same sense to the word "die" (thnesko) in the epistle to the Romans, that he gives to it in the Homily of Clement. Is that too much? In the latter it signifies, according to Dr. Angus, most unmistakably, "to cease to exist;" let it have the same signification in the former. And then we have the writer of the Homily telling us that the wicked will never cease to exist in hell, and St. Paul telling us that they will cease to exist in hell, and have only to decide whether he will believe a nameless forger or an inspired apostle.

And now one word more about Clement of Rome and his real opinions. Dr. Angus tells us that a writer who affirms that the souls of the wicked are "immortal" (athanatoi) means to convey his opinion that they will never cease to exist. We quite agree with him. There cannot be, that we see, a second opinion on the matter; but we hope that Dr. Angus will allow that when Clement of Rome, in an epistle acknowledged to be his, denies that the wicked are immortal, he means that in his opinion they will not continue to exist forever in hell. If we can show this, we hope Dr Angus will honestly confess that he mistook the opinion of Clement of Rome.

Now, the substantive "immortality" (athanasia) has the exact same meaning as a substantive that its adjective "immortal" (athanatos) has as an adjective. This will scarcely be denied even by an Augustinian advocate. But Clement (1 Ep. 35.) expressly states that this "immortality" is one of God's gifts confined to the redeemed. We will give his words in Dr. Robert's translation: "How blessed and wonderful, beloved, are the gifts of God! Life in immortality (zoe en athanasia), splendor in righteousness, truth in perfect confidence, faith in assurance, self-control in holiness!" Immortality, then, according to the genuine Clement, is a gift of God to his believing people, as peculiar to them as their faith and their holiness, and consequently Clement did not hold that the wicked were immortal or would continue to exist forever. He held with us that they would die, perish, be destroyed.

We now come to Dr. Angus' second feat in the armor of Saul, namely his view of the opinions of Justin Martyr. He quotes from Justin as follows: "I do not say that all souls die, for that were truly a piece of good fortune to the evil." (Dialogue with Trypho. p. 2.) Now we have to allow of Dr. Angus' quotation from Justin what we denied of his quotation from Clement. Justin Martyr did write the above words. Unfortunately for Dr. Angus he wrote some more words, which Dr. Angus has in some mysterious way overlooked. Of course, Dr. Angus brings forward Justin's words in proof of his own view of future punishment, namely, as indicating that in Justin's opinion the soul of the wicked would never die in hell.

Will it be believed that in the words which Dr. Angus has quoted from Justin that father is not speaking of hell at all, but of hades only! Will it be believed that when Justin comes in the very next sentence to speak of hell, he affirms that that will take place in hell which he said would not take place in hades, namely, that the wicked would in hell cease to exist! Believe it or not, this is what Justin does say, and that our readers may see it, we will give them the passage in full from Dr. Robert's translation. Here it is: "But I do not say, indeed, that all souls die, for that were truly a piece of good fortune to the evil. What then? The souls of the pious remain in a better place, while those of the wicked are in a worse, waiting for the time of judgment. Thus some which have appeared worthy of God never die, but others are punished so long as God wills them to exist and to be punished! (Dialogue Trypho, Ch. v.)

We do not know how to characterize Dr. Angus' quotation from Justin. If he had read the entire passage just quoted, we could scarcely call it honest to quote a part and leave the rest unquoted. It is like the sceptic who would demonstrate from the words of Scripture that "there is no God," while he omitted the words which tell us that it is "the fool who sayeth so in his heart," (Ps. 14: 1.) What Justin really teaches is, that the souls of the wicked do not die in hades, but continue there to exist; but that after the judgment they do die and cease to exist, after such pain as God wills them to endure. This is precisely what we ourselves hold and teach.

We do not see how Dr. Angus or his friends can get over the above testimony of Justin. As however they are possessed, we must say, of no small amount of Jesuitical casuistry on this point, we may imagine them to say that it was Justin's opinion that God willed the wicked "to exist" forever, and so that he quite agrees with them. Even this broken reed we will remove.

We believe that on the sense of the word "exist" (eimi) there is no dispute. Our Augustinian reasoners amuse themselves with the idea that "to live" means to be happy, but we do not know that any of them give a similar latitude to the term "exist." What does Justin say then? Here is one passage: "God delays causing the confusion and destruction of the whole world, by which the wicked angels, and demons, and men shall cease to exist." (Second Apology, Chap. 7, Dr. Robert's translation.) Here is another passage: "God ordained that if he (man) kept this (commandment) he should partake of immortal existence; but if he transgressed it, the contrary should be his lot." (p. 358 of Dr. Robert's translation.) So we find that in Justin's opinion a time will come when every sinful being will "cease to exist."

One word more of Justin's language. Dr. Angus insists that "not to die," when used by Justin Martyr, means beyond any dispute not to cease to exist. We only ask him to apply this canon of interpretation to the language of Scripture, and to admit that "to die" means with it to cease to exist. But if he follows his own law of language as we hope he will, he must allow that his view of future punishment is altogether wrong, for Scripture affirms a hundred times and more, that the sinful soul shall die.

We now come to another adventure of Dr. Angus in the armor of Saul. He is speaking of the views of Tatian. At p. 6 he says, "the annihilation of the soul of the wicked was taught by Arnobius and Tatian;" in his note on p. 7 he says, "Tatian, who taught that the soul of the wicked dies with the body, holds that both will rise again in immortality, and will die continually while they live on forever." Thus Dr. Angus makes Tatian hold two precisely opposite views! Saul's armor scarcely suits him here.

For the present we will say no more than just to draw attention to Dr. Angus' curious note (p. 6) on Irenæus. The testimony of Irenæus is very clear, and has been constantly quoted on our side. But the Doctor tells us that Irenæus is "confuting Platonism (not Pharisaism, which is quite a different thing)." We used to be told that the Pharisees and Plato, and the whole world in fact, held one and the same doctrine on the immortality of the soul, but now we find that Dr. Angus renounces Plato, and prefers to sit at the feet of Gamaliel, may no longer be taught in the school of St. Augustine! Poor Plato! Is this your reward after having for centuries afforded the text for ten thousand pulpits? But we fear the Doctor's distinction between Platonism and Pharisaism will not serve him much. If Josephus knew anything of the matter, he seems not to have recognized the distinction which Dr. Angus draws. (Jewish War 2, 8: 11, 14). Whatever distinction may exist, we should recommend Dr. Angus to sit at the feet of Paul rather than Gamaliel. Gamaliel would assure him that the wicked will never die; Paul has told him that they will die.

"It must be so! Plato, thou reasonest well,"

Apparently having nothing to advance from Irenæus himself to show that he held the immortality of the wicked, Dr. Angus reposes upon authority. He tells us that "both Massuit (the Benedictine editor) and Dr. Roberts (the translator) agree in saying that he teaches repeatedly that "the wicked will exist in misery forever." (note on p. 6). We do not think that his two stools of Rome and Geneva will keep Dr. Angus from here, too, coming to the ground. We will only say that, in no unkindly spirit, we challenge Dr. Angus to read Irenæus, and to bring forward from his words any proof of Dr. Roberts' assertions, or that, on this point, we are prepared to meet Dr. Roberts himself, fresh from his work of the translation of Irenæus. R. says: "I preached 31 discourses, and buried 15 souls with Christ by baptism into his death. thirty-two were reclaimed sand eighteen added to the church." They are now at Charles City——The brethren at Auburn, Ill. are thinking of putting up a chapel. This is just what they should do. We hope soon to hear that it is up.—— Br. Calkins says there are overwhelming calls for labor in the Gospel of the Kingdom from Southern Illinois. But where are the laborers.——The letter from Z. B. Chase of Maine which we gave a few days since, should not have been published. We learn he is not a reliable Christian man.——Br. Mansfield is aiding Br. Preston in a protracted effort at Algansee, Mich. It is a union meeting, including several denominations. The "results are glorious," as is always the case when Christians unite in earnest labor.——Brn. Mathewson and Fer[illegible] have just closed an interesting meeting of days at Union Mills, Ind.——Br. Maybee says the cause in Henry and Whiteside Co's, Ill. needs "more laborers."——Br. Durand has organized a church of twenty-three members at Cass, Mich. and sends us a goodly list of subscribers for The Times. Peace has been made among quarreling neighbors, and there is a good reformation. The meetings are in private houses, because the country is new, and there are no school houses yet built God bless the workers in the highways and hedges.

Correspondence.

From Br. Brewer.

The eventful year 1870 is numbered with those by-gone. But few that have strewn the [illegible] with historic records of wo, wre[illegible] ruin, have dotted time's p[illegible] with events of greater magnitude, having a bearing upon prophetic [illegible] and territory than the above.

A dynasty, by some considered invulnerable, has like the year written, passed away. A scepter that less than one short year ago made some nations tremble, hath, from a source the least expected, been crushed, and "The Man of Destiny," who was to grasp his predestined sword and hurl his invincible legions against the nations of earth, and transcending the fame of Macedonian Philip's great son, impose a mark on all mankind, under the penalty of death, alas for human greatness! pent up in Williamshohe, the purjured assasin broods over the untold misery his selfish and debauched ambition has entailed upon the millions of that once the bloodiest and most cruel of all persecuting nations.

The Bartholemew and Vendean horrors are now being revisited upon the gory soil, once red with the blood of unnumbered martyrs. God's judgments are visible upon this once, and for a time being, the only royal paramour of the golden-cup Harlot, with BABYLON emblazoned upon her Jezabel forehead.

The "Man of sin," the once haughty Vatican thunderer, that intimidated monarchs with the blasphemous assumption of excommunication, is now but a relic of the most corrupt race of men that ever made any pretence to either modesty or religion. Everlasting praise to infinite mercy. The history of the Man of sin is forever in the past. And let all say, Amen.

I like the alteration of THE TIMES to the quarto form. I wish there were none other form of our papers. I read your "Journal" with pleasure, and, I trust, profit. You often mention old friends whom I shall see no more in this world of mutations, but hope soon to greet in the sunny clime of bright Canaan. I long to be there.

Br. Thos. Davidson's article on "Paul's desire to depart," in No. 353, is very excellent. It should be in tract form. Who will put it there. The article "On The Frontier," by Sr. Fassett, afforded me a great treat. It waked up reminiscences of former years, when I had health to "rough it in the bush." But, alas, nearly three score and ten years—and twenty-seven of them in various exposures, often in school-houses, pent up with crowded listeners, succeeded by exposure to rainy, damp, and cold atmosphere—hath, with unceasing labors, entailed infirmities for which nothing but translation can ever effect a remedy.

I see names of persons in THE TIMES that are dear to me. The Lord preserve them unto eternal life. Br. Fassett's article on the "Alarm Bell," is timely. Some may think it rather severe. It made me think of an old maxim of an aged Methodist minister. "Never hew blocks with a razor." If Br. F.s weapon does wound, I feel certain that sober second thinking will prove a perfectly satisfactory emmolient. It certainly will if the words of Ps. 145: 5 are applied in the sense intended.

To the dear saints scattered abroad throughout the West, that I had the pleasure of forming an acquaintance with, I wish to say, be of good cheer. Our night of weeping is fast fleeing away. The omens of coming day thicken all around. The sky is tingeing with the rosy hue of coming day. Portents are gleaming and the moment of the church's redemption hasteth greatly.

Dear brethren in the ministry: Be strong in the Lord. Yours is a glorious mission. You are crowning the glad tidings with the last message to the last generation. Soon "The headstone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace, unto it!" shall be brought forth, and the ransomed of the Lord shall come with singing, bringing their sheaves with them.

We are now amid the perils of earth's closing history. Unparalleled iniquity abounds. Mammon, pleasure, lust, and crimes that once would require penalty and prisons to expiate them, are committed with unblushing effrontery; and the polluted culprit laughs with impunity at masked justice, pompously clothed, in many instances, with heavy "black mail." Truly in the language of the son of Pethuel—"Their wickedness is great." Soon the pent up wrath of long insulted Justice will be visited upon this generation. In the language of our Lord, we may exclaim in the now exhausted condition of prophecy—"This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled." On, on, the ever running current of time rushes. Swift the day of doom approaches, few are the sands of time remaining ere the Master shall arise and shut to the door. A few more trials, tears, pains, and sorrows and they will all be done. Halleluia! All the mortal conflict will be past.

Oh! how transcendently ravishing the thought to faith! The moment is near, when translation will change a race of mortal sufferers into the image of the ever blessed Redeemer, and consummate the Marriage of the Lamb.

My dearly beloved brethren and sisters in Christ, I beg this privilege of saying that I shake hands with you in my heart. Farewell till we meet. O! shall it be soon, in our long-sought and desired land of sacred and eternal rest and liberty?

S. S. BREWER.

Ashburnham Depot, Mass. Jan. 26.

From W. O. Hicks, Marlett. Mich.

Dear Brethren: I want to speak in this letter to those who are in the habit of using the noxious weed; for I notice that a great many of my young friends, who have started out to serve the Lord, have brought the practice of using tobacco along with them. I want to give you my experience, hoping, as it comes from one that loves you and knows how to sympathize with you, that it will encourage you with the help of God to say, "I will use it no more." I know you will say, "I can never give give it up. I have used it so long, and its so hard to quit it." Mind, my dear brother, it is Satan that is whispering all those objections to you. You can quit it. The Lord is able. That is what the Spirit of the Master says. Dear brother, obey that Spirit.

I have been addicted to the use of tobacco ever since I was thirteen years of age, and now I am twenty six. So you see I have used it constantly for thirteen years. When a few months ago, I was brought to realize that I was a very wicked sinner, I felt it my duty to quit the use of tobacco. I felt felt it was a bad example for a Christian to set to the world. Then up came the thousand and one excuses that Satan brought to bear on me. But I remembered the Lord loved me, and if I went to him nothing doubting, he would give me strength to overcome the habit. I even felt I was unworthy to be called a Christian; and that for me to talk about faith was only an empty profession, while I was not able to exercise enough to ask my Father to take away the appetite.

By the way, you may think I was a moderate consumer. I was once, but when I quit it I was using at the rate of ten cents worth a day. But, thank the dear Lord, when I found the position I held, I immediately laid away the tobacco, got down on my knees, told the Lord I wanted to stop using it, and if he would only help me by taking away the appetite, I would never use it any more. I can now thank him that the moment I asked him he took away the desire, and from then till now I have never once felt that I wanted to use it. May this meet the eye of some dear one struggling to quit that filthy habit, and it may be a word in season, to give you courage to take it to the Lord. Go to our Heavenly Father; he is able.

He will all our sorrows share.
Jesus knows our every weakness,
Take it to the Lord in prayer.

From C. C. Ramsay, Fairfield. Iowa, Jan. 17:

I am at present laboring in a protracted meeting at this place. I commenced preaching the first day of the year, and continued for several days without any signs of special interest, except there were plenty of hearers. The house was dedicated one year ago to-day, is neat and commodious, large enough to accommodate all who come on ordinary occasions. But during these meetings it has some of the time been uncomfortably packed; every portion of available space being occupied. Benches in the aisles have been filled, and all have been very attentive to the preaching of the word. One acquainted with the people, and their surroundings would be astonished if he could suddenly be transferred to this Prairie church, and find himself surrounded by at least one hundred farmer's sleighs, each bringing from two to four persons of all ages. Mothers with infants are constant in attendance, riding from two to five miles in an open sleigh. Some of these teams come eight and even ten miles to attend, and some men have walked a long distance. One walked eleven miles to hear the gospel of the kingdom.

This township is settled by farmers who average about five families to a square mile, but people come from surrounding towns to attend when there is a special interest. The church owes its prosperity largely to the labors of Eld. P. S. W. Deyo, and others who have preached the good news of the kingdom in this place. I have preached twenty successive discourses in seventeen days. The Lord has blessed his word and backsliders have been reclaimed, and several others have started. About twenty have arisen for prayers, six have pledged for baptism, and others are expected to do so. The meeting will be continued as long as as the interest demands. It is encouraging now, although for the first few days it seemed as though nothing could move the people. But when the church got thawed out and began to work with the preacher, the ice broke up, and the stream began to run clear; and now the prospect is good for a glorious work. May God bless his word and bring many to believe, and also, obey it. Pray for us.

Brief Extracts.

Geo. E. Merrill, Worcester, says: It is good to live near the Lord, and feel that he is near to us, even in our hearts continually. I do not want to have the truth we hold so dear in the head, simply, but I want to have it down deep in my heart. Sometimes I look around and see the inconsistencies of some that make great pretensions to religion, and ask, Where is to be found true faith in the soon-coming King? I not only want intellectually to know that Christ is coming, but I want to feel and realize the fact, and be all ready to hail him with joy when he comes. I feel it is important to have present salvation, in order to have future salvation, or to be saved in the kingdom of God.————Br. Wm. McCullock: The effort at Earl, Ill. resulted in much good to the little church there. They were revived and strengthened, and some that had wandered from the fold brought back with rejoicing. Others were deeply convicted, but did not fully commit themselves to the Savior of sinners. May the Lord have mercy upon them. There is some real good material identified with the truth at Earl that ought to be brought out more fully. May the Lord impress the burden where it belongs.————H. H. Davis: The little Advent church in New Boston, Mass., is doing finely, under the care of Br. Potter. There is much prejudice, and it is hard to get a church-member to read THE TIMES. But the different churches here are holding, from time to time, Concerts, Tableaux, Excursions, etc., to ge money for their churches, while prayer meetings and daily living Christians are greatly neglected, which goes to show the fulfillment of Scripture. Pray for us.————D. M. Schenck, Adair Co. Iowa: THE TIMES is the only paper we take—and we could not do without it very well. It is the only preacher of the kind we have in our neighborhood, if it is a "silent" one. It does us good to peruse its columns and hear from the brothers and sisters that we are somewhat acquainted with, who are scattered up and down the land, and others, also, their hope and prospects of eternal life when Jesus comes to give his people life. Brn. Cate and Kent have preached to us occasionally the last year, and we think light was given to some on the Scriptures who had never heard the Advent doctrine before.————M. B. Geer, Ogle Co., Ill: If one thousand of THE TIMES, subscribers would enclose one dollar each, and select three of their neighbors that would read the paper, that would be three thousand names, and I am sure that one thousand out of the three would subscribe at the end of three months. It seems as though one thousand out of four thousand subscribers must be able to inclose one dollar. There is no way that can be more effective to spread truth, than scattering THE TIMES among the people. Enclosed find one dollar, with names and addresses.————Wm. Ragland, Piatt Co., Ill: We have Eld. Hurd preaching for us, and he will continue for two weeks. He is delivering some master sermons, without any signs of success, as yet. This is a hard place for an Adventist, for all hands think they are immortal, and that they will fly away to heaven as soon as they die, instead of waiting till the resurrection, and dwell in the new earth. What a sad mistake.————Carrie Lindbeck, Henry Co., Ill: I do love our glorous cause, and I love to read the letters from our brethren and sisters, and also the "Editor's Journal." It is cheering to learn how the truth is being proclaimed all over the land. Times are very hard, but I cannot do without the paper, it does me so much good. After reading it, I send it off to friends, and I hope it will do them as much good as it does me. Oh! how happy I have been ever since I did what our Savior told us to do—believe on him and be baptized.————W. H. Reese, La Cross Co. Mo: I found in THE TIMES of Jan. 17, a few articles headed, "Things to keep." I can or would like to keep them all, except the last; and that I cannot. The Sabbath, which is referred to Ex. 20: 8, is the one the Jews were commanded to keep, and I think it is not binding on us at all. If we are to keep the first day, then it is not the Sabbath; for that is the seventh-day. Are we not under the Gospel dispensation? If so then we are no longer under the law, but free to worship God according to our conscience. But it is necessary for us to have one day set apart for worship, and as the first day of the week has been kept for that purpose down to the present time, I think it should be observed as the day of worship; but not called "the Sabbath day."————Hattie Potter, Antrim Co., Mich.: We should miss the paper very much, as we have no religious privileges here, whatever, and there is scarcely any one that seems to care for any thing beyond this world's pleasures. We have tried to circulate THE TIMES, and what few tracts and books we have; for we feel that "time is short," and we would awaken some to see their danger. But very few will read them, and most orthodox Christians regard us as little better than "infidels."————Geo. Wright jr.: I have been here, Speaker, Mich., continuing the meetings since the close of our Q. M. Some have started to serve the Lord, and the interest is rising. Last night five arose for prayer. They have been the subjects of many prayers already; and if the Lord should lead them out into a large place in his love, it would be a great blessing to this community, and the church, as most are husbands of wives who are trying to serve the Lord. Br. Branch is with me, and is a valuable helper.————From a private note: Don't lay to heart much what any may say of you by way of "A Protest," or any other "test." I know that truth, and right, and God, and good sense, are on your side. And you know it too, and all the dear readers of your excellent paper know it. And if all these are for you, you are in the majority, though all others may be against you. A religious faith or doctrine, based on the immortality of the human soul, will cause even good men to repeat the devil's lie"—"Ye shall not surely die"—and they can't help it anymore than water can help running down hill. It is impossible for even good men, with such a belief, to preach a doctrinal sermon without contradicting themselves two or three times. I have seen enough of this to know that it is true. Continue, my dear brother, to hold up the truth as you see it, and may God be with you.————Another private note: "A man who does not believe in the immortality of the soul is insane or an idiot." So proclaimed a minister of the Presbyterian order, not long ago, in my hearing (and I think for my particular benefit.) It is comforting to know that learned men are driven to such straits, for lack of argument. As for me, personally, I conclude if my belief that the soul is not inherently immortal is true, then being denounced is a matter of no importance to me. And if it is not true, and the belief is sure evidence of insanity or idiocy, then personal responsibility is lost in the fact of unsound condition. But the most shameful part of the whole thing is, that a man will proclaim from the pulpit that which he knows is untrue. God forgive him.————And another: Being anxious to spread the truth as I now see it in God's Word, I had THE TIMES sent to —— —— in ——. He was a Methodist for many years. When I sent to him tracts and papers He read them and was anxious to have them. Hardly did he think 'twould bring trouble upon him. His brethren informed the preacher, no doubt, and charges were brought against him for "sowing false doctrine," etc. I am sorry to inform you he had to let this Bible doctrine alone. THE TIMES and other works are laid by. They say they have the Bible, and that its good enough for them. It is so, bless the Lord! I wish they understood it as they must in order to be Bible Christians. I don't want to bring railing accusations against such Christians. But I do think charity suffers much. I would not boast of my attainments, but would praise God for the light that has been revealed unto me. And this, I well know: if I cannot be a Methodist and believe the Bible doctrine, that I can be a true Christian independent of orthodoxy and our present-day theology.

Prayer.

What is prayer? Prayer is a petition. To pray is to entreat, to implore, to supplicate. It is the life and power of religion. Without it there can be no true heartfelt devotion. Yet many are very backward in this respect.

Those who feel the importance of living a holy and spiritual life, can not live without praying. It is a delight for all such to hold frequent converse with the Father of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Secret prayer is enjoined upon us. Christ says: "Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father who is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret will reward thee openly." He has taught us how to pray, and in what manner we should ask for temporal and spiritual blessings. As we are dependent upon God for all things, we ought to obey his commands, for there is no other way we can have our wants supplied. The promise is—"Ask and it shall be given."

Nothing hard. The terms are easy; so easy that the weakest saint can comply. "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in every time of need." "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." "Pray without ceasing." Let this be our motto, and peace and happiness is ours, even in this state of things.

Public prayer will give us the same kind of peace. Therefore none should excuse themselves from praying in public.

Some do excuse themselves by saying they have no gift in prayer. This is wrong. If we have the right spirit, and open our mouths God will fill them, and we shall not lack for utterance.

If we have a willing mind, and are humble, it will be delightful to "pray for one another." Let all join with one accord in praising God, and the blessing of heaven will descend, and "we shall have a heavenly sitting together in Christ Jesus."

All that have families should pray with and for them. It will prove a blessing, not only to the suppliant, but to all the family. Let us "watch unto prayer," living a good and practical life. Prayer then will be a delight, and the Lord will manifest himself unto us a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God.

G. E. MERRILL.

Why I Like the "Times"

I mean the Advent Christian Times of course. I do like it and I enjoy its presence, and as, snow-bound, I failed to get the last number until the following Monday (I generally get it on Thursday), I felt quite lonesome without it, and I learned by its absence how much I prized it.

I like it for its stirring articles on the second advent and kindred truths. I frequently have the reading of the Interior, the Advance, and some other good religious papers, but seldom do I find in them anything on our blessed Lord's return. But in THE TIMES I find this glorious truth set forth in its simplicity and beauty, its reality and grandeur, filling my soul with ecstatic joy, and enabling me to run with patience the race set before me.

I like it for its sweet, kind spirit towards all, both friend and foe. No bitter taunt, or harsh crimination, but ever a pleasant, peaceful spirit, while at the same time a distinction is kept up between truth and error, between right and wrong. I have watched THE TIMES from its beginning with interest, and I am glad to find that it stands the test on this matter. I do not agree with many of its editiorials, but I do agree with the spirit manifested in them. Some have found fault with its editor for speaking plainly concerning men and things, and for making known facts which serve as a warning to Adventists. I wish to see no cajoling, nor false dealing, but plain truth in the spirit of Jesus.

I like it for those stirring letters from brethren and sisters scattered abroad. They are the cream and sugar sweetening and enriching the whole.

Like it for those "talks with the press" that William has occasionally. I think it a very sensible press indeed. But I see it admits learning something by being used to print THE TIMES I only wish all its readers were duly im*pressed* to do their whole duty as ex*pressed* in those "press" talks. Perhaps they will be, some of them, at least.

Well, there are many more reasons why I love THE TIMES as a dear old friend, and I wish the Association was able to dress it up in a little better color. I wish it could be printed on paper that is whiter and stronger. The type would print clearer and THE TIMES. would look more cheerful, and its articles would attract more attention, and all its readers would say, "Well well; this looks good. I shall take more comfort than ever in reading it now." Perhaps this change will be made some day, when the "press" has said so much that some begin to feel that they ought to give more to help on in the work of sending THE TIMES out as a cheerful messenger to the thousands who read its pages. F. BURR.

"All for Jesus."

This was the title of a touching little poem, handed us by a friend a few days since, the perusal of which, led me to make the searching inquiry, Am I doing all for Jesus, either by thought, word, or deed, that I possibly can? Do I love to think of the dear Savior, of his blessed ministrations to the poor and needy, the sick and the afflicted, while here upon earth, or of his suffering and death upon the cross for one so unworthy as myself? Do I love to speak for Jesus, "and tell to sinners all around, What a dear Savior I have found." Are all the moments sweet, and rich with blessing, that I spend in earnest pleadings for Divine care and guidance, while passing through this vale of tears? Do I love to sing his praises, morning, noon, and night, while contemplating his wondrous love for a perishing world? Am I obeying the Divine injunction—"Freely ye have received, freely give," not only of my goods to feed the poor, and clothe the naked, but also to aid in the dissemination of light and truth, on the great plan of salvation? Am I daily striving to live up to the precepts and examples of the dear Son of God, by a well ordered life, and godly conversation; Is all that I have, and am, laid upon the altar; with the renewed consecration, at the beginning of the new year, that I will do all I can for the cause of Christ and suffering humanity? In short, may I not ask, Should not the motto of every Christian heart be, All for Jesus? "Then, whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, do all, in the name of Jesus, and for the glory of God." M. E. O.

The Inner Man Converted.

Some of our "orthodox" friends assert that "materialists do not believe in a hell or heaven; neither do they believe in conversion." The argument (?) for the latter assumption is—"That unless man is in possession of an immaterial man, the incorruptible inner man, there is nothing that can be changed; and as materialists do not believe in this incorruptible inner man, therefore they do not believe in conversion, because," say they, "unless this be so, there is nothing that can be changed." Now the charge is not only pure assumption, but is based upon a premise that is utterly unfounded, and impossible in and of itself. Conversion signifies a change of heart. But Br. M. E. Minister says—"It is not the taking out our heart and putting within us an ox's heart, nor the changing the mind or the affections; but it is a radical change of the incorruptible inner man." So, then, the change effected is not in any way concerning the material man, or the mind of the material man; it is only changing the incorruptible, immaterial inner man. Very well, Brother Immaterialist, Can that which is immaterial and incorruptible be changed? That which is unchangeable must be changed!

Is it absolutely necessary for us to believe in an impossibility in order to be saved? I wonder if our immaterialistic friends are not straining out a gnat and trying to swallow a camel? I wonder if it can be done? I am perfectly willing they should undertake the job, if they must; but I decidedly object to their imposing such an impossibility upon me.

Again. They contend there must be a part of man, or a man incorruptible, in man, that does not die with the body, or there could not be a resurrection. A part of man must be preserved alive to identify the other part.

I wonder if this theory does not set at naught the power and promise of Almighty God! Does it not virtually ignore the great mission of Christ to this world as the Redeemer and Lifegiver? Does it not deny the power of God to effect through the sufferings, death, and resurrection of Christ, the resurrection of his people? Did Christ die in vain? or did he die to save immortal men? Brother Immaterialist, Do you believe that God cannot identify the man at the resurrection, but that the "inner man" can? Then you admit that the soul can do that which God cannot do, thus exalting man's soul above God our Creator. S. K. GIBSON.

How Done!

A Methodist preacher who sends up sixty new subscribers to his paper, tells how it was done: "I declared the excellence of the paper from the pulpit, and afterward, through the week, proceeded to take names by personal application." If all in the ministry among the Adventists would take this course, our list would soon be greatly enlarged. It seems to us, that no minister should rest until by some means every Advent family within the circle of their ministry is supplied with THE TIMES. Our most successful workers declare that the paper helps them immensely. Introduce it to the public attention from the desk: and introduce it again and again until you accomplish the desired object.

THE CONQUEST OF FRANCE.

Paris has virtually fallen, and France is at the mercy of the Germans—their spoil if they so will it. The campaign of 1870, vaingloriously proclaimed by those who precipitated the war, as that of "Paris a Berlin," has ended where few suspected it would close—in the French, not the Prussian Capital. It is not its most remarkable characteristic that the original plan of the campaign was completely reversed; that the nation in the offensive should have been thrown so suddenly and irrecoverably on the defensive; that the most peacefully disposed of nations should have proved for the time the most warlike; and that an immense standing army, whose strength and martial spirit all Europe has feared for almost a generation, should have been annihilated at a blow by an army marshaled on the instant, and whose existence was only suspected, whose power was never dreaded. The campaign of the Germans in France has been in every military aspect the most wonderful of modern times, dwarfing in the magnitude of its operations and the importance of its results the most brilliant efforts of the great Frederick or the First Napoleon; and as such, worthy of the most careful study and review.

Let us no longer credit the stale fiction that the two nations went to war for a trivial point of honor. The candidature of the Prince of Hohenzollern we now know was not the cause but the absurd pretext for war; and it is to insult the nations themselves to look upon the conflict as precipitated by such a shallow cause, or brought about simply and solely by the ambition or criminal folly of one man. Opposing races, conflicting nationalities, antagonistic churches, commercial rivalries, competing civilizations, between whom was no natural love and much unnatural hate, clashed in this giant struggle. The conflict was inevitable; theirs the credit who long postponed it; theirs the crime who precipitated it. Napoleon and his people saw that the threatened success of German unity would destroy the political supremacy of France; and this fear won the nobility and landed proprietors of the Empire to the support of war on any pretext. The consolidation of the German armies, under the leadership and upon the military system of Prussia, whether accomplished by confederation or treaty, promised eventually to give Prussia military power greater than that of France, and this belief rendered the French army enthusiastic for war. The commercial projects of Germany—notably the Mount St. Gothard Railway, which, as the rival of the Mt. Cenis route, was to have united the German railway lines with those of Austria and Italy beyond the Alps—were absurdly thought to threaten the commercial prosperity and importance of France; and this roused to hatred and to action her industrial and commercial classes. The French Catholic clergy have ever been the enemy of Protestant Germany, and persistently preached the crusade which Napoleon dreaded to declare and durst not oppose. The fallen Emperor was too much the coward, too absolute a knave, to have gone to war had not every social, commercial, and religious consideration urged the nation to the conflict. Wise statesmanship in Germany prevented the struggle three years ago, when the possession of Luxemburg was demanded by France, and would have postponed it longer; but weakness and folly in France, too criminal to be forgiven, permitted it to be inaugurated.

The reorganization of the French army; the interference in the Luxemburg affair; the opposition to the St. Gothard enterprise—all these and many other more trivial demonstrations have revealed the disposition of France to provoke her rival. Except in the thorough organization of her armies, Germany has betrayed nothing of eagerness for war; yet she has diligently prepared for it. She accomplished by treaty that union of her several armies and secured that neutrality of other nations which was necessary before she could accept the wage of war. Not being ready, she yielded in the matter of Luxemburg—hesitated in the St. Gothard project, but never halted in the work of organizing the armies and perfecting the Union. France has been passionate, quarrelsome, and threatening, and has thus appeared always in the wrong. Germany, on the contrary, has shown a disposition to overlook insults for the sake of peace, and, always calm and self possessed, has managed to appear always in the right. But Kings and Emperors and their Premiers were but the insignificant instruments that brought about the struggle. It was, after all, a conflict of Civilizations seeking supremacy, and the weaker and worse has happily gone to the wall. No one can fail to see that it was a united nation which responded to the French declaration of war on July 15, nor doubt that at the call of the Prussian King united Germany extended its hearty support. The uprising of the two nations so different in character fully committed them to the quarrel and raised it to the dignity of a war of Nations, not of Monarchs. The summons to arms was received in France with the enthusiasm, exultation, and boasting, that are characteristic of the French nature. In Germany, it was responded to with that stern reticence, that serious determination, which belong to the German temperament. The one nation sprang up angry and defiant; the other rose fierce and resolute. France had but one motive, to sustain her fading glory; Germany, to maintain her wounded honor. France, impulsively; Germany, doggedly; France, with passionate cries of rage; Germany, in stern and silent indignation these the characteristic outward evidences of the uprising which makes that of 1870 there so exact a parallel of that of 1861 here. To no mere quarrels of kings or politicians do civilized nations respond with such vigor and determination as was witnessed there and here.

NAPOLEON'S FIRST BLUNDERS.

In this initial development of the war—the uprising of the two nations—the greatest blunder of the French Emperor was exposed. His own nation was at his back; his hopes were realized there, for only a few voices like those of Favre and Theirs had been heard in weak remonstrance against the inexpediency of the crime. But Germany, too, was united in support of the Prussian King. Napoleon had believed that to threaten Germany with invasion was to divide the Confederation and detach the Southern allies from its support. The war had not been declared a week before he recognized that in insulting and arousing the national spirit, not the mere national pride, of Germany, he had united her. The disaffection of Hanover, troublesome always during time of peace, disappeared the instant war was begun. Frankfort bankers and citizens, bitter enemies of Prussia while peace lasted, became loyal, liberal, enthusiastic citizens of the Confederation when threatened with invasion. Bavaria, Baden, Wirtemberg, Saxony—forgetting how, no longer than four years before, the Prussian army had desolated some of them in its triumphant march upon Austria—responded with alacrity to the German call. Napoleon entirely miscalculated the strength of the German feeling of nationality. He forgot that in the face of great dangers minor dissensions disappear; and that to thus demonstrate the value of unity was to confound all arguments for disunion.

Errors as great as this lost Napoleon also the sympathy of neutral nations, and left him without moral support in all Europe. The shallowness of the pretext for war was recognized by all. In Italy it was so strongly condemned by public sentiment that Victor Emanuel, in replying to Napoleon's demand for aid, declared that to send him an Italian army was to destroy the monarchy. In Austria the indignation of the people at the French insult to the Teutonic race was so strong that the Saxon Von Beust and the Hapsburg Emperor durst not afford Napoleon even moral support. Russia was already leagued with Prussia. England, Spain, and the rest of the minor States, were powerless to interpose. France thus found herself doomed to cope singly and alone with united Germany.

And, as if to further appal Napoleon, it was at this time that the great military inferiority of France to Germany was displayed. To his call responded a great standing army, imposing in its display of numbers, and supported, as we have seen, by an almost united public sentiment. But to the call of the Prussian King an armed nation replied. The French people, forbidden to carry arms for twenty years or more, merely urged the standing army to its work. The German people, trained to arms under the peculiar system in vogue with the Teutons since the days when they fought the Roman Empire, joined the Prussian army and marched with it. The one nation was a warlike people prohibited from bearing arms that a despised government might be safe from civil contentions. The other was a people of peaceful disposition and pursuits, forced for greater security from powerful and beligerent neighbors to bear arms and maintain an army in which all citizens owed service by law. The regular French army was large, but practically it had no reserves, for the Gardes Mobiles were untrained to the use of arms. The standing armies of Germany were comparatively small, mere skeleton organizations; but their reserves of the Landwehr were ample, and trained to the use of the best weapons of war. Hence to the Rhine only a great French army moved, but from Germany and its allied States marched a whole nation.

MILITARY BLUNDERS.

These were initial errors which materially affected the whole campaign, for they begot others. Among the gravest was a halt in the advance, and a false disposition of the French corps.

Napoleon's campaign was based, as he himself tells us, on the supposition that Southern Germany could be detached, in fact as well as sentiment, from the Northern Confederation. His plan was "to mass 150,000 men at Metz, 100,000 at Strasbourg, and 50,000 at Chalons, and to cross the Rhine near Haguenau." Had this campaign been carried out with vigor by July 20th, as it might have been, it would have proved comparatively successful. The German armies would have been caught in the act of mustering; the Rhine fortresses would have been found poorly prepared for defense; only the Badeners were then on the upper and only Von Steinmetz on the lower Rhine. The disaffection of the South Germans, if any existed among them, would have been encouraged by the temporary success of the invaders. The passage of the Rhine would have given an excuse to Austria and Italy to impose neutrality on South Germany, as Napoleon says he hoped they would, but we now know they would not have ventured to act at all. His success would have been, therefore, only temporary but the campaign across the Rhine could, nevertheless, have been made before the end of July, had not Napoleon halted irresolute on the discovery of his initial diplomatic blunders. By the end of the third week in July, the corps of the French army were in position to make the contemplated advance. The First Corps, under Marshal McMahon, was concentrated at Strasbourg, with its supports at Bitchie, Belfort, and Besancon, forming the right column. The Third Corps, under Marshal Bazaine, and two others, was at Metz, with Frossard thrown forward to St. Avaid and Ladmirvault to Thionville; forming the left wing. The center was at Chalons and Nancy under Marshal Canrobert. The advance corps, thus spread out like a great fan, extended along a point from Thionville to Belfort, a distance of more than 150 miles. Between the right at Strasbourg and the left at Metz, connected only by the two advanced corps of De Failly and Frossard, fifty miles of the most difficult country of France intervened. This false disposition of the French army, insignificant if the intention to advance had been persisted in after the first disappointments, became a glaring military blunder when delay had given the German army time to organize and occupy Baden and Rhenish Bavaria. It was the manifest duty of the French Commander to move with his large standing army before the German citizen soldiers could be assembled, armed, and organized. Having no volunteers to recruit from, no trained reserves to call upon, the French had everything to lose and nothing to gain by delay. Delay was all the Germans asked. "If Napoleon will give us until July 23," said Von Moltke, on July 16, "he will never pass the Rhine." If Von Moltke—who had more confidence in the military system which he had elaborated, and a more just appreciation of German public sentiment, than any of his associates, excepting, perhaps, Count Bismarck—was too sanguine regarding German energy, he was also too apprehensive of French daring. Napoleon, grown cautious, and, as now appears, full of misgivings of his own strength, gave the Germans still longer time. It was not until August 2 that he made his first demonstration at Saarbruck. If this ridiculous affair had any higher purpose than to amuse the troops and the Prince Imperial, it was to deceive the Germans into the belief that the Palatinate, and not Baden, was to be first invaded. But it cannot be considered as having this importance; for it was followed by no movement whatever, and the French never again really assumed the offensive.

Above all things, let us ever keep in mind the truth, that men can never be denounced out of their vices. Teach them to put on faith and love, and when they array themselves in this dress, their vices will drop from them like moth-eaten garments.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 7, 1871.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: { Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement, the unconscious state of the dead, their literal resurrection, the finite nature of evil, the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT, Wm Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT, D R Mansfield TREASURER; O S Knapp, AUDITOR, Wm L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O R Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

A Colporteur's Notes.

We have just published a little pamphlet with the above title for Br. J. B. Wadsworth, the well-known pedestrian Advent Colporteur, whose walks through the South interested us so much within a year or two. It gives some incidents of his travels, and an exposition of the faith, with other matter. Sent post paid for 10c. tf.

Registered Letters.

We cannot advise our correspondents to send us money in "registered letters." They are no safer than letters sent in the ordinary way. If you cannot obtain a postal order, send us a plainly directed letter, the ordinary way. Your 15c paid for registering does not insure safety. Over a thousand registered letters were stolen last year, and the government makes no restitution in case of loss.

Woman and her Work.

This is a monthly journal of 16 pp., established for the purpose of enlarging the sphere of woman's usefulness, especially in that department which becomes her so well. Christian charity. Published at Concord, N. H., Mrs. C. F. Sargent, Editor, assisted by Mrs E S Jennings, Mrs H. B Hastings, and others.

Single copies, $1 a year. Address Mrs. C. F. Sargent, Box 435 Concord, N. H.

The Times.

ABROAD.

Paris is surrounded by "a belt of howling wilderness."—A special telegram to the London Times from Berlin, says the conditions of peace presented by Bismarck to Favre embrace the cession of Alsace and Loraine with Belfort and Metz; payment of a thousand million francs indemnity for expenses of the war; the cession of the colony of Pondicherry, and transfer to the German navy of twenty first rate frigates. M. Favre refers these terms to the National Assembly to meet at Bordeaux.—The little town of Chateaudun has seen hard times during this present war, having been taken and retaken three times. In this can be fully realized all the horrors of modern warfare. Whole masses of ruins now mark the former site of the town, once filled with streets of good and substantial houses. The church bears evidence of the enormous and heavy artillery fire, and in the cellars of the houses which have yet to be dug out are lying the unfortunate inhabitants who had taken refuge within them, to be suffocated and stifled. Walking amidst these streets seems like visiting some town laid waste and desolate by a mighty earthquake.—That numerous class of the English public that is openly dissatisfied with the measures taken by their government to place the country on a proper defensive footing will not be reassured to hear that both in the Second and Third German Armies the invasion of England is a favorite topic of discussion. With an unbounded confidence in their military capabilities, not altogether without excuse, the fire-eaters in the German ranks have conceived the gigantic idea of first throwing a small army across the Channel, and after leaving it to protect itself with field-works, to construct a bridge of boats from Calais to Dover, for the purpose of sending over reinforcements. At present any such contingency looks highly improbable; but if, in the future European complications that the present year will inevitably develop, Prussia and England should find themselves on opposite sides, it is obvious enough that the military ardor of a section of Germany would find a certain satisfaction in clamoring for a trial of strength between the two great Protestant nations of Europe. With a military establishment that has been proved to be short of powder, breech-loaders and field-guns, with a population of a very unmilitary character, and with generals whose competence to handle large masses of troops has been gravely doubted, Great Britain can hardly afford to regard even a vague possibility like this with calmness. N. Y. Times.—In a late speech Von Beust advocated an increase of the armament of the Empire, both military and naval. He distinctly repudiated the idea that the government was actuated by any policy of revenge for the past, but said the danger of warlike complications involving Austria was not a phantom peril. The policy of the Empire was peaceful and prudent, but "contingencies were possible, and foreign powers must learn that Austria is ready for defense.—The war is over. The statement that 800,000 more Germans have been called into the field is an ample offset to the cry of some Frenchmen for a renewal of the conflict as soon as the armistice shall have expired. France is overpowered, crushed by superior numbers and intelligence, and must submit. What is to be her future? She is now arranging for the choice of a new National Assembly, upon which will devolve the weighty responsibility of organizing a government to take charge of the wrecked nation. Meanwhile political intrigues abound. The Imperialists are at work with tremendous energy for the restoration, if not of Napoleon III., at least of the Empire, with Napoleon IV.—he of the Saarbruck "baptism of fire"—as principal actor, and of the Empress as regent. But their hopes are dimmed by their inability thus far to secure the services of Bismarck in their intrigues. The Bourbons and Orleanists and Republicans all actively working out their several schemes for the future. What is that future to be? We can only conjecture. But so far as we may judge the future from the past, France has before her the doom of all the Roman Catholic nations. Henceforth, more than ever before, she is to be the victim of revolutions, internal strifes and dissensions, until she shall break the yoke of Romanism and reform her manners and morals. What we see in Austria, Italy and Spain, we may see hereafter in France. For the power of the last supporter of the Great Apostasy of Rome, is broken, we believe, forever. The terms of peace offered by Prussia indicate her views for the future. They are the hardest terms, says the London Times, known in modern history. She means to cripple the only great rival she has on the continent of Europe outside Russia. Hereafter "the bully of Europe" is to be neither French or English, but German and Prussian. She demands a fleet of war vessels from France, and will thus have the nuckles of a navy ready-made to her hands. This means that she intends to be mistress of the seas as well as of the land. And, if the recent report be true, that Austria and Russia have agreed upon the partition of European Turkey at some future day, we may expect to see Denmark, Holland and Belgium absorbed in the new German Empire, making it one of the greatest commercial and naval, as well as military powers of the world. The prophets of peace are already in the fields, predicting good times at hand. France is to rise regenerated from her fiery baptism. Prussia is to use her newly acquired power and position with even greater moderation and care for the general welfare of mankind than even the Antonines showed in the last days of Rome. Standing armies are to be reduced, and the world's progress Millennium-ward is to be greatly accelerated. But the Bible student should know better. The nations of earth are receiving their last chastisements which only precede the final destruction. The great powers now rising have no long centuries before them, but a short work. Then will come the end of all earthly, and the beginning of the heavenly kingdom.

THE CONQUEST OF FRANCE.

THE BATTLES IN THE VOSGES.

On August 3 the mass of the German armies were in position near the French frontier from Treves to the Rhine, and along the upper Rhine. On the next day the left wing, under the Crown Prince of Prussia, threw itself in overwhelming force, and by surprise, upon the single division of Gen. Douay, holding an advanced position at Weissenburg on the Lauter, near its junction with the Rhine. The attacking army numbered [illegible] men. The French had no more than [illegible], and they were surprised at their morning meal. The principal defense of the town was stormed, and the French fell back [illegible] upon the main army of the Vosges near Worth. During the night of August 4 and the next following day the Crown Prince pushed [illegible] not less than 125,000 men, and prepared to advance, on August 6, by a [illegible] route, to Strasbourg, where MacMahon was then [illegible]. But the French Marshal, instead of withdrawing his advanced detachments to Strasbourg, [illegible] took up a new position at Worth, and established a line from Haguenau to Worth, holding the passes of the Vosges and threatening the right flank of the Germans if they attempted to march on Strasbourg. He succeeded in concentrating about 50,000 men at these points. De Failly, at Bitche, failed to come up in time, else MacMahon would have confronted the Crown Prince in a naturally strong position with fully 70,000 men. The range of front necessitated by the position assumed by MacMahon, caused considerable delay in the Crown Prince's attack, and though the battle began at eight o'clock it did not become general until after noon. In one or two minor affairs of the morning the French were successful; but in a desperate attack upon the Fifth Prussian Corps they were driven back with great slaughter. In the afternoon the Crown Prince, weakening his center, although the French persisted in attacking there, extended his right and left in heavy flank attacks on both wings of MacMahon's army. Its right was first overlapped and driven in on the center, and eventually broken. Almost immediately afterward the French left was flanked, and a panic seizing the whole army it turned and fled in great confusion to the mountains. Just at the close of the engagement one division of De Failly's corps reached the field and covered the retreat. In this battle the French lost 20,000 men in killed, wounded, and prisoners, and thirty cannon, including six mitrailleuses. Pursuit was made next day. Abandoning the march toward Strasbourg, the Crown Prince pushed forward toward Nancy, with directions from Von Moltke to thrust himself between MacMahon and Bazaine, and prevent their junction at Metz. Forces were detached to mask Bitche and Pfalsburg, and an army of Bavarians was advanced to besiege Strasbourg, which was now held only by the regular French garrison under Gen. Uhrich.

On the same day that the Crown Prince routed MacMahon at Worth, the armies of Von Steinmetz and Frederick Charles made the passage of the Saar at Saarbruck, and surprised and defeated the French at Forbach. The attack seems to have been prematurely made, and was permitted by Gen. Von Steinmetz to develop into a general engagement, against positive orders. It has been asserted that it was the design of Von Moltke to thrust Prince Frederick Charles between that part of the French left which had been advanced to the Vosges and the main body at Metz, and capture it; but there is nothing in proof of the existence of this daring design. It does not seem to have been feasible, for at the time only one of Prince Frederick Charles' divisions had passed the Saar. After its defeat at Forbach, the left column of the French army concentrated toward Metz. In the meantime the center, under Canrobert, had advanced to Nancy and Metz, and hopes were entertained that the army could be again united on the Moselle. But the Prussian Crown Prince, with wonderful vigor, thrust his columns forward between the two French wings. At the same time the army of Prince Frederick Charles was moved upon the right flank of Bazaine's columns, and thus becoming for the time the center of the German army, at once established communication with the left, and increased the force which continually separated the two wings of Napoleon's shattered army.

Thus was accomplished the difficult work of driving the French from their strong positions in the Vosges Mountains. It was accomplished with less loss to the assailants than was sustained by the defenders. In doing it the French Army, doubtless by design on the part of the German commander, but partly by fortuitous circumstances, was broken in two. It now became the chief purpose of the German leader to prevent its concentration. The natural lines of retreat from Metz and Nancy converged at Chalons; it was necessary, therefore, to get upon these lines and cut one of the armies off from retreat. Von Moltke decided to make the effort against that of Marshal Bazaine.

THE BATTLES AROUND METZ.

Whether or not Von Moltke's original design was to cut off Bazaine from retreat to Metz is unknown, but he now concentrated his whole energy upon the task of shutting him off from retreat from Metz by passing his own armies between that city and Chalons. It is not known that Napoleon's second plan of campaign necessitated a retirement of the whole army to Chalons, and it was resolved to abandon Metz to the care of its regular garrison. This design was suspected by the Germans, and their entire army was pushed on to intercept the French retreat. The Crown Prince halted in his pursuit of MacMahon, and stayed in the vicinity of Nancy, in case he should be wanted. Prince Frederick Charles made forced marches to the Moselle, which he designed passing south of Metz at Pont-a-Mousson. The army of Steinmetz pressed closely on Bazaine's rear, retarding its withdrawal to Metz, and attacking only when it prepared to retire. On August 13, the army of Frederick Charles appeared at Pont-a-Mousson. The French left wing was in fact detained in its dangerous position by the attack of Steinmetz upon the Sixth Corps of Canrobert, which was advancing to Bazaine's aid. Thus apprised of the German advance, Bazaine began on Sunday, August 14, and continued without interruption from Von Steinmetz an attempt to withdraw. Von Steinmetz on the north and rear of the town, and one corps of Frederick Charles's army fell upon them with all their vigor, determined, as Von Steinmetz afterward reported, to "nail them to the spot." They were repeatedly and bloodily repulsed; in no combat of the war had the slaughter of the Germans been as terrible; and Napoleon rightly claimed the result as a victory for the French arms. But, while unquestionably a tactical success for the French, the strategic design of the Germans had been gained. The French rear guard was not only prevented from passing the Moselle until nightfall, but re-enforcements had to be returned from the corps which had already crossed to its assistance. [illegible] left wing [illegible] position, by two corps of the Germans, while an entire army of 200,000 men marched day and night to seize its lines of retreat. Von Steinmetz's sacrifice was a necessity. It was not made in vain.

During August 15 the passage of the Moselle was finally accomplished by both armies. But the column of Bazaine moved with such difficulty that by nightfall of the 15th it had reached only Mars la Tour, on the Verdun road, and Doncourt, on the Etain road, neither place more than twelve miles from Metz. Here it bivouacked on the night of the 15th, with a front extending from road to road, and along the Verdun road as far toward Metz as Gravelotte. The Germans, meantime, had accomplished a much greater distance, and moving from Pont-a-Mousson, had reached the Verdun road west of Mars la Tour. Their advance corps were actually on the shorter of Bazaine's lines of retreat, and on the morning of August 16 attacked from the direction of Chalons.

The battle of Mars la Tour was opened by a cavalry attack by the Third Prussian Corps, evidently with the design of delaying the French until the German infantry should come up. It [illegible] into confusion. When, after considerable delay, the French reformed and prepared to brush the cavalry away, it was to find [illegible] their passage. Other Prussian corps arriving and engaging, a general battle, [illegible], raged from Mars la Tour along the Verdun road to Rezonville. It was finally ended by a charge of the Tenth Cavalry Corps upon the right of the French at Mars la Tour, which was forced back in some confusion toward Metz.

[illegible] on the night of August [illegible], crossed the Moselle, north of Metz, and moving westward, beyond Doncourt, attacked the position from the direction of Etain. A severe conflict ensued from dawn until dark of the 16th, when the French fell back toward Metz and joined the rest of the army at Gravelotte.

By these two [illegible] "victories," as Bazaine [illegible] them—the French retreat had been frustrated; they were compelled to abandon their advanced positions, and fall back toward Metz; and the Germans were firmly established on their best lines of retreat to Chalons. It only remained for the French to gain one other such Chalons victory to be utterly ruined.

Bazaine had been forced by the operation of the 16th to assume the defensive, and though clearly his escape depended on the immediate resumption of the struggle with all his force before the full strength of his enemy could come up, he permitted the 17th to pass without attacking. He disposed his army, fully 135,000 strong, from Gravelotte to Metz, facing west and south. His position was admirable for defense, but afforded no natural advantages for offensive movements, though it was necessary, now if ever, that he should take the initiative. On the same day, August 17, the whole effective force of Von Steinmetz and Frederick Charles reached the Verdun and Etain roads; and by dawn of August 18 there were probably 250,000 Germans in line in front of Bazaine's chosen position. The plan of battle, [illegible], was to amuse the left and center of Bazaine along the Verdun road with three corps (Second, Seventh, and Eighth), while five others (Third, Ninth, Tenth, Twelfth, and King's Guards) made a grand flanking movement north and west of Gravelotte, and forced the French right back toward Metz. Though begun at daylight on August 18, the turning movement was not completed until noon, and it was one o'clock before the battle opened with vigor. The extreme right of the French was strongly posted at a hamlet called St. Privat, and it was not until late in the afternoon that this was carried, after repeated assaults by the Guards. Immediately thereafter the corps attacking the French center carried the outskirts of Gravelotte, and there soon after occurred one of the most murderous contests ever witnessed. Every direct assault on the fatal heights beyond the town failed, and it was not until the forces which had carried St. Privat pushed forward, and, by flanking, forced the French from their first line of works, that the Germans attacking Gravelotte, found a foothold on the heights. When, at last, the French retired slowly and sullenly under cover of the fortifications of Metz, it was eight o'clock at night, and only the burning villages and farm houses lit up the terrible scene. In this desperate battle the French losses are said to have been 20,000 men, while the Germans must have lost at least one fifth more. The advantages otherwise were indisputably with the Germans. Bazaine was hopelessly shut up in Metz. His army could not hope to escape without immense sacrifices. Remaining, it had no alternative but surrender, unless a relieving army came to its aid. Apparently this was impossible; but MacMahon, who, no longer pursued by the Crown Prince, had reached Chalons, attempted to go to Bazaine's aid, and, as we have now to relate, the crowning disaster of the campaign befel him.

THE SEDAN CAMPAIGN.

When Marshal MacMahon, on reaching Nancy on August 12, found the advanced columns of the Prussian Crown Prince still interposed between him and Bazaine, he instantly continued his retreat to Chalons, where the highways from the Vosges converge and form the magnificent Marne Valley that leads through the Champagne country to Paris. He had no communication at this time with Bazaine, but either commander seems to have considered, as indeed no man familiar with the topography of the country could fail to comprehend, that the retreat was to be made to Chalons. But when MacMahon reached Chalons, on August 16, Bazaine was vainly struggling at Mars la Tour, and before MacMahon's Corps could be reorganized and united with the Sixth of Canrobert, the Seventh of Douay, brought hastily from Belfort, and the newly formed Twelfth of Le Brun (in all not less than 150,000 men), Bazaine had been beaten at Gravelotte. Meantime the Prussian Crown Prince's army had halted about Nancy to await the issue of the struggle before Metz, or to take part in it if necessary. The fate of Bazaine was no sooner decided by the victory of August 18 than the Crown Prince, joined by the King and by Von Moltke, the directing genius of the campaign, set his columns in renewed pursuit of MacMahon. A fourth army, hastily detached from the forces of Frederick Charles and Von Steinmetz, was organized and intrusted (with that wise and subtle diplomacy which in its smallest matters granted concessions to the South German allies) to the command of the Saxon Crown Prince, with orders to move on the right flank of the main army of the Prussians. Thus to the destruction of MacMahon not less than 250,000 men were marched with fatal promptness on August 23. Five days later the Prussian was beyond the Meuse and at Bar le Duc, on the right flank of Chalons; while the Saxon approach of Verdun in the immediate front of MacMahon's position. On the morning of August 23, while Von Moltke was yet at his breakfast, the assurance of what he had suspected and perhaps hoped, came to him in positive information that MacMahon, badly counseled in his own camp, or insanely directed by the Regency at Paris, had marched, three days before, to the relief of Bazaine. Orders for pursuit were issued before the meal was finished, and before the day was ended the Prussian Crown Prince's army had abandoned the march upon Paris, and plunged into the Forest of Argonne (where three-quarters of a century before, the first German invasion had been halted by the inspired rabble of Dumouriez), with the purpose of striking in flank the columns of MacMahon then crossing the northern skirts of the forest.

By whom MacMahon's march was planned is now of little consequence. Napoleon in his Apology—as if there could be any apology for such failures and crimes as his—attributes it to the Regency. It offered but slight advantages if successful; it promised vast difficulties of execution, and threatened grave disasters if it failed. The concentration of [illegible] French columns at Metz, Thionville, or indeed at any practical point east of the Meuse, and near the Belgian border, was a result not wholly desirable, for the united forces would still be overmatched in numbers and confined [illegible] to a narrow district of unproductive country. If the concentration should not be completed the army of MacMahon would be confronted in the same disadvantageous locality by a largely superior force, while Bazaine would remain hemmed in Metz. During the long march which the scheme entailed, MacMahon's flank would be exposed to frequent attack. There was little reason to hope that the movement could be long masked from cavalry which had shown such enterprise as that of the enemy, or that the Germans, who had already displayed the utmost decision and resolution in former operations, would hesitate to pursue now.

But if the scheme was undisputably unwise, extravagant, and foolhardy, what must be said of its tardy and inert execution! The false strategy may have been inspired at Paris; only MacMahon and Napoleon can be held responsible for the slow marches! The French army was unquestionably cumbersome and unwieldy—undisciplined, disorganized, and ill-appointed—but these facts, while affording positive reasons why the campaign should [illegible] only a few miles beyond [illegible] the Argonne forests. If the plan of campaign was without excuse, the manner of its execution was unpardonable. The position in which MacMahon [illegible] Attigny, and [illegible] the Meuse and of the Prussian Crown Prince [illegible] of that river moving rapidly north, struck MacMahon's scattered columns in flank, and drove them violently back in hasty retreat by the several roads which, leading northward, converged at Sedan, an old defense of the Meuse and the Belgian border.

The confusion of this retreat extenuates in some degree the weak defense of Sedan which followed. The French army reached Sedan in a state of complete demoralization, and it is probable that an attack on the following day (August 31) would have resulted in MacMahon's dispersal and flight across the Belgian frontier. But the German commander had resolved upon a plan for the capture of MacMahon's whole army—a design as daring in conception as it subsequently proved admirable in execution; and the day and night of the 31st were employed in the movements necessary to its success. Those hours, during which only severe skirmishing ensued, were vigorously employed by MacMahon in disposing his army for battle, and he was thus enabled to make a show of resistance when the battle opened at daylight on September 1.

The plan of Von Moltke contemplated the actual development of the entire French army. The immense force of the Germans enabled Von Moltke to divide his armies, one posted to the east, the other to the west of Sedan, with orders to fight their way to a junction north of the city, and on the best lines of retreat of the French. The incidents of this struggle are not numerous. The French were everywhere overpowered, and it was only high-noon when the Germans had carried the heights north of Sedan and planted their artillery there. It was not yet one o'clock in the afternoon when the French, beaten at every point, huddled in confused, demoralized mass, lay in Sedan at the mercy of the guns with which the Germans at once opened a crushing bombardment. "Hell was let loose in Sedan," said one reporter of the terrible scene which followed. Discipline, there was none; all organization was destroyed; officers despaired and soldiers grew mutinous. At length a white flag displayed on the ramparts brought an end to the bombardment, but not to the fury, the rage, the despair of the shattered, humiliated army. The night of riot which followed the surrender has been described as more painful than the day of terror and confusion which led to it. Sedan was in a double sense the crowning disgrace of the French army, for it brought not only defeat but demoralization. In impotent rage the soldiers, with that impatient cry of "treachery," with which the French have ever sought to excuse their defeats, broke and trampled their weapons under foot, and officers protested in written formula against the act of capitulation, as if they seriously thought it could have been avoided. Nevertheless a few regiments and guns were all that were required to guard and conduct the disorganized prisoners to their camps of confinement.

Never before in the annals of war had the surrender of an army of 125,000 men and 400 guns been recorded as the result of a few hours' fighting. Such, however, were the fruits of the victory at Sedan. The Emperor Napoleon, after having fled from Metz, to hang like an incubus on skirts of MacMahon's column, retarding its march with a more than regal train of cumbersome wagons, tendered to the conquered King, in language which, coming from him, read like mock-heroics, the sword he had never drawn on the field of battle. MacMahon wounded, all his corps, division, and brigade commanders surrendered [illegible] at discretion. And all this sacrifice followed a battle so badly directed that a loss of only 6,000 men was inflicted on the assailing enemy.

Nor was this capture of men and material all the gain to the Germans. With Bazaine closely shut in at Metz—his vain efforts of August 31 and [illegible] had already revealed how utterly hopeless his position was—and MacMahon annihilated, nothing remained to oppose the march upon Paris save Vinoy's corps of Mobiles—compared to the Crown Prince's armies an "awkward squad"—or to retard it save the few weak fortresses which [illegible] the Campaign's route. The fate of MacMahon's army, which alone had [illegible] Paris [illegible] a possibility, and its [illegible] became the first purpose of the Germans.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 14, 1871.

WITH all their boasted anticipations of future prosperity, the churches of the present, have to confess that they fill the prophetic description of their condition in the last days. For instance. At a late meeting in London to consider the perilous condition of the church of England, Dr. McNeile "called upon the Dissenters for their sympathies and their prayers in this the hour of her crisis." An eminent layman followed, who affirmed that the question now was not, "Whether they were THE CHURCH of Christ, but the question was, Whether they were A Church of Christ at all!" The Rev. Mr. Ryle said:

"I cannot help remarking that it is high time to look the situation fairly in the face, and seriously consider whether we are ready to meet the coming hurricane. The barometer is rapidly going down. The horizon grows black on every side. Are we prepared for the tremendous stuggle for life or death, which may be very near us? Is the good old ship in proper trim? I assert most unhesitatingly that she is not. Unless we throw overboard a great deal of useless lumber we shall infallibly go down. Of all bodies within the Church of England, at this moment, there is none so thoroughly asleep as the evangelical body. The spirit of slumber and self-satisfaction is wide-spread and profound. May God in his mercy awaken us before it is too late."

—And what Mr. Ryle says of his is to a greater or less extent true of all. "Thoroughly asleep" on the true issues of the day and age; with little or no idea of the impending return of her Lord; knowing, indeed, no reason why he should or need come; subjected to continual encroachments from the world; and quite ready to be taken by surprise at the appearance of her Lord. "Let us not sleep as do others, but watch and be sober."

Advent Times Sermons. No. 6.

"We look for the Savior." (Phil. 3: 20.)

Our text implies a party waiting and a party coming. Nor can we possibly mistake who are the waiting ones, or or who are expected to come. We (Paul and all who indulge his hope,) are waiting; and the Savior, our Lord Jesus Christ is coming. How strange that the idea should ever have obtained generally that instead of Paul's statement being a clear presentation of correct doctrine, the fact is that the Savior is looking for his people to come to him; that he is waiting, rather than they!

It is absurd to say that Paul passed over the intermediate state, during which his disembodied people are in his presence, and referred to the resurrection and judgment, many ages away. Lovers and friends do not talk that way. When they are parted, they anticipate not a meeting they may expect on a special occasion far in the dim future, but their thoughts turn to the very next meeting. And this is the key to the frequent references to the second advent by the apostolic church: it was to be their first meeting, after separation, with their Savior and their friends who had fallen asleep in him. (1 Thes. 4.) If they had entertained the present popular theology, it would have operated upon them precisely as it does upon the church of the present: it would have taken off the edge from all the promises of Jesus' return, and set them to talking of death instead of the resurrection. But they never so learned Christ. In their estimation death was an enemy. (1 Cor. 15. Phil. 2: 26-30 etc.) And when they mourned his triumphs, Paul never told them his victims were crowned disembodied immaterial conquerors in heaven or paradise; but that when Jesus came, then they would see both him and them. If they could meet them before that period, it was cruel in Paul not to inform them of so joyful a fact. (1 Thes. 4.)

"Look for the Savior." What else can we do, if we love him? What, love Jesus with all the heart, and not desire to see him at the first possible opportunity? Could anything be more absurd? If we love him, we shall look for him simply for the sake of seeing him.

"Our hope, our salvation, our all."

Besides, we shall look for him on account of what he will bring with him for us. When he comes we shall be made like him. (1 Jno. 3: 2.) Not like him as he was in his humliation; we are (or should be) that now: but we shall be like Jesus glorified! Entrancing thought!

We also look for him that our true position may be manifested. People generally do not believe that we are children of a King. But we are. (Rom. 8: 16.) They have no faith that we are legal heirs to an inheritance better and richer than anything any man, not even excepting Adam, ever saw. But we are. (1 Pet. 1: 3-7; Rom. 8: 18-25; Mat. 5: 5.) Ours is "That land upon whose blissful shore,

There rests no shadow, falls no stain,
Where those who meet shall part no more,
And those long parted meet again."

Very many think that we have got to live forever anyway, and do not mistrust that "Christ is our life," and that when he shall appear, "then" we are to have immortality. But this is the fact. (Col. 3: 4.)

Finally, very few have any idea that if Christ does not come then all the dead are perished, without hope, and when we die we, also, shall pass out of existence forever. But it is even so, Paul being witness. (1 Cor. 15.)

Therefore, seeing all that is permanently good in the future depends on Jesus' coming again, we look for the Savior. And may God, by his Spirit, grant us such a continual lively sense of the importance of the event, and the necessity of preparation for it, that our days may all be spent looking for the Savior. And may his Spirit so dwell in us, conforming us to himself that our general conduct, as well as our profession, may testify that we look for him.

"A Few Tons of Earth."

A friend sends us the following literary effort of a Free will Baptist minister in Gorham, Me., with a request that we should notice it. We have concluded to give it to our readers, not doubting it will amuse them as it has us. We have no words to express our appreciation of the breadth of intellect and depth of thought that can see in mankind, "only a few tons of earth," unless there is in man, a superadded immaterial, immortal entity, "possessing neither length breadth or thickness, interior or exterior, extension or weight." But hear him:

A FEW TONS OF EARTH.

In the Star of May 26, "Friend of Truth" objects to what he terms ridicule, but this seeming ridicule is but solid argument against a ridiculous error. If that error when fairly stated appears ridiculous, my logic is not in fault. The brother does not appear to question the statement that all Christ came to save was some tons of earth, but he thinks there will be many, instead of "few tons" saved. If there be but "few saved," then of the gross weight of the whole race there will be but few tons of earthy matter saved; or, when the gross weight of the saints is taken in comparison with the gross weight of the entire globe, the quantity will be still smaller.

How strange that man, the image of his God,
Should think himself to be naught but a clod!
Without immortal, animating soul,
Or aught more noble than the asses foal,
Save this, his legs are two while jack has four,
And of the two, man thinks he knows the more,
But common dust the frames of each compose;
Breathe the same air, alike in death repose.
Bold Atheism might not blush to own
So foul a creed or with the jack lie down;

But low indeed the mind of man must sink
When Christian souls such slimy waters drink.
But when he wrests God's word in efforts vain
Himself a beast to prove, and logic strains
To carry such a point, then reason finds
No sure relief for such disordered minds.
When reason fails, zeal tries to make amends;
When helm is gone, then, driven by the winds
On fatal rock, your ship becomes a wreck,
Though firmly built and stout from keel to deck.
Zeal like the wind may always fill the sail
When reason guides the helm safe blows the gale.

The Christian sects on this one point agree—
Man ate the fruit of the forbidden tree,
And then to save him from an awful fate
The Son of God came down from heavenly state,
Endured the cross, and shed his precious blood
To rescue man, and bring him back to God.
But if like beasts man was but changing dust
Would heaven pay such a price to save the lost
Lost what? Lost dust, of course, lost clay,
No more nor less than this, the vile worms prey.
Were man but dust the resurrection morn
As well could bring up nations never born;
If dust were all, then other dust might rise
To life, without a bleeding sacrifice.

'Tis but a spirit that that birth can know
That must be known if saved from endless wo,
The fallen spirit bound with carnal chains,
By grace is freed, its usurped throne regains;
The flesh,—old Adam,—now no longer rules,
But spirit, grace empowered, the flesh controls.
If flesh is all that constitutes the man,
Make sense of gospel truth in case you can.
You might as well preach gospel to your swine
As to the man, if no dividing line
Save form and bristles separates the two;
If all is flesh, grace has no more to do.

If flesh is all of man, then Paul was blind
To think that body being left behind
His spirit might to the third heavens rise
And see those things unseen by mortal eyes,
And serious, too, was his mistake indeed,
To wish to be from his vile body freed
That he might all his Savior's glories see,
When he, in fact, would only cease to be.

"Who can answer sneers?" And are they worth answering when those who indulge them recklessly pervert truth and facts. Here is a Christian minister who professes he can see no difference between a hog and man, save form and bristles, unless the man has an immortal soul! Can he see any difference between a hog and horse, save form and bristles? And because the horse has superior qualities and intelligence, does he conclude that the horse has an immortal spirit, too? And if not, why not? And why does he pervert Scripture, to make Paul say he would be free from his "vile body," when what he did desire was, that Jesus should change his body, at the second advent. Is there not "a more excellent way" than this? We think so. Meanwhile here are a few thoughts, which if not so good "rhyme" are better "reason" than those quoted above.

How strange that man, the image of that God
Whose word declares he made him from the clod,
Should still his Maker's written word deny,
And say 'twas God, not Satan, told the lie.
God says he made the man a living soul
From dust, with breath to animate the whole.
Dominion him he gave o'er all the earth,
And 'living souls' which it had given birth,
Even beast and fish, and fowl and things that
For every one God calls 'a living soul;' [crawl,
And common dust the frames of each compose,
One breath have they, alike in death repose.

"Well, says the'ologian, 'if that's the fact,
The man you've made is no better than a jack '
To me, it's clear, he's not above the swine,
'Twixt him and them there's no dividing line
Save "form and bristles," unless it be An immaterial, immortal soul has he.

'Tis true your statements in the word I read,
But I should 'blush to own so foul a creed.'
A doctrine mine, more worthy the most High—
My soul's immortal, and can never die!

How far from truth the teacher's mind has erred,
When Satan's lie to God's truth is preferred;
When he will wrest God's word, in effort vain,
Himself a God to prove, and logic strain
To show what God has said "shall surely die,"
In spite of him has immortality. [call
On "vain philosophy," and "science false" they
And trust them 'spite the warnings of a Paul.
And puffed with knowledge of the earthly cast,
Make "reason" steer when fiercely blows the blast.
Far better take the Scriptures for a guide
Than with "false science" be so close allied.

We care not what the warring sects may preach
The question is, What do the Scriptures teach.
They tell, 'tis true of fallen man's estate,
And how God's Son came down to avert their fate.
But nowhere say, that immortal souls to save
From endless wo, he passed into the grave.
Why o'er his mission should there be such strife,
When HE declares. "I CAME TO GIVE MAN LIFE!"
Sects may discourse of joy or endless wo,
"Immortal souls" must joy or undergo;
But in God's Book (and I have searched the whole,)
Not once is found that phrase, "immortal soul."

But with one thought let me your mind refresh,
I don't believe live man is only "flesh."
A figment that of theologian's brain,
That by deceit his cause he may maintain.
Mere "flesh" was Adam, until first he knew
The animating blast, God in his nostrils blew·
But he who in this man sees naught but soil,
In Raphael's gems would find but "paint and oil."
Angelo's statues would but "chunks of marble" [be,
In house of brick, he only "clay" could see.
Such reasoning to decency must give offence,
And shows a lack of sober common-sense.

The Approaching Surprise.

And first, it may be asked, how was it that the disciples generally were taken by surprise at the mention of a crucified Messiah, and were so ignorant of the truth respecting his resurrection from the dead? They, in common with the Jews of our Lord's day, had fallen into a very grievous error, which arose from a misinterpretation of the prophetic Scriptures. All the prophecies which referred to the Messiah's second coming they applied to his first. The predictions of his kingly glory, of his setting on the throne of David, and reigning over the house of Israel for ever—the fulfillment of these, and similar other prophecies was expected at his first advent instead of his second, to which, in truth, they entirely refer. Hence when our Lord spoke to them about his suffering, and death, and resurrection, they were perplexed and confounded. "They questioned within themselves what this rising again from the dead should mean." "We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth for ever, how sayest thou that the Son of man must be lifted up? Who is this Son of man?" Hence the surprise and unbelief of the disciples in the upper room at Jerusalem, when the intelligence of his resurrection was announced. And yet the Bible was unmistakably clear on the point. The 53d chapter of Isaiah spoke all through of humiliation, the sufferings, and death of the Savior. Their mistake should be a warning to many even now, who have fallen into an equally dangerous error? How many are spiritualizing those prophecies which speak of our Lord's personal appearance on earth a second time? How many are expecting a spiritual millennium before Christ comes? Jerusalem means the Church! The coming of the Lord Jesus means a universal outpouring of the Spirit! Alas for such dangerous and unscriptural notions! A millennium before the Lord comes in person to accomplish it, is nowhere countenanced in God's Word. The error of the Jews in misinterpreting prophecy should be ou beacon in these last days. The advent of a Messiah that was to be crucified was not a greater surprise to them, than the advent of a personal Savior to reign over the world would be to many in our own time.—F. Whitfield in Episcopalian.

"Preach the Gospel and Let Other Denominations Alone."

What may we preach? Not "doctrinal sermons," respond a thousand voices. "Just preach the gospel and let others alone." I may oppose Mormonism before an audience that are anti-Mormon; I may oppose Catholicism before a Protestant audience; I may oppose Universalism before a Methodist audience, or Methodism before a Universalist audience; all this, and yet no one suspects me of preaching doctrinal sermons. But let these sermons be delivered in the presence of those that believe the things opposed in the sermons, then I am doctrinal. "Just running down other denominations, as though nobody was right but himself."

One thing is quite evident; if a man will be popular, he must not preach doctrinally. The primitive Christians were constant in their attendance upon the apostles' doctrine, and Paul exhorts Timothy: "Till I come, give attention to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine." But the semi-christianity, make-belief piety of the present time, delights itself in the thing that it calls charity, but not in the truth. Doctrine is teaching. Hence, a sermon that does not contain doctrine, does not contain teaching. A sermon that does not contain teaching, does not contain thought. We may say of a sermon, then, that has no doctrine in it, what Paul said of an idol: "It is nothing at all." And this is the thing that pleases the masses of this wicked and adulterous generation. They want sound—PURE AND UNADULTERATED SOUND.—D. R. D. in Christian.

ON the evening of the 31st ult., Rev. E. O. Haven, D. D., LL. D., (we believe this is all,) lectured in Philadelphia on the following profound subject: "Soul a Positive Entity." Nothing clearer, nothing. Of course "Soul is a positive entity." Let him who doubts it do so at his peril. We infer the Rev. Dr. means soul in general—the great universal soul. This is "positive entity," as sure as day and night. For how could it be anything else? Is it not clear that if it be not that—well, who could tell what it is? O! yes! it is certain and fixed that "Soul is positive entity." There is simply no getting around it.

But, now, if one begins to deal with soul in particular, or with particular souls, things are not so clear. The learned Dr. could not have made out so good an argument in favor of particular souls, as he doubtless did for soul. For while, as we have already seen, it is sure that "Soul is positive entity," it is just as certain, at least so our observation goes, that many a particular soul is a "positive non-entity." And this is queer. The Dr.'s subject runs into "ways that are dark" in it corollaries.—Christian Radial.

GATHERED FRAGMENTS.

Prize the Word of God by the worth of it, that you may not come to prize it by the want of it.

When we shall live in that day we shall look with wonder on one another and say, "Shame! that we were not of better cheer, and more joyful to trust Christ, and to endure the cross, and all tribulations and persecutions, since this glory is so great."—Luther.

"The steps of faith
Fall on the seeming void, and find
The rock beneath."

An opportunity is like a favoring breeze, springing around a sailing vessel. If the sails be all set the ship is wafted onward to its port. If the sailors are asleep or ashore, the breeze may die again, and when they would go on they cannot; their vessel stands "as idle as a painted ship upon a painted ocean."

POPISH MORALITY.—The doctrines which Popery still inculcates and enforces when and where she is able to do so. "Those are not to be called oaths but rather perjuries which are taken contrary to ecclesiastical utility." —(Third Council of Lateran) "They who deny that heretics are to be put to death, ought much rather to deny that thieves, much rather that murderers, ought to be put to death; for heretics are so much the more pernicious than thieves and murderers, as it is a greater crime to steal and slay the souls of men than their bodies."—Maldonatus, Maynooth Standard.

A WORD OF THANKS

I would render a tribute of praise to-day,
To the bountiful Author of good,
For the manifold blessings he strews in my way;
Lest I should be tempted to wander astray,
And neglect to love as I should.

Especially now would I praise his dear name,
For the recent and signal display
Of rich grace in giving me vigor again,
The unsearchable riches of Christ to proclaim,
Thus cheating the grave of its prey.

Another strong reason exists in my mind
For praising and thanking the Lord,
In the undeserved favor he gave me to find,
By providing me friends so attentive and kind,
When helpless, and sick, and abroad.

I pray that the blessing of heaven may fall
In large measure on them where they be,
That Christ will not fail to reward one and all,
Nor suffer disaster a soul to befall,
But assure each—"Ye have done it to Me."

THY KINGDOM COME.

Thy kingdom come! 'tis the desire
Of all thy faithful followers here;
With longing hearts we watch and pray,
In wait for that auspicious day.

Thy kingdom come, when all thy slain
Shall be released from death's domain
The living saints from sin set free;
All changed to immortality.

Thy kingdom come, when earth shall rise
To more than pristine Paradise;
When life's fair fruits again shall grow,
And its pelucid waters flow.

Thy kingdom come, when wars shall cease,
And all mankind shall be at peace,
And love extend from shore to shore,
And cruel pride appears no more.

Thy kingdom come, when David's heir
The sparkling diadem shall wear,
His scepter sway from zone to zone,
And all his righteousness shall own.

Thy kingdom come, when Israel's sons,
The remnant, God's own chosen ones,
Beneath Messiah's peaceful reign,
The ancient promised land obtain.

Thy kingdom come, when Satan's power
And influence are felt no more;
When sin, and death, and every stain
Caused by the fall no more remain.

Dear Savior when that day shall come,
And all thy saints are gathered home
To share the honors of their King,
May I be there, thy praise to sing.

The End.

The first discourse I ever heard on the destruction of the wicked, was in the large tent, in the city of Cincinnati, by Br. Charles Fitch, in 1843. He stated that at the coming of Christ, the wicked would be "punished with everlasting destruction" and remain as ashes under the feet of the righteous for one thousand years, and then be resurrected. I took occasion to inquire of this devoted man of God whether I understood him correctly; that destruction in the sense he stated meant extinction or extirpation. He answered in the affirmative. I was searching for light, for truth. My inquiry was, how; after final extirpation they could possibly be susceptible of a resurrection. He, then, in his calm, benign manner, stated that he would investigate the matter. He did so, and, on board of the steamer, on our way to Pittsburg, he came to me and stated: that the judgment of God upon the wicked at Christ's second appearing was final. This orginated an investigation in my mind with regard to the work that is to be accomplished at the second appearing of our Lord. Whether it is to be final—one burning day, or two; or whether there is to be one thousand years between the resurrection of the two classes.

I must say that having been a firm believer in the above period, between the resurections, I clung with great tenacity to what has been to me as a settled fact, and defended as such with all the ability I was capable of bringing to bear in that direction.

There were, however, some plain declarations that I had passed over prevous to that time; not intentionally; but now, I perceived, they were insunarable obstacles to my favorite theory. Permit me to state some of them. I found in Dan. 1, 2. that both classes were awakened at the same time from the dust of the earth. This is harmonious with John 28, 29—"THE HOUR is coming in the which ALL that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth." Both classes are included, and Christ corroborates the testimony of the prophet.

The testimony of the apostle (Acts 17:37): "He hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world." This deeply interested me; for I did, and do now understand the expression. "The world," in the same sense as in John 3: 16—"so loved the world." "It certainly is expressive of all the universal brotherhood of mankind; and just as certain in the one case as in the other.

To this day all are destined for their rewards. To reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished," is an inspired declaration. This day of judgment is at Christ's appearing "Who shall judge the QUICK [living] and THE DEAD AT HIS APPEARING, and his kingdom." This expression—"The quick and the dead" I accept in precisely the same sense as in the phrase—all that are in their graves," and as that in Dan. 12 all are included.

The language of the Revelation (ch. 10: 18) seems expressive of the same fact. "Thy WRATH IS COME and THE TIME OF THE DEAD that they should be judged, and thou should'st give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that bear his name, small and great: and shouldest destroy those which destroy (or corrupt) the earth. Thus we perceive that God's wrath comes upon the wicked AT "the TIME OF THE DEAD," and the time of the dead is at the sounding of the seventh trumpet, which occurs next in the symbolic arrangement. His wrath terminates in their destruction.

Concerning this appointed day. Peter declares that "the heavens and the earth, which are now, are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men. (2 Pet. 3,) I once thought that, probably, this day might be in extent a thousand years, from the expression in v. 8. But the plain, positive language of our Lord, as recorded by Luke (ch. 17: 29), precludes the possibility of any such idea in the mind of the apostle. Please notice. "But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed THEM ALL. EVEN THUS SHALL IT BE IN THE DAY when the Son of man is revealed." Doubtless the mercy of God will interpose in the extirpation of those unfortunate creatures. It now appears to my mind that the words of Zephaniah (ch. 1: 18) are explicit upon this point. After the prophet describes the terror of that day, he then declares the Lord "shall make even a speedy riddance of all that dwell in the land," and doubtless such is the purpose of uncreated Love and Mercy.

The prophet Malachi declares that in that day that shall burn "as an oven," "ALL the proud, yea and ALL that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall LEAVE THEM NEITHER ROOT NOR BRANCH." In reading, and re-reading this fearful malediction, I was forced to the conclusion, that "all the proud" and "all that do wickedly" are expressive of all: and so I now believe. And their being burned up and LEFT NEITHER ROOT NOR BRANCH, is to my mind conclusive that the day that cometh will witness the execution of the prophet's inspired declaration, and not a root nor branch be left to germinate. In language of the Psalmist "The transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off." (Ps. 37: 38.) In the language of Prof. Murdocks translation of the Syriac (Mat. 3:12): "He will MAKE CLEAN his threshing floor. The wheat he will gather into his storehouse; and the chaff he will burn with fire not extinguished" (Margin—"fire suffered to burn on and consume what is in it." Truly, when ALL the proud and ALL the wicked are consumed, left neither root nor branch, the threshing floor—the earth—will be clean; nor will Satan, Gog or Magog ever defile it.

EVERY MAN REWARDED AT CHRIST'S SECOND COMING.

"The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and THEN he shall reward EVERY MAN according to his works" (Mat. 16: 27.) We read (Heb. 2: 9) that Jesus tasted death "for every man." I consider the one phrase as universal as the other. The entire human family is included; and thus the reward will be universal. I can draw no other conclusion. The same plain fact is set forth in the parable of the the tares and the wheat. "The harvest is the end of the world," and, without doubt, it will be the end of all the proud, all the wicked, all the tares. At the smiting of the great symbolic image it is declared—"Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, BROKEN TO PIECES TOGETHER, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floor: and the wind carried them away, that NO PLACE was found for them." It does seem to me that universal extirpation cannot be made plainer then these words of the prophet express it.

With all the above conclusive testimony I have arrived at this conclusion. It is safe, entirely so, to believe the plain teaching of God's word in preference to any interpretation of the allegorical, especially, of the 20th Revelation. For me to believe that one thousand years shall intervene between the resurrection of the two classes is to disbelieve what is plainly taught in so many instances, as above cited. Whatever is designed to be revealed in Rev. 20, it is not intended to ignore the simple truths as above expressed.

Permit me to state, that the Revelator after the thousand years had transpired, declares: "And I saw the the dead small and great stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and THE DEAD were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it: and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them and they were judged EVERY MAN ACCORDING TO THEIR WORKS."

I will now invite you to notice this judgment scene, AFTER the thousand years have been fulfilled, in connection with these plain declarations such as, "who shall judge the quick and the dead AT his appearing, and his kingdom." Now it is certain from the apostle's testimony that the judgment positively takes place at Christ's second appearing. Therefore it is not one thousand years afterwards. Again, please notice the words of Jesus: "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of the Father with his angels: AND THEN he shall reward EVERY MAN according to his works."

Dear friends, I have not written for controversy, but to set forth in as plain and brief a manner as my ability will allow me, my reason for renouncing what I now consider an error: I once believed the thousand year period, without doubt, to be yet future. Plain testimony now compels me after years of careful investigation, to place it, without doubt, in the past. My belief is that when the prediction of Matt. 25: 37 and onward is fulfilled, and Christ shall sit upon the throne of his glory, "and pass judgment upon ALL NATIONS, it will be final, and as he declares (v. 46), "these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the rightous into life eternal."

I can see but ONE burning day, that will renovate the earth, and the words of Is. 62: 4 will be fulfilled. "And thy land shall be married." Never again will Satan, Gog, or Magog, be allowed by the infinitely pure and holy One to tread the bosom of the pure and holy sanctuary under their foul polluting feet. "Thy land shall be married." When I consider the purity of the new heavens, the new earth, the new Jerusalem; the purity of the inhabitants, the bond of union as set forth in the marriage vow, I feel certain of earth's perpetual purity after the Lord is "revealed from heaven in flaming fire."

The Scriptures, in my humble opinion, teach but one burning day, and that at Christ's appearing. Then the prayer of David will be answered. "Let the sinners be consumed OUT OF THE EARTH, and let the wicked BE NO MORE." "Bless thou the Lord, O my soul. Praise ye the Lord." (Ps. 104: 35.) Then shall be fulfilled, the prediction (Dan. 7: 14)—"Then shall the sanctuary BE CLEANSED," then the wicked will be destroyed. Left "neither root nor branch." No heterogeneous masses to appear on the new earth; no fiery deluge cast in furious indignation upon the placid bosom of Edenic purity, No, no!

Then will be consummated the vision of the seer of Patmos. "And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them heard I saying, Blessing and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb FOR EVER AND EVER." Amen and Amen. "Even so, come for Jesus," and "let the wickedness of the wicked COME TO AN END!"

Oppositions of Science. Falsely So-Called. (1 Tim. 6 : 20.)

First, I would call attention to the whole of 1 Tim. ch. 6, as a basis of thought, and especially to vv. 20, 21: "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so-called; which some professing, have erred concerning the faith." It is admitted, I suppose, by Christians generally, that Paul was a learned man, as he declares, brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, "and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers." Also, as an inspired man, he received visions and revelations of the Lord. We will do well then to bear with him a little in his folly, as he termed it, in this confidence of boasting of his knowledge and experience, and mark well the assertions, and heed the advice of such as Paul, the aged.

From the sentence—"Oppositions of science, falsely so-called," I conclude that Paul meant either that there was a false science, or false conclusions or deductions from true science, or perhaps both, which lead to oppositions, as I understand it, to what Paul had taught and written. In this chapter are some things mentioned to Timothy, which I will refer to, such as "Godliness with contentment is great gain." "The love of money is the root of all evil," etc., etc. "But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, faith, love, patience, meekness." "I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Jesus Christ, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession, that thou keep this commandment, without spot, unrebukeable until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, which in his times he shall show who is the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light; which no [mortal] man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see; to whom be honor and power everlasting."

From these and other charges of Paul we should be led to regard any "so-called" science teaching in opposition to any of the instructions laid down by Paul for Christians to observe and follow, as a false science, or a false conclusion of science. As an illustration, take the proposition taught by Paul that God "only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto," and compare it with the assertion of some, that man is naturally immortal, and will not cease to exist under any circumstances. This assertion is based upon the ground of science, and I conclude that either their so-called science, or their conclusion is false. I lately heard a lecturer on Phrenology publicly declare that man was immortal, and always would be so; and that, too, after he had publicly shown that in the brain (a material substance) was the seat of thought and life, but yet jumped at the conclusion (very unscientifically I thought) that thought and life must continue after the organism by which thought was produced, was destroyed by death.

Thus was presented to my mind a false science or a false conclusion. Believing as I do that the study of the brain and development of the organs of the head may properly be called science, yet my belief in this knowledge, called science, only assists and assures me to believe the word of God. that man is mortal (Job 4: 17; 3: 17–19; and ch. 14); and that as thought. life, and the various faculties and powers of mind and body are contingent upon organism, or rather the result of organization and breath of life, so, when the breath of life is dissipated, and the body returns to the dust, we certainly cease to exist, or to exercise any of the faculties of mind or body: and according to the laws of science, it would be folly to suppose any action resulting without a cause or means of action.

We do well to take heed to ourselves as to how we receive any doctrine or science not corroborated by the Word. The Savior said in his prayer to the Father, "Thy Word is truth." Consequently whatever is taught therein, whether of doctrine or science, we must believe is true doctrine, and true science; and true science cannot conflict with the word of God, when both are properly understood and delineated. But when I hear so-called scientific men make declarations unsupported by the word of truth, and see professors of Christianity and of "the faith once delivered to the saints," eager to hear and enticed, as I fear, by the oratorical powers, and eloquence, and witticisms of the speaker, to the neglect of a careful examination by the light of truth (the word of God), of the so-called sciences and professed knowledge of the day, I would refer them to the following Scriptures, as pointing out some of the results of these "profane and vain babblings," as Paul terms them. "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the sentiments of the world, and not after Christ." (Col. 2: 8.) "That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." (1 Cor. 2: 5.) "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to declare." (Eph. 4: 14.)

In conclusion, are not the manifestations of the signs of the times, verifying the predictions of Paul in 2 Tim. 4: 3–4? "For the time will come, when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers; having itching ears [in and out of the church]; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." Let us, therefore, watch in all things, for we have the assurance by the word of truth, that life and immortality are only brought to light through the gospel.

Toulon, Ill. H. W.

"Occupy Till I Come."

Christ, before leaving his church, to finish the atonement in the Most Holy place of God's tabernacle, "heaven itself," represented that event and his subsequent relationship to them by a parable of a nobleman who, when going away to receive, or more plainly speaking, to secure a kingdom, left talents in the hands of his servants to use for him while absent, saying, use, or "Occupy till I return." They were thus put in trust with their Lord's substance, to do his work in his absence. He did not give to all alike, but "to every man according to his several ability." So that none were burdened, nor did any lack; but in using it all were required of alike, that is, each was to double his money. The five must become ten, and the two must be four; and one, two. Thus his way is equal, requiring only in proportion as he has given.

But this is to represent spiritual things. Christ has left his work in our hands while he is away. He has put means into our hands to accomplish it, and expects us to "occupy," each "according to his several ability." The great work and mission of Christ is to save men by their reconciliation to God, and this is left for us to do. Thus Paul breaks forth—"We beseech you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."

Now to each is committed a part in this great work; but all have not the same things to do, have not the same office; and yet the one is as essential in his place as the other. All cannot teach or prophesy, or be leaders in the work, but they may assist, each according to his or her several ability. To illustrate. When Israel fought with Amalek near the waters of Meribah, while Moses held up the rod Israel prevailed, but when he lowered it to rest his weary arms, Amalek prevailed. So Aaron and Hur came to his help, and, one on each side, held up his hands. Their strength thus combined, the rod was held up, and so Israel prevailed.

Now this is for our instruction. Some like Moses are trying to hold up the truth of God in this last generation, but many feel their "hands grow heavy" and the truth falters and lags, while wickedness and error prevail, for the want of Aarons and Hurs to stay up their overburdened hands. Who will come to their help? You are not required to take the rod from them and hold it up, but to aid them by making it more easy, with such things as God has given you. "But I have not the talent to preach; what can I do?" You can do something; for all have one talent, if no more. Can a soldier stand on guard, or in the forefront doing battle day in and out, and furnish his own provision? Must he leave his post to go and forage? How shall he provide for his own household, and not deny the faith, and so be worse than an infidel, while holding up the truth, if you do not do it for him? Can "a man go to war at his own charges?" Who shall "muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn?" Shall he not be permitted to eat as he treads?

Oh! how few are crying—"The hour of his judgment is come!" And that few, how trammeled. O ye who claim but one talent, what are you doing with it? Come up, Hur and Aaron like, and stay the hands of those fellow-servants who labor in word and doctrine, and so, unitedly, more time be given to sounding the last note of warning to a perishing world; who, if they believe not, are doomed to swift destruction.

But some may say—"Those who preach must trust in God, and he will provide for them." Yes, and so has God trusted in you, also, to use your talent for him. How are you doing it? You say your talent will not let you take and hold up the rod of truth. Come up then, with your substance, and ease the burden of those who do the other work, and the work will go on, and, to say the least, the Lord will receive his own with usury.

He is about to come. Are we ready for the reckoning? Shall we hear, "Well done! Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things! Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord?" O. D. Gibson.

Peace.

What a great blessing is peace. How free from disturbing thoughts, when the mind is at peace with God. I do so love peace that I feel as if I could not live and enjoy myself at all without that heavenly boon. "Great peace have they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them," says the Psalmist. If we are offended do we have this peace? Says Jesus, "Peace I leave with you." Does he leave it with us! Can we say we have peace when we are fretting about this one's faults and that one's erroneous doctrines, fretting about that which does not concern us? For one, I want peace; and I mean to have it. I love to do the will of God, for that brings peace to our hearts.

How sweet when the rough storms of life press upon us, and wave upon wave dashes around us, threatening to swallow us up, to look right away to Jesus, and tell it all to him, and resting in the Lord, find that peace that none but those that love him can enjoy.

I feel to praise God for this blessed assurance that when peace fills our hearts, we know that Jesus' blessed Spirit has been in our hearts, and that if we will let it reign there we can and shall forever enjoy this blessing. Let no harsh or angry words fall from the lips of any of us; but let our hearts be so full of love, joy and peace, that it will crowd everything else out.

I am glad that nothing can ever enter into that blessed final of the saints that is not peaceable. O Jesus! Ever fill my heart with that peace that passeth all understanding.

A "Charity Fair" in Chicago hired the Young Men's Christian Association Hall a short time since, and knowing there was about as much money in dancing as in any other amusement they could offer the world, they "hitched a ball on the programme," whereat the officers of the Association were greatly scandalized. And they were justly, if not consistently indignant. But we doubt if balls are, intrinsically, more unchristian than church-fairs, as now usually conducted. It is certain that both are a curse to the church. Zion's Herald improves the occasion to utter the following earnest warning:

"Too many Christians, and we regret to say it, some Methodists, attend dances and balls. They send their children, and even go themselves. They are caught by the charity dodge, or the military, or firemen, or Mason, or something they are interested in or identified with, and so comes community with this evil. They send their children even to these midnight schools, which train many for other midnight schools of vice, and for that midnight that knows no morning. These must learn, in some way, and will learn if they persist in this course, that it is full of evil, and only evil, and that continually. They can neither send their children or go themselves without greatly harming, if not ruining both the soul of the children and their own.

Recipe for making Tattlers.—Take a handful of the weed called Run-about, the same quantity of root called Nimble-tongue, a sprig of the herb Backbite, (either before or after dogdays,) a tablespoonful of Dont-you-tell-it, six drachms of Malice, a few drops of Envy, which can be purchased in any quantity at the shops of Miss Tabitha Teatable and Miss Nancy Night-walker. Stir them well together, and simmer them for half an hour over the fire of discontent, kindled with a little Jealousy, then strain it through the rag of Misconception, and cork it up in the bottle of Malevolence and hang it on a skein of Street Yarn; shake it occasionally for a few days, and it will be fit for use. Let a few drops be taken before walking out, and the subject will be enabled to speak all manner of evil and that continually.

Our Young Folks.

The editor thinks that if I would "talk" with his young readers occasionally through his columns, that it would interest them more than he can by a mere selection of items for them each week. To please him, and, I hope, you, I have undertaken the task; and if I succeed, will endeavor to "talk" with you every week. The object of all my talk will be to interest and instruct you. Sometimes I may tell you my own thoughts, and sometimes only call your attention to the thoughts of others.

Did any of you ever go a trouting? I mean by that, fishing for trout. They are a smart, quick, active fish, gaily dressed, and, no doubt, have as good an opinion of themselves among the fishes as young folks have of themselves in their position. Did you ever think that a good lesson for your life could be drawn from trouting experience? But it is so. Br. Hastings put it in rhyming prose quite a while ago, and I will give it in just his words;

THE SPECKLED TROUT.

The speckled trout Goes swimming about: He lives in the brook, And gets caught with a hook. When the fisherman tries Baiting his hooks with flies, Then the trout jumps up high, Bites the hook and has to die. Or if with his hook He drops a worm in the brook, Then the silly trout will bite, And gets jerked into daylight, And flung on the ground to lie, There to pant, and gasp, and die. So they catch the speckled trout, Who don't mind what he is about.

But when any noise is made, Then this trout becomes afraid, And away he swiftly glides, And 'neath the rocks he hides; And so when he runs away, He lives on another day.

Now, my little children, dear, I do hope you will hear, How like little trouts in brooks, Children bite the Devil's hooks, Or are taken in his net, (Children, listen,—don't forget.)

Here the Devil offers one Some mean wicked piece of fun, And he tries to make another Plague and pester his poor brother; And he makes young Tommy feel As if he would like to steal; And he teaches John to swear, Just as if God was not there; And he bids Frank truant play, So from school he runs away; And if Charlie don't take care, He will make him lie and swear. So he teaches all things wrong, And he tries to make them fight, Lie and steal, and strike and bite, And be full of sin and pride, And not heed the heavenly Guide. Thus Satan leads along, With his hooks and lines so strong, That unless men stop and pray, They will never get away.

Now, my children, pray, beware! For if you do not all take care, You will bite the Devil's bait, And find out when too late, That you have swallowed Satan's hook, Like the trout down in the brook. O then, when it's done you'll pray, But you cannot get away.

So if you would not be caught, And to death and sorrow brought, Learn to mind what you are about, And be shy as any trout; And if Satan shows his bait, Fly and shun it, ere too late. For, if you will go and hide By the blessed Savior's side, Then the Lord will with his arm, Fold and keep you from all harm.

—I suspect Br. H. has hid a hook under those pleasant rhymes: but it is'nt barbed, and if it draws you out of a miry pool into clear running water of right and truth, you should be glad. Don't forget to study this lesson. You need it especially, because we are living in perilous times. "That means dangerous times. And though you may not believe it, it is still true that "pleasure" is one of the greatest dangers of young folks now-a-days. I do not mean that you are in danger if you enjoy yourself; but I mean worldly pleasure. That "—— is the spider's web,

To catch you it will try."

You think you can enjoy yourself best to have your own way, and follow after what you desire. But you are mistaken. The best and truest pleasure is found in denying self and pleasing and doing good to others. Try it. Worldly amusements gratify self: true pleasure is something higher than this.

I will not speak of any worldly pleasure in particular, this week, only to caution you to be on your guard. The Devil has many a hook out in these days hid under a gilded bait! Don't bite at any of his baits, I beg of you. Do you want to know how you can tell them? Yes, there is a way. Don't engage in any pleasure that your conscience tells you is wrong. Nor in any that makes others feel bad while you are enjoying yourself. Nor in any that you enjoy at the expense of your health. And, above all, beware of those forbidden by the precept and spirit of the Gospel.

—Now if any of you have any questions to ask on the Bible, or on anything connected with Bible subjects, send them to the office, and I will try to answer them as fast as I can, if I know how. And that there may be no mistake about my getting your letters, observe this rule. Write what you have to say, as plainly as you can. At the head of the sheet write

The Bible Class.

Thy Word is Truth. John 17: 17.

Perhaps few events tend more powerfully to impress the mind with the evidence attending true Christianity, that the fact that many who have sat down to read the Bible to oppose it, have been compelled, by the force of conviction, cordially to embrace its truths. We select the following, as related by the Rev. T. T. Biddulph: The effect which was wrought on the mind of the celebrated Gilbert West by the particular evidence of our Lord's resurrection which was afforded to his apostles, was very remarkable. He, and his friend, Lord Littleton, both men of acknowledged talents, had imbibed the principles of infidelity from a superficial view of the Scriptures Fully persuaded that the Bible was an imposture, they were determined to oppose the cheat. Mr. West chose the resurrection of Christ, and Lord Littleton the conversion of St. Paul, for the subject of hostile criticism. Both sat down to their respective tasks, full of prejudice, and a contempt for Christianity. The result of their separate attempts was truly extraordinary. They were both converted by their endeavor to overthrow the truth of Christianity. They came together, not as they expected, to exult over the imposture exposed to ridicule, but to lament their own folly, and to facilitate each other on their joint conviction, that the Bible was the word of God. Their able inquiries have furnished two most valuable treatises in favor of revelation; one entitled, "Observations on the Conversion of St. Paul," and the other, "Observations on the Resurrection."

"Until the fulness of the Gentiles shall have come in." (Rom. 11: 25.)

That is, until they who are to complete the full number of elect Gentiles in the present dispensation, during the time of Israel's national blindness, shall have been brought into the Church.—Newton.

Luke 11: 33-36.

Now no one lighteth a lamp to put it into a hole, nor under a measure, but upon a stand; that they who come in, may see the light. The eye is the lamp of the body; when therefore, thine eye is sound, thy whole body is enlightened; but, if it be disordered, then thy body is in darkness. Consider, therefore, whether that light which is in thee, be darkness.—Wakefield's Translation.

John 10. 11.

All that have come in my name are thieves and murderers; but the sheep did not hear them. I am the door: through me if any sheep enters, it will be safe; and may come in and go out and find pasture. The thief only comes to steal and to kill, and to destroy; I am come that the sheep may have life, and abundance of all good things. I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd exposeth his life for the sheep.—Ib.

Acts 2: 25-28.

For David saith concerning him, I know the Lord to be with me everywhere, on my right hand, that I might not be moved. Therefore my heart was glad, and my tongue rejoiced greatly, and moreover my body also will dwell in hope, that thou wilt not utterly leave my life in the grave, nor allow thy holy one to see corruption. Thou hast made known to me the way of life; thou wilt make me full of joy with thy countenance. —Ib.

W. A. C. P. ASSOCIATION NOTICE.

At the next meeting of the Association the following amendments to the Constitution will be offered for consideration and action:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 9, as follows:

Sec. 9. The Board of Trustees (or the Association,) shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to Art. III., Sec. 2. But the persons filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of Art. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

Sec. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

Sec. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate; and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to Art. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make Art. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

The precise date of the meeting at which these amendments will be considered, has not yet been fixed. It will probably be in March; and may be held in Buchanan.

Wm. L. Himes, Sec'y

At the Ohio State Conference, Br. C. D. Jefferson proposed to furnish a Mission Tent for the State, provided the Conference furnish two preachers to go with the tent. The following brethren were appointed to solicit pledges for the above purpose, and report to the president of the Conference, on or before the first of Jan., the amount pledged; and if sufficient is pledged, Br. Jefferson will proceed to furnish the tent, and we shall endeavor to put two good and faithful laborers in the field to labor for the cause of truth: A. B. Benedict, Nevada, O.; J. M. Treadwell, Fairfield; Martin Agner, Rockbridge; S. F. Rodgers, Norwalk; A. Mackey, [illegible]; Martin Bacon, Smyrna; P. T. Light, Plymouth; Dr. H. Kester, New London; Br. Ready, Widow's Home, Lucas Co.; Thos. Boardman, Shiloh; Henry Reed, Stryker; Wm. Sedonall, Pioneer; Geo. English, Montpelier; N. R. Cheadle, Delta; Geo. W. Terwilliger, Antwerp. Dear brethren, now is the time for action. Will you take hold of this matter at once, and report your success, so that we may know what to do? and the Lord will bless you.

E. McCulloch, President of Conf.

P. S. Churches desiring the first quarterly conference held with them, will please notify us immediately. E. M.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, - - - - EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 14. 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

We fear the following statement is as true in the church as in the world, and absolutely true in both. If it "hits" any one we trust it will lead to information.

People are always talking of "hard times;" but did you ever hear a man speak of "pinching want" when he went to buy a pound of tobacco, a glass of whisky or a fragrant cigar? No

---

A CATHOLIC church in New York advertises preaching on the coming of the Lord. What they mean by this we cannot say. When the Bible talks of the Lord's coming we understand what it means. But when theologians use the expression, they may mean death, destruction of Jerusalem, a national judgment, a revival, or what not. It's a pity Bible terms should have ever become unsacred—if we may be allowed the expression.

A SCOTCH correspondent of the New York Observer says:

"It must be acknowledged that there is a perilously increasing number of persons who, in one form or another, are questioning the eternity of future punishment."

—When you read in an orthodox journal of "eternal punishment," you must understand it of conscious punishment. They have not apprehended the Scriptural idea that eternal death is eternal punishment. But we are curious to know what is in "peril" in consequence of the increase of deniers of the eternity of suffering. Is it anything more than a theological dogma?

NEW YORK bids fair to have a State religion and that the Roman Catholic. Both parties cater to that church because of the voters she controls. The State and city already contribute heavily to the support of Romanist institutions, and now they are endeavoring to secure an act that virtually places all the public charitable or reformatory institutions under Popish influences, and prevents any Catholic child from becoming a Protestant, and any Protestant from making an attempt to convert them. At present all these institutions are purely unsectarian, but if Rome does not bring them under her control it will be simply because she cannot. Romanism is a fallen form of Christianity, but she is still a dangerous one.

THE follies of Rome are by no means on the decrease. The Echo says:

"Well-informed Protestants are generally aware that in the Church of Rome there has been growing up during a recent period a tendency to offer direct worship, not only to the whole "Corpus Christi," but to the various parts of the body of Jesus. The adoration of the wounds has been for some time established, and that of the 'Sacred Heart' is the special concern of whole fraternities of devotees. We learn that this, to our minds, singularly unworthy form of religious veneration has lately received a new and still more curious development. Peculiar and direct adoration is now paid to many Roman Catholics to the "back" of Christ, which received the lashes of the scourge, and to that portion of his cheek which was struck by the hands of the soldiers of Pilate. The bad influence of this sort of worship is not difficult to see."

AT a late "Clerical Conference" in Islington, London, at the close of a session on the present crisis, reviewed in connection with the doctrine of national judgments; the Rev. Henry Dana Ward, of this country, the able champion of pure doctrine so far as the Advent, resurrection and new earth are concerned, was introduced. The Rock says:

The Rev. Mr. W., of Philadelphia, on rising to say a few words was greeted with most enthusiastic cheering, as a brotherly testimony of respect to the Church he represented. The cordiality of his reception evidently moved the heart of the venerable minister, and he thanked the brethren present with some emotion. He invited all present not to mourn the old world but to rejoice in the new—to look forward for the time of restitution of all things, and to turn attention to the coming of Christ and his kingdom, rather than to the events of earthly kingdoms.

MR. ALGER is getting very mighty. He lately declared, in beginning a sermon, "I shall now demolish the whole doctrine of the resurrection of the body." Of course, it will never be heard of again. The next Sunday he promised to tell what would happen to the soul hereafter, and after spending an hour in not showing it, he said, "There is the curtain of death, no body knows what is behind it." Whereat two thousand boys and girls of various ages gave a round of applause, glorying that they were as the beasts that perish. How much happier and wiser was Dr. John Conder, on whose tomb in Bunhill Fields is this inscription;—

I have sinned, I have repented,
I have trusted, I have loved,
I rest, I shall rise,
And, through the grace of Christ, however unworthy, I shall reign."

—We quote the above passage from Zion's Herald. Dr. John Condor's epitaph was strictly Scriptural. He hoped to rise—not live disembodied. That's our hope. And if there is no resurrection, Mr. Alger is right, there is no future life, or, at least, none that man knows anything about.

A MEMBER of Parliament writing home concerning the war says:

English and American, as well as French, and even German testimony, proves the extent of German cruelties, of brutal treatment of defenseless persons, of villages and farms wantonly burned on futile pretexts, or without pretexts at all, of country houses plundered and gutted, costly furniture taken for fuel, wine-cellars ransacked and the liquor poured out and wasted when there was too much of it to drink, exactions so heavy that they were tantamount to condemning the unfortunate victims to immediate or proximate starvation. There are whole districts of France now covered with paupers, many of whom were the other day in easy circumstances, while nearly all of them had enough to live upon. They have been ruined by the invasion; everything has been taken from them; no moderate ransom would content the conqueror; under one pretense or other he took all they had, and destroyed what he could not use; he left them, as the French say, nothing but their eyes to cry with."

—This is one item in the fulfillment of prophecy in Rev. 14, so erroneously, by many, applied to the future punishment of the finally impenitent, when, in fact, it relates solely to the supporters of the Apostasy in this world.

IF THE Virgin Mary is alive in heaven, and possesses the power her devotees ascribe to her, she is certainly very ungrateful in not bestowing help upon them in their time of trouble. Says an English paper:

What is the Roman "B. V." about? Not to speak of her formal deification, sixteen years ago, as all know the extent to which her practical deification had proceeded long before. Whatever may be the honors professedly paid to her Divine Son, they are insignificant indeed when compared with the homage actually paid to her. It is her image (not HIS) that meets you at the corner of every street in "the eternal city." She (not HE) is styled the unica spes peccatorum." She (not HE as the inscription on her effigies attests, is ELPIS EMON. The Annee Liturgique enumerates twenty-two festivals in honor of HIM: but in honor of her, no less than two and-forty. In her Litany she is addressed as "Salus in firmorum, Refugium peccatorum, Consolatrix afflictorum, Auxilium Christianorum." Nor—if we may credit those who built her shrines and profit by them—was all this incense of adulation offered in vain. An inscription outside the Church of the Minerva records the height to which the Tiber rose in the inundation of 1530, with this inscription:—"Huc Tiber ascendit, jamque obruta tota fuisset Roma, nisi hinc celerem Virgo tulisset opem." And the same is said elsewhere concerning the earthquake which threatened the city in 1703 But now when Rome is laid half under water, the goddess of the Pantheon makes no sign! What can be the cause? Is it that the glory conferred on her by the Papal Edict of December 8th, 1854, has been effaced by the Decree of December 8th, 1870? Is "the Queen of Heaven" in dudgeon because "S. Joseph" has been officially and infallibly declared "Patron of the universal Church?"

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

ARBOR HILL, IOWA.

FRIDAY, Jan. 27, In company with Father Nokes, left Dexter for his residence in Arbor Hill, Adair Co. fifteen miles away on the prairie. I observed that the land was rolling, with the North, and Middle and Grand Rivers running through it, with occasional creeks, and a good supply of timber on the banks of the streams. The land is good, and is being fast taken up. The settlers are of a good class of Eastern people, and in their buildings, and fences, and improvements, I saw evidences of their taste and thrift. The new land now sells for from five to twelve dollars an acre. At Arbor Hill, twelve miles from Stuart Station on the Rock Island Railroad, there is a chance for good homes, in a good neighborhood, with the advantage of a small but rising Advent church. Any information desired can be obtained of Philander Nokes Esq., Arbor Hill.

On the way I called on Br. N. Finney, a practical farmer, and a Christian. We had a pleasant interview, and an exchange of thoughts, on divine and other subjects. Next we came to Br. Stowell's, near the place of our meeting, and stopped until night. He removed here two years since from Western New York. Became an Adventist in Nevada, Ohio, under the labors of Br. H. A. King. And here he is doing a good work for the cause of his coming Master. He has been greatly cheered by the coming of Br. Nokes and family who have settled in the neighborhood. They now have Advent meetings, and enjoy good times.

I preached at night to a full house on Luke 24: 25-27, after which quite a number bore testimony of the goodness of God to them. I put up with Br. John Nokes and family, who are making themselves useful in this new country, in the cause of religion and humanity.

WHITMORE'S REVIEW OF CLARK.

SATURDAY, Jan. 28. It appears that sometime last year, the Boston Methodist Clergy in their weekly ministers' meeting took up the subject of the nature of the human soul. This was discussed in several meetings, and at one time W. R. Clark, D. D. read an essay, which has since been published under this title.—"The two-fold Nature of Man Psychologically Considered." It seems that Eld. Rufus Wendell was considerably impressed with Dr. Clark's views, and professed to have received light from him. He was claimed by Dr. Haven of Zion's Herald, as a convert to immaterialism. Considerable ado was made about it by the Methodists, and the fact of his change of views has been used to show that they had at last found a specific for the cure of materialism. Eld. Wendell, in the mean time has been dismissed from the "Life and Union Association" of New York, as holding views inconsistent with membership in that body.

It was natural that the materialists should give their attention to the article in question, and if it contained any new or important light on the subject treated, to receive it with joy. I have read the review of Dr. Clark by Eld. Whitmore with much pleasure. He states the position and arguments of Dr. Clark fully and fairly, and meets him on his own ground in the field of metaphysics. For Dr. Clark had no use for the Bible in the support of his theory, it being sustained, like that of Samuel Drew of England, by metaphysical arguments alone. Timothy Dwight, the famous President of Yale College, said (Vol. I, p. 163, Sermons): "Among Christians, I know of but one (S. Drew) who has regarded the immortality of the soul as susceptable of demonstration. Should we believe with this ingenious writer, that the soul metaphysically considered, is so formed, as naturally to be immortal, we must still acknowledge, because it cannot be denied, that its existence may terminate at death, or at any supposable period. Whatever has been created can certainly be annihilated by the power that created it. The continuance of the soul must, therefore, depend absolutely on the will of God."

Nothing then is gained by this metaphysical immortality. It is at best a myth. And how any Bible student resting his faith on the pure word of God could be swerved from the truth even by the very ingenious metaphysical arguments of Dr. Clark, is beyond my comprehension.

I invite all interested in the subject to read the review of Dr. Clark by Br. Whitmore. They will find it in the January number of the Advent Christian Quarterly. A good brother said to me to-day, after reading it, that it alone was worth five times the yearly subscription, and I am fully of his opinion. And, besides, the articles by Barlow, Litton, Leask, and others are of very great value. Let all who wish to secure a copy do so at once.

I spoke to-night to a full house, and described Christian character, and its rewards. Some followed in faithful testimony, and thus closed another week. And the first month in the new year is, also, nearly gone. Time truly flies. The Lord help us to faithfully improve it.

SABBATH, Jan. 29. We have a dull foggy morning. My health is good, but I am worn down, and shall be obliged to rest for a while soon. Incessant work and care, with constant exposure, wears upon the mortal system. I spoke upon "the signs of the times," as related to the speedy coming of Christ. (1.) The state of the world, and the church. (2 Tim. 3: 1-5.) Matt. 24: 37-50.) (2.) Celestial and terrestrial signs. (Luke 21: 24-28.) (3.) The downfall of Rome. (Dan. 7: 25-27.) (4.) Downfall of the Turkish empire. (Rev. 16: 12-16); when Michael will stand up. (Dan. 11: 45; 12: 1-3.) These events are upon us.

While I was speaking on the kingdom as to be under the heavens, a man spoke out and said the saints went to heaven at death. I handed him my Bible and asked for his authority for his statement. He declined to give it, and said to me, "Go on." I told him if he could not prove his assertions by the Bible, he had better hold his peace. At the close, Dr. Coril asked me if I believed there was a God. I replied, yes. "Well, where is he?" I replied that "his throne was in the heavens." And Jesus was at "his right hand." "Then, do not the saints go there when they die?" Not at all. Jesus said to his disciples before he went away, "Whither I go, ye cannot come." (John 13: 33.) "But" said he, "Christ said, I go away to prepare a place for you, and I will take you to myself, that where I am there ye may be, also,"

Hold on, Doctor, said I; let me read it to you as it is. "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place [by my atonement and intercessory work], I will come again and receive you unto myself: that where I AM [not where I WAS in heaven] there ye may be also." (John 14: 2, 3.) Where will Christ be, Doctor when he comes back? "Oh! that is not the question." Yes, it is the very question. And he will be on this earth at his return, and his people will be with him as he hath said. "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." (Matt. 5: 5.)

We had an ordination and communion in the evening. Br. Philander Nokes, was ordained elder, and Brn. John Nokes and Wm. M. Stowell Deacons of the Advent Christian Church of Arbor Hill. The truth is triumphing in this new country. I think the cause will prosper, because the elements are good and reliable—and withal this is a praying people. The foundation is laid, and the work may increase till the Master comes.

MONDAY, Jan. 30. Took leave of the friends with whom I have enjoyed this precious visit, which I do not doubt will be crowned with a mutual blessing, and with Brn. Hubbell and Lee started for a fifteen miles' ride across the prairie, to Br. Hubbell's home in Madison Co. Br. Hubbell was formerly from Indiana, near Elkhart, and there are others about him who came from the East, which makes an excellent neighborhood. He, with others, maintains his religion, and of late has taken a strong stand upon Adventism and is outspoken in its propagation and defense. I am now to spend a short time in his neighborhood to aid in establishing the cause.

Madison County, through which I have come to-day, is not behind other counties in this part of Iowa. The land is rich and cheap. Any information desired can be obtained of M. B. Hubbell Esq., Dexter, Iowa.

TUESDAY, Jan. 31. I took a little time to-day to look over by J. B. Wadsworth. It is a tract of forty-eight pages, and full of interesting matter of facts, incidents, and of conversation on the Advent doctrine. I find that it interests all who read it, and cannot fail to be useful. The author, Br. W., was brought up in the South, and was in good temporal circumstances at one time. But in a change he gave himself to God, and then, as he had no gifts to preach, devoted his time and talents to conversation and distributing tracts relating to the coming [illegible] the Lord. His travels have bee[illegible]stly in the South. And I hav[illegible]nal knowledge of his usefulness [illegible] cause of Christ. Within the [illegible] ear he has been united in marriage with Sr. M. P. Valle, formerly o[illegible] faithful teachers in Memphis [illegible]ho, also, remains faithful in the [illegible] work of missions in the S[illegible]y now reside in Memphi[illegible] His address is Box 634. [illegible] doing good there. Any help [illegible]m by the purchase of his pamphlet which costs 10 cents by mail, and even if something were added to this sum, would be wisely bestowed. Br. Hubbell, looking over my shoulder, who had just read the work, says:—"Amen. I wish to recommend the book. It contains many useful things."

A CONFESSION.

I had a conversation with a brother on his experience in the use of tobacco. He voluntarily said: My tobacco bill was sixty dollars a year! The influence on my health was not good. I felt convicted every day of its being a filthy habit, besides the spitting away the energy and strength of my life. When I went to the grocery for the week's provision for my family, if any money was short, the first thing was to provide for the full amount of tobacco, and then divide the balance for groceries. So if in anything we were stinted, it was in these. Tobacco was king, and must reign, and I was the slave.

If I have been pained at any one habit of the people with whom I have traveled the last few months, more than another, it has been the free use of tobacco, among both men and women. The amount used annually by those who profess to be interested in the religion of Christ within the bounds of the Conference in Iowa and Missouri, is over $3,000. And this $3,000, that would send out annually fifteen hundred copies of the TIMES, is worse than wasted. A great deal worse than wasted! If it would do any good to weep, or talk, or entreat that this waste of the Lord's money should cease, I should feel some hope. But —God be merciful to his people. I ought to say that the brother referred to above, has been completely redeemed from the use and love of the "filthy weed." And he now has $60 a year for the support of religion. But our people in Iowa and Missouri are not alone in this fault. The same habit exists all over the land. Who will reform?

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 1.—To-night I began a series of meetings in the Center S. H. in Penn, using as a text 2 Tim. 1: 15—"This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." This I showed from the prophetic word. I inquired if any one had any objections to the views advanced, but none were presented. One man in the neighborhood ought to been with us, as he contends that "we have nothing to do with the old Testament Scriptures." This is quite different from the opinion of Christ who said to the Jews,—"Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they....testify of me." (Jno. 5: 39.) There is a wonderful ignorance of the Bible among many professed Christian people. They do not read their Bibles. They read other books, but the Bible is neglected.

THURSDAY, Feb. 2. Spoke to-night on the kingdoms of earth which are to pass away, and give place for the one "which shall not be destroyed," even the kingdom of God which is soon to come. And as much as this matter has been published to the world for the last thirty years, I had many hearers to-night who had not heard of it heretofore. It needs a month's labor here to bring the people together in the truth. But duties press in other directions and I must leave some of the work for others. But I shall "set things in order," and the way will be opened for others. Penn and Dexter were to unite in the organization of a church to-day. So I went with a good company from Penn to Dexter, where we met at Br. Sherks' and organized a church of ten members, all heads of families. Br. M. B. Hubbell was ordained Elder, and Br. C. L. Raymond, Deacon. They occupy a good field, and have the prospect of doing much good. The Lord help them to be faithful. At the close of the services, we gathered about the table for the Lord's supper. We took leave of each other with no little emotion, but hope to meet again soon.

At night, having no meeting, Br. Raymond and I went to the school room to hear Mr. Ellis, a Disciple preacher. His text was John 21:24-25. "These things are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ," etc. He said there were two theories: the first, that the Spirit converted men without the word; the second, that they believed and were converted through faith in the word. He advocated the latter view, and severely condemned the former. He said if men were converted by impressions, or feelings, it was no evidence of gospel conversion, for Mormons, Quakers, Spiritists, and all the "ists" could make the same claim, and they all differed from each other. I might reply, that all the sects of Christendom prove their opinions by the naked word (or, at least, set up that claim, equally with this preacher), and yet they all differ from one another just as much as they do about the Spirit's influence. Hence he gains nothing by this idea, which, if sound, would go to prove that there is no truth in the gospel.

A brother made some sensible remarks at the close, and exhorted the brethren to pray that God would bless the word to the good of souls, that the "word might have a free course and be glorified," to which I said, Amen; that is the true gospel. It is "not by works of righteousness that we have done." "By grace are ye saved." "Paul plants and Apollos waters, but God gives the increase."

THE UNDERMINING OF MORALS.

The growing spirit of levity with which the home relations of the human race are treated is justly the cause of no little anxiety to moralists. There is a great change in public and private morals going on, and but few have the hardihood to assert that the change is for the better. Says the New York Tribune.

It cannot be denied that the severity of our earlier morals now exists only in tradition. That earnest and strenuous piety of New England, where each man lived as if always under Divine supervision, has passed away, and has left, it is true, the most faultless social fabric that exists; but the old asceticism cannot be expected to survive forever, after the old bigotry is departed. In the pioneer days of the West there was too much work to be done to leave any time for the frivolities of gallantry. But leisure and wealth have come together, and the social life of our interior States is more animated and unconstrained than any other provincial society of the world. Foreign books foreign plays, and the influence of foreign travel, have broken down the safe barriers of what our parents called modesty and we have agreed to call prudery. In our news stands, in our theaters, you see nothing to distinguish us from Europe but the language. Our morals have become Continental in all but the liberty allowed to young girls. Is it not worth while to consider whether we are to be exempt from the application of the lesson that all advancing civilizations have learned?—that solitary evenings passed with "gentlemen" "friends are not the most improving school of young maidenhood, and that there is a basis of truth in the monkish adage that Solus cum sola is not a condition favorable to religious meditation.

—These things are not pleasant to record; but we have to relate them as a part of the testimony to the character of the days we live in; and they rebut the declarations of those who insist that a temporal millennium is impending, if, indeed, it be not already begun. They are mistaken: the world is being perverted, not converted.

Spiritualism and Science.

We do not know that Mr. Beecher wrote the following remarks on this subject, but they occur as an editorial in his "Paper:"

> Dr. Hammond, after having examined the whole of it, is ready to maintain with confidence that "no medium has ever yet been lifted into the air by spirits; no one has ever read unknown writing through a closed envelope; no one has ever lifted tables or chairs but by material agencies; no one has ever been tied or untied by spirits; no one has ever heard the knock of a spirit; no one has ever spoken through the power of a spirit other than his own."—Dr. W. A. Hammond's Physical and Physiological Spiritualism.

We do not believe in the assumptions of modern Spiritualism, but we wish the whole subject might be taken out of the hands of over-confident scientists, who betray quite as much lack of logic and subjection to prejudice in their promptness to reject, as enthusiasts do, in their eagerness to receive. Whether Dr. Hammond means to express any thing more than a cheap "begging of the question," in saying that the phenomena which he seems to deny, are not produced by spirits, we do not know. If that is all, there are a good many of us to whom it was hardly worth saying. But if he means to affirm that none of these manifestations have taken place except by known or recognizable "material agencies," there are hundreds of thousands of witnesses to refute him. When the great Faraday, in the matter of table-tipping, "exploded the whole thing" (that appears to be the favorite phrase) by his theory of an unconscious muscular action in the fingers of the operators, the lustre of his name only made his failure more conspicuous, and confirmed the superficial in the belief that here was something beyond the power of science to explain. The theory itself never had a moment's footing with any sensible and unprejudiced observer of the facts in the case.

The whole question of Spiritualism seems to have arrived at somewhere about this point. The legitimacy of the preacher's warning against hasty and unskillful deductions as to the nature or origin of these manifestations, and the momentous doctrinal inferences which so easily follow, is obvious enough. But to the man of science who would set conclusively at rest the great physical and physiological heresy of the day there remain but two alternatives,—to disprove the alleged facts, or to account for them. If the earnest and candid inquirer cannot receive real assistance in one of these directions, let us, at least, have done with the vain babble of "science falsely so called."

SINCE the death of the Rev. Albert Barnes we have frequently seen the following expression, or its equivalent: "That great and good man, Rev. Albert Barnes, entered upon his reward last week. His death took place suddenly." Considering the fact that Jesus has said he will bestow every man's reward at the second advent or judgment (Rev. 22; Matt. 16), it appears to us something of an assumption for ministers or editors, however orthodox, to affirm that any are now "entered upon reward." It involves the consideration that either they are mistaken, or else the Savior misapprehended the time of reward.

Again, this doctrine comes in conflict with other doctrines. Mr. W. himself unconsciously glides into a trap from which he cannot extricate himself.

He says that the souls of the righteous go to heaven at death, enter in part upon their reward; and, of course, the wicked must enter upon theirs. Then why have a day of judgment? If each is judged as he dies, why judge him again? "But," says Mr. W. "Are not people responsible for their influence as well as for their deeds?" Certainly they are.

Now, let us see the result. A., a righteous man, dies and goes to Heaven at death, leaves a book he has written that has a bad effect after his death, that outweighs all the good he had done. B. was a wicked man, died and went to hell. He left a book he had written that had a good influence after his death that outweighs his wicked deeds. Now, at the judgment day, they must exchange places for all eternity. [illegible] under this ridiculous doctrine [illegible] d man went to heaven [illegible] and enjoyed himself, that the righteous man suffered in hell; but the day of judgment, being, I suppose a Court of Error, rectifies the mistake!!—Cor. Memphis (Mo.) Conservative.

A Scripture Reading.

But the end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer. And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity shall cover the multitude of sins. Use hospitality one to another without grudging.

For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers: but the face of the Lord is against them that are evil. And who is he that will harm you if ye be followers of that which is good. But and if ye suffer for righteousness sake, happy are ye; and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled; but sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear.

Wherefore gird up the loins of your minds, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold; but with the precious blood of Christ, as a lamb without blemish and without spot. Wherefore let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despised the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire wanting nothing.

If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. And the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good works, without partiality and without hypocrisy. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you with all malice. And be ye kind one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one to another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.

And whatever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him. And wait for his Son from heaven, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. Behold, I [Jesus] come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.

"Wishy-Washy" Religion.

The name is a bad taste, and the religion is thought to be no better; perhaps no more expressive title can be found, and it may be as easily pardoned as that which it describes. It seems to be a convenient religion, as it does not demand deep and Bible repentance, but is satisfied if its possessor lives as his neighbors do, but it does demand great charity, a little for old-fashioned worshippers, and much for themselves. Some think it is increasing and rather popular, its doctrines being liberal, its conscience accommodating, and its requirements few and easy to be met by anybody.—Chris. Observer.

Men will wrangle for religion; write for it; fight for it; die for it; anything but—live for it.—Lacon.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

The church in Ottawa, Ill. have hired a hall, and hold meetings every Sunday a. m. and eve. They have no regular preaching, and cordially invite preaching brethren passing that way, to call.——An interest is growing up in Nevada City, Mo. Br. Fry is doing all he can, and wishes for—what so many desire—an Advent preacher.——Fifteen were converted at the late Q. M. at Silver Lake, Minn.——The brethren at Clyde, N. THE

ADVENT CHRISTIAN

TIMES,

A large, neat, eight-page weekly paper, thoroughly devoted to the advancement of the cause of Christ by the faithful advocacy, defence and dissemination of what is called Advent doctrine,

EDITED BY

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

THE TIMES contains, weekly, matter expository, exegetical, illustrative, practical; including communications, selections and original matter, with letters from those of like precious faith in all parts of the country, the news of the body, and a faithful digest of the news of the world bearing upon the signs of the times; with news of the progress of our cause in different parts, and also news of what our opponents are saying and doing, with expositions and refutations of their arguments; articles on prophecy; notices of current and useful literature; short sermons; a column or more for the children; choice bits of poetry—in short matter enough in every number to make a good sized book, and all furnished for only FOUR CENTS A WEEK, or $2 a year. No paper of its class furnishes so much reading matter, even when a greater price is charged.

The paper has been very useful in the past, and can be made more so by extending its circulation. To our friends who are working faithfully for this end, we make the following offer: We will send

THE TIMES, POST-PAID,

to any address in the United States or Canada, on trial

FOR THREE MONTHS,

for 35c. For one dollar, we will send THE TIMES to any three persons, three months, post-paid; and any larger number at the same rate.

Who will take advantage of this liberal offer, to introduce THE TIMES in a village, a neighborhood, a church. For

TEN DOLLARS

you can send a live Advent paper to

THIRTY PERSONS,

or into thirty families, post-paid, for three months. Could it fail to do good? Five dollars will pay for fifteen copies; and one dollar for three.

We make this liberal offer solely to introduce the paper in new fields and localities.

Will the ministry please publish it to their congregations?

Will our friends please tell it to their friends.

Will you who love the cause and wish THE TIMES to prosper, pay for 3, 5, 10, 50, or 100 copies, on these liberal terms. We have now 300 names, of partially interested persons, among whom we could obtain perhaps more, could we send them the paper free for three months.

FIFTY PERMANENT SUBSCRIBERS,

Who will send at once? Send in the names, with 33⅓ cents for each name, and (if you give the P. O. address plainly) we will guarantee the delivery of thirteen numbers of THE TIMES, free of postage, to each one of them.

Three thousand three months subscribers, on this plan, will give us a large and permanent addition to our list.

Correspondence.

From Henry Rast, Stryker, O.

During the past season I have occasionally absented myself from home to scatter tracts and to meet brethren and sisters of the Advent faith, being here separated from those who can sympathize with me and mine, in the blessed hope of soon seeing Christ in all his glory. Oh! much of the Spirit of God is needed to stand firm against the tide of opposition in this place. Br. J. R. Preston has been here, and spoke the words of life to this people. Was here one week. After him came Br. A. N. Seymour, for one week. The good seed has been sown broadcast, and I think it will yet bring forth fruit to the glory of God. Pray for us.

From Henry Zader, Rock Co. Wis.

The Times is a welcome visitor to me. I do not want to do without it. It is all the Advent preaching I have. I attend mostly at the Baptist church. I also attend the Bible Class. We have one of the leading members for our teacher. I have got his good will, and he feels interested in me. He gave me a book to read which treats on baptism and close communion. I agree with it on baptism. The book sets forth the Baptists as a despised people in an early day; and I thought it was very much as we Advent people are at present. But I have exchanged books with him. I lent him Dobney on Future Punishment. I hope and trust the Lord will stir up a spirit of investigation.

Dear Brethren: Let us be kind to our Christian friends although they may differ from us, for they may differ honestly. Many of us have believed as they do, and honestly, too. But let us do our duty, kindly, and still earnestly and prayerfully. Strive for the truth of God's Holy Word. Let, also, our example correspond with our precept. And let us with unwavering faith lay hold of God's promises, claiming them as ours, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Let us leave off bitter words. They do no good. We make poor headway with them. But let us exhibit the Spirit of Christ, and God will bless us in his own time.

From E. K. Tibbetts, Cumminsville, Ohio.

I have been waiting for a favorable opportunity, in which to write a few lines relative to the great doctrine that should interest all Christians, viz: the coming of our Lord and Master. I was not always a believer in this "new doctrine," as it is now called, but thought I had good grounds against it. I now see I was mistaken, and have been "newly converted" about three years; and the Bible seems like a new book to me now, and I wonder how I ever read it in any other light. But such is the progress of truth, it seems to me that the opposition is purely willful; for there is certainly "line upon line" and "precept upon precept" regarding these sacred truths. I am very much engaged, but still I try to find time to read your valuable paper, which, I am happy to say, visits me regularly each week. From it I receive wholesome instruction. It opens the truth to me in a very clear manner. And now as my time is out, I send a renewal for six months. I lend as fast as I read, and find plenty who love these papers. Thus I am trying to let my light shine by telling, and pointing to these truths as taught in the Divine Word. There are very few believers with us, in this place; but still I can see some progress.

From B. B Dutton, Iron Hill, Iowa.

We had a good time at the Conference at Clinton, and found the church there in good spirits, and patiently waiting for Jesus, who will soon come to reward the faithful. Oh! that will be glorious! But as I was coming home on the cars, along under the bluff which stands almost perpendicular to the hight of (I should think) a hundred feet, I asked myself the question is this one place where wicked men will stand and cry for the rocks to fall on them, to hide them from the face of him that sitteth on the throne? For the moment my heart grew sick within me, when I thought how many wicked persons there are in the world. What a time that will be! Oh! for more vital godliness, and more of a missionary spirit. When I contemplate the signs of the times, and consider how very near the judgment is, I feel as though more of our brethren ought to be in the field at work for Jesus and suffering humanity. Oh for a waking up, and more of consecration. Why should we be grasping after the things of this world? Jesus is coming! Do we believe it? If so let us show it by our work, daily. You know that actions speak louder than words.

From Antoinette McQuivey, Freeborn Co. Minn.

I am still looking for the second coming of the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world. Oh that I may prove faithful till the end; for I sometimes feel almost like giving up. Then I think of the compassion and goodness of God, how in his infinite mercy he gave his only begotten Son, that we through him might live; and he, being acquainted with our infirmities, pitieth us. When I meditate on his mercy, I feel like asking his forgiveness for laying aside the shield of faith. I am afraid there are too many of us that have forgotten our armor, or have laid it aside for a season. Let us see to it. If we have not got it on, let us not tarry a moment, for the darts of the enemy are flying thick and fast, and if we are not prepared with all the equipments that God has provided, we shall not conquer.

From Mary A. Tibbetts, Volga. Ind.

Last evening as the household were gathered around the bright fire and brighter lamp-light ready for the usual reading, we called special attention to the last interview held between yourself and the "Press." We became increasingly interested in the subjects under consideration, particularly that of tract distribution, so much so, that when the article was concluded, all spoke up nearly at the same moment, that as the "Press" was so willing to work, and so much work needing to be done, it was a pity not to keep it in constant employment. And as a result two dollars was immediately made up, (some of it by one young man who has recently professed Christ), which I will now send to aid you in printing some of the tracts we so much need to scatter abroad in the land, that the people may come to understand those precious truths in the Bible, that have so long been enveloped in mystery. Please tell the "Press" in your next talk, that the chat on that evening when you felt so "tired and nearly discouraged," was not all lost, but has secured these two dollars from one family. If each one would send something, the "Press" will be kept busy.

There is one thing more you may tell the "Press" while you are talking and that is, when different persons from all parts of the land with as many different temperaments, and dispositions send in their communications for publication, request that while they use "hard arguments," they will select soft words, in which to clothe their ideas. Most persons can be led, while but few can be driven; and harsh words with odious epithets only repel and disgust rather than win to the truth we wish to teach. I can remember the time when I most ardently defended the views held by many dear brethren and sisters with whom I now differ. I regard them as honest as I was then and am now, and trust, with the divine blessing, that time and a candid investigation of many precious truths held in mystery under my former teaching, may speedily become clear and comprehensible, joyous and comforting, to them, as they have proved to myself. It always pains me to see any harsh communication in The Times, as I wish it to be the kind and logical exponent of gospel truth. I trust therefore, you will be able to convince the "Press" in your next interview that it will greatly conduce to the interest of the paper issued from your office if it will print only those things that manifest a kind, loving spirit, and words of tender and earnest solicitude for those whom they wish to instruct; leaving out severe criticism and bitter reflections, which are only calculated to separate friends, rather than bind them together.

From Wm. McCulloch, Havanna, Ill. Feb. 1:

I believe, verily, that I have approached near where "Satan's seat is." I judge so by the multitudinous host that seems to be his followers, if not his immediate relatives. It truly reminds me of the saying of Jesus to a certain class—"Ye are of.... doing his works," etc. It does appear to me that we are almost uselessly spending our time and our energies in these cities. They are nearly all church poor and priest-ridden, and wound up in a sectarian film so strong that it is next to, if not quite impossible to get a shot of truth from the artillery of heaven to penetrate their citadel. Like priest like people. All combine to erect forts against the success of God's eternal truth; and if we turn away in disgust or disheartened, the united shouts of triumph of priest and people, go up. But, thank the Lord, there is a time coming, and that not far distant, when truth will prevail.

But you may infer from this strain that I have been retreating before the tide. Oh! no! I have seen no tide here. The forts are so high and so strong, that not even a wave can be felt beyond a certain bound. No, no. It is this slock, easy, sleepy, slide-along way, that I abhor. Give me now and then a rush, or even a storm, to encounter if it is never so strong. Then will we sing—"We'll stand the storm, it won't be long." etc. But this dead calm, who can bear it?

> "Far more the treacherous calm I dread,
> Than tempests bursting o'er my head."

But praise the Lord, we will do our duty: then our skirts will be clear, whether men hear or forbear. The judgment is soon coming. May we be all ready to meet it is my prayer.

I often think how the truth took hold of the people in Iowa where I labored last winter; and I read with interest Br. Himes' "Journal," and imagine just how eager the people are to hear, and willing to obey; and then I almost wish to go into that, or some other new field that has not been burnt over. But the Lord direct all my steps, is my prayer.

Yours for truth to triumph.

From Joseph Roberts, Winchester, Ill.

Our little company met to-day, and broke the loaf. Br. J. G. Bush spoke on the saint's inheritance. A good time. The Presbyterians are holding a protracted meeting. On Thursday the minister said there never was such a move in all the churches as at the present time, and that the world was going to be converted. A member of the body of Presbyterians rose up, and said he did not believe a word of it. The word did not so teach. I attribute this to what he learned from Brn. D. S. Clark and Scott, some three years ago, which was backed up at the tent meeting a year or more since. So the "truth, crushed to earth will rise again." We are but a few here, but we have the truth. Although I was twenty years in the M. E. church, and twenty years in the Christian church, and am now in my sixty-seventh year, I confess I knew nothing of the Advent teaching until I heard Brn. Clark and Scott. These same truths I now endeavor to teach. And some have moved away from us that united with us after those preachers left us who have carried the same truths and published them. The masses of the people here are most generally wedded to their theories, and do not cordially receive the Advent teaching. We would be glad to have Br. Himes here to preach the Word; but none of the churches would let us have their houses, and popular opinion is against us, or we could get the large school house. So we will have to make the best of our condition.

From B. J. Goodwin, Chickasaw Co. Iowa.

As I read in The Times' letters from brethren and sisters who enjoy meeting with, and the society of others of like precious faith, we sometimes feel like leaving this place, and seeking a home in an Advent settlement, that we too may enjoy like privileges in a faith held only by a peculiar people, who consider the Bible a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

About the middle of December, we were very agreeably surprised by a visit from Elds. Lauphere and Wilbur of Floyd Co., who preached to us six times with good effect. New year's day Br. Wilbur returned and preached five times to interested congregations. An organization was not effected, indeed, was not mentioned; but more light was given, professors were stirred up, and two made a start for the kingdom. I have since heard that one young man has burnt his cards, and that two young ladies say they will dance no more. We hope and pray that the work so well begun will be continued until sinners are converted from the error of their way, and a church raised up here of such as will be able to give a good account of their stewardship at the day of judgment. This is a new field, as there was never but one Advent sermon preached here until their visit. Our school house is some eight miles S. W. of Williamstown.

May the Lord bless those faithful laborers abundantly, and all in every place who call upon him in truth.

From Amos Sanford, Columbus, Kas.

For nearly three long years I have been a resident of this portion of Kansas called the "Cherokee Neutral Lands," having a nominal membership in a Free Will Baptist church about ten miles distant, but living an almost isolated Christian life beset by temptations on every hand, until I had well nigh lost my hold on eternal life and the hope of the resurrection. I loved my denomination because of the earnestness and devotedness of its members, and was loth to sever my connection with them, notwithstanding their belief in the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and endless life in misery; and I should not have done so had not every effort on my part to secure an organization at this place (the seat of Cherokee County) proved a failure. I had heard Eld. Himes preach in the Free Will Baptist church at Prairie City, Ill. in 1867, which was the only Advent sermon I ever heard in my life. But in searching the Scriptures my disbelief in the popular dogmas of this age was confirmed, and the truth as it is in Christ made more apparent to my mind. I had well nigh forgotten him until I saw his address in Henry Ward Beecher's Christian Union, when I at once sent a copy of The Workingman's Journal, which I am publishing here, and received in exchange, The Times. I perused its columns with deep interest, until I was moved by "the Spirit of truth" to write to Br. Himes a candid letter, explaining my condition, the poverty of the people here, the almost hopelessness of obtaining any pecuniary reward for his labors, but promising to do all in my power to give him a hearing before the people if under these circumstances he could come and preach to us. I must confess that I did not have much faith, for I had previously written elsewhere for help, and received not even a reply. I had nearly made up my mind to join the Missionary Baptist church at this place, when I received the welcome news from Br. Himes that he was coming. I prepared the way for him as well as I could; but everything seemed to work unfavorably. The District Court was in session: the coldness of professed Christians, and the universal prejudice of the people against "soul-sleepers" rendered it difficult to break the way. The meetings were protracted over one week and on Sunday night last a call was made for sinners to "come out from among them," by Br. Himes; but not a soul came, and my spirit failed me. My hopes seemed to be dashed to the ground. I gave vent to my feelings, and spoke despondingly. Returning home, at night, I noticed its effect upon our faithful minister, and I felt more sad. He too seemed discouraged, but he said—"Let us trust in the Lord."

We retired to rest praying for the realization of our hopes. The next night the Lord poured out his Spirit and four souls came forward to unite with the church, and several others arose for prayers. The "Editor's Journal" has no doubt told you the rest.

The church was organized, and many others are awakened and seriously contemplating a union with us. May the Lord prosper the little branch started here, and "give the increase." We now want some young minister to come here and labor. But we shall not wait for that, but will carry on the work as best we can. Brethren let us have your prayers for our welfare, that we may not faint by the way, nor grow weary in well doing. Pray for the little lone church in Kansas.

The Second Coming of Christ. No. 3.

In the preceding article we treated on Christ as a "prophet," and "priest;" and when these characters were sustained by him. We are now to show Christ as king; and when this shall be. "But," it may be asked, "does he not now sustain this character?" In a limited sense he does; but not to the extent which he will sustain it. His reign is now confined to the few who love him; and those are but very few compared with the many who are his enemies. But permit me to ask you, my friend, if you will acknowledge that the allegiance now paid him, is the allegiance promised him by God the Father? God said that Christ should have a kingdom in which he should reign supreme; no rival sharing the love and homage due to him alone. Is this the character of the love felt, and the homage paid him by those who are called by his name now? What is the language often used by those who exhibit the greatest love for his person, and the greatest zeal for his honor and glory; and whose lives bear the fullest testimony that he is the God of their affections? Let the apostle of the Gentiles give the answer: "I find there a law, that when I would do good, evil is present with me. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man; but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. Oh! wretched man that I am." How often do the Christians of the present day use the words of the poet—

> "Prone to wander, Lord I feel it; > Prone to leave the God I love."

Is this love and allegiance perfect? Do you, Christian reader, experimentally understand the language there used? Have you from the depths of a troubled heart made use of it yourself? If you have not, the writer of these lines has been compelled so to do; and I doubt not, but many who have been cleansed from their filthiness in the precious blood of the Lord Jesus Christ from the day of Paul to the present, have been compelled to the same conclusion.

The faithful love, and the perfect obedience promised the Savior by the Father, is yet to come. But he shall reign and rule and govern entirely and exclusively, the whole man; and, blessed be God, it shall be all men, as well as the entire man; for "he shall be King over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one," and every knee shall bow to him and every tongue confess him Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Christ is now, as he describes (Luke 19: 27), gone into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom.

We are now prepared to enter upon the subject of the third and last character to be sustained by the Savior. It is not my intention to treat upon chronological dates, as my wisdom as a student of the Bible is altogether too small to enable me to do so; but I will confine myself to events which shall take place at the time and just previous to his "taking to himself his great name." In Daniel's prophecy (ch. 7; 3), it is written: "And four great beasts came up from the sea diverse one from another." From this verse to v. 7, Daniel gives a description of these beasts: and in v. 17–24, the explanation of what they represent. Biblical scholars describe them as the kingdoms of Babylon, of the Medes and Persians, of Greece, and Rome. The fourth beast is said to be "diverse" from all the others, being "dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; having great iron teeth, which devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet." He is also described as having "ten horns;" and among those horns, comes up a "little horn." The prophet says: "I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like pure wool. His throne was like the fiery flame, and a fiery stream issued and came forth before him; thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousands stood before him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened. I beheld then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake. I beheld even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame. I saw in the night vision, and behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." In v. 21–22 it says: "I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom."

Daniel is given to know the time the time wherein the Son of man is given the kingdom, and is told it shall be when the little horn is making war with the saints. I do not think it is necessary that we should understand this war to mean fiery persecution all the time; although it may, for in Rev.

3: 10 it says: "Because thou hast," (that is, the faithful of his flock, those who "abide in Christ," and his words abiding in them;") "kept the words of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth." One form of temptation is given by Isaiah, and is described as a "sifting process." "Behold the name of the Lord cometh from far, burning with his anger, and the burthen thereof is heavy. His lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire; and his breath as an overflowing storm, shall reach to the midst of the neck, to sift the nations with the sieve of vanity; and there shall be a bridle in the jaws of the people causing them to cry." (Is. 30: 27, 28.) Satan will doubtless use those things in which human nature delights for his own ends, even as he did the, "Thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." The worldly Christians will suffer; but those who "do the will of God," those who walk in his ways, and glorify him by a godly life: will be preserved by God himself from "the hour of temptation."

Christian Reader, has this time commenced? If your heart replies, "it appears so," be warned; for a love for worldly vanities and pleasures will be used by the enemy of your soul, to draw you away from your steadfastness, and alluse you into the by paths of sin and wickedness if possible. Remember! it is those who have "kept the word of" God's "patience," that are preserved by him "from the temptation, that is to try those who dwell on the earth." Satan knows, if God is worshiped, he must and will be "worshiped in spirit and in truth." He knows that nothing less than the whole heart will be accepted by the Lord, and, therefore, will blind the eyes of some, and cause them to believe that no sin lies in their worldly amusements, or that worldly pleasure, since they cannot be denominated "gross or sensual."

The Christian Pattern and Guide says (Mat. 7: 24): "No man can serve two masters." He says, likewise that his followers are "not of the world even as," he himself "is not of the world." (John 17: 14). And, by the way; the very name, "follower," indicates they are not; for if they follow Christ, they cannot be of the world. James 4: 4 says; "The friendship of the world is enmity with God; whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God." 1 John 2: 15 says: "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Prove yourself by the word of truth; and try the ground on which you are standing; for these are in very deed, the LAST DAYS. A. H.

THE CONQUEST OF FRANCE.

(Concluded.)

A WAR OF SIEGES.

Indeed from this time (September 1) until the close of the year the efforts of the Germans were almost wholly confined to the siege of the various strongholds of France, the reduction of Paris, of course, being the one of greatest importance. This semi-inaction on the part of the invaders was forced upon them. There were no more French armies in the field to conquer, save those forming at Paris, Orleans, Lille, Lyons, and the Brittany camp at Conlie, and these were too far distant to strike, even if the Germans had had the men with which to disperse them. But the two grand armies were required to keep Bazaine in Metz and Trochu in Paris, while the detached forces had enough to do to reduce the minor fortresses. The siege operations were conducted vigorously and successfully. Verdun (Nov. 9), Pfalsburg (Dec. 12), Toul (Sept 23), Montmedy (Dec. 14), Laon (Sept. 8), Soissons (Oct. 16), New-Breisach (Nov. 10), St. Quentin (Sept. 21), Schlestadt (Oct 24), Thionville (Nov. 24), and various other fortresses of the second and third classes, fell in rapid succession, and with heavy aggregate loss to the French. From the moment that Paris was invested these became of secondary importance and interest, only as affecting direct lines of communication, and we therefore merely allude to them here, out of their chronological order. The defense of Strasbourg was conducted with more stubbornness than skill for nearly two months, and the city and its citadel sustained during that time a heavy and continued fire from a numerous and destructive German artillery. But the siege was remarkable only for the stubbornness of the resistance. The French engineers did not display their quality at all; and there was nothing remarkable in the operations of the approaches and the breaching by the Germans. There were few assaults and no sorties whatever, perhaps because a vigilant German commander gave no opportunities for any. Thus, without noteworthy incident, the siege continued until patience and provisions being alike exhausted, the French commander surrendered (Sept. 26) at the discretion of the conqueror. But the army thus relieved from this siege had others before it, and advanced only to sit down before more stubborn Belfort.

Metz, never closely invested, but at the same time closely guarded, endured frequent repulse of desperate sorties and hunger for two months and eight days; but finding escape impossible and relief by another French army a vain hope, Marshal Bazaine, on October 26, surrendered his army of 173,000 men at discretion. Such magnificent results as the actual capture of two armies, aggregating 300,000 men, never before attended the military efforts of any nation, and the stories of Metz and Sedan are without parallel in war's annals; yet how insignificant do these triumphs appear in comparison with the final success which a few days more must complete in the capitulation of more than 400,000 soldiers garrisoning a city of 2,000,000 inhabitants!

On surrendering at Sedan, Napoleon III. endeavored to open negotiations for peace, but the Prussian Premier soon discovered that neither he nor the Regency, to which the Emperor had delegated authority, had power to enforce on France the conditions precedent to peace which were demanded; for the Republic had been proclaimed and the Empire repudiated. Well would it have been for France if the crime of the Empire in declaring and making war had also been disavowed; but the responsibility for its continuance was unhesitatingly assumed by a Committee of National Defense, which by this first act indicated imbecility since fully established. Von Moltke was not the man, nor was the Prussian Premier in the humor to delay long in negotiations with a fallen monarch or a defiant ministry, and the same day that saw the capitulation of Sedan also beheld the columns of the Crown Princes in motion toward Paris. The Saxon by the Aisne and Oise, the Prussian by the Marne and Aube, swept forward with resistless numbers, masking Laon, Soissons, and other fortified towns in their pathway with forces adequate to their reduction; and in two weeks, on the 15th of September, just two months after the French declaration of war, the German armies deployed before the north-eastern defenses of Paris. This part of the line of investment was established without serious opposition, greatly to the surprise of the Germans, who anticipated resistance at the passage of the Seine. Trochu's troops were certainly unfit at this time to be trusted in battle, and could not have prevented the investment, though they might have retarded it under a skillful general, without jeopardy to themselves. If it was wise, however, not to oppose the passage of the Seine with such troops, it was madness to attempt, as Trochu did four days later, the re-occupation of the elevated country south of Paris. The extension of the German line from the Seine to Versailles in front of the southern line of forts, brought on an engagement (Sept. 19) known to the French as the battle of Chattillion, and to the Germans as that of Sceaux. Lying between the two towns thus named and commanding the country round and the French forts in its front, is a range of hills known as the Hights of Sceaux; and it was for the possession of this position that the battle was fought. Gen. Trochu, with apparently culpable negligence, had failed to seize and fortify this important position. He had declared his intention to remain strictly on the defense until he could arm, organize, and discipline the immense mass of Gardes Mobiles, marines, and volunteers who had crowded into Paris for defense. He doubtless had also some indefinite hope of aid coming from the army which had already begun to form on the Loire at Orleans; but dependance on this force or on his own unskilled soldiery was, as events proved, mistaken confidence, and won for Trochu the satirical title of the "Military Micawber." But after resolving that nothing remained to him but to hold the defensive, Trochu was weak enough to be overruled by the advice of subordinates and the wishes of his associates in the Government, and consented to make an effort to retake the hights which he had permitted the Germans to seize without opposition. If it was folly not to have secured them before the approach of the Germans, it was insanity to attempt to recapture them with a single corps of half drilled, untried troops. The unwisely ordered attack was badly directed and tardily conducted; the troops displayed great gallantry, but they also displayed their indiscipline, and their efforts naturally resulted in positive repulse.

The movements of the Germans in strengthening their lines south and west of the city more than once induced Trochu to make reconnoissances, which in one or two instances resulted in brief yet serious engagements. On September 30 two columns, operating from Chatillon and St. Cloud, advanced to develop changes which had been made in the investing line in front of these positions, but they had hardly deployed before overwhelming numbers of Germans were advancing from their bivouacs to meet them. The French were driven back at both points, and being flanked on their right by the overlapping lines of the Germans, suffered severe losses. The only result of the affair was to reveal precisely what the French did not wish assured from them, that the Germans were daily transferring forces from the east to the west side of Paris, and preparing to bombard the city on its weakest front. By these movements, masked by the Hights of Sceaux and their own strongly maintained lines, the Germans finally disposed their great forces around the city in the order named on the map which illustrates the operations of the siege. The investing line established by the Germans was about five miles in depth, the reserves being not more than that distance from the advance posts. The system on which the Germans conducted the siege was different in many respects from that in vogue during our own war. The advanced posts, where small bodies of men kept vigilant lookout on the proceedings of the French in the city and forts, were strongly intrenched with the design of being held until supports could come up. In their immediate rear, larger forces were posted in camps or stationed in convenient farm-houses, villas, and chateaus; while divisions and corps, still further to the rear, were cantoned in the numerous villages and towns which form suburban Paris. With houses to live in, warm beds and rich linen to rest upon, wine in the cellars, fruit on the trees, and vegetables from near and distant gardens of the occupied departments, the besiegers had little to dread from delay, and could afford to wait until famine forced capitulation. Strong as this line was known to be the French did not despair of breaking through it, and while the Germans prepared for the bombardment their enemy made two or three fruitless efforts to raise the siege and escape. The most of these were made against Trochu's judgment, and, badly supported and worse directed, failed ignominiously. The first of any note made on Oct. 28, against LeBourget on the north of Paris appears to have been permitted as a sort of concession to a corps of Paris volunteers, led by noted Communists. It is significant of the condition of Paris at this time that on its failure and the repulse of their corps with heavy loss, Communes of Paris invaded the Hotel de Ville, captured Trochu and the members of the government, proclaimed a new republic, and for several hours were in possession of the Government. A corps of Mobiles happily arriving thrust the new leaders out, and restored the Committee of National Defense, else France would have been again revolutionized by a Paris mob.

The most formidable of these sorties was undertaken on Nov. 30, by Gen Ducrot, 100,000 men, against the positions at Brie, Champigny, and Avron held by the Saxons and Würtembergers, and commanding the German line of communications. The French were certainly sagacious in detecting here the weakest points in the German line, but they under-estimated the facilities for concentration which their positions gave the enemy. Gen Ducrot passed the Marne and penetrated the German lines, capturing two or three important positions and establishing himself at Brie and Champigny. But here, strangely enough, he resumed the defensive, as if satisfied with what he had gained, when clearly his tactics were to mass all the troops possible in that part of the line and continue the attack. He waited, however, for two days, when the Germans, re-enforcing their allies, attacked and carried Champigny and Brie (Dec 2), and forced Ducrot back into the small peninsula formed by a bend in the Marne. This, on the following day he was compelled to abandon. Two important positions gained during this attack were retained by the French, and from these they were driven only after the preparations for bombardment had been completed by the Germans. One of these was a hillock east of Paris called Mount Avron, overlooking and commanding Forts Rosny, Nogent, and Noisy; the other was the town of Villejuiff, south of the city. Both were at once fortified by the French with the heaviest guns in Paris, and continued to be held until the Germans, having resolved on bombardment, partly as a concession to public opinion at home, and partly to strengthen their lines by concentration, knocked the works at Mount Avron to pieces and advanced their own batteries to that point. Against Villejuiff no direct effort was made.

Take the land, the sunshine, the rain which God gives you, and set them all at work to grow tobacco; throw this as your product into the world's market; buy with it bread, clothing, and shelter, books for yourselves, instruction for your children, consideration in the community, and perchance, the gospel of grace; pay ever and everwhere, for the good you get, tobacco, only tobacco; tobacco that nourishes no man, clothes no man, instructs no man, purifies no man, blesses no man; tobacco that begets inordinate and loathsome appetite and disease and degradation; that impoverishes and debases thousands, and adds incalculably to the burden of evil the world bears; but call not this exchange honest trade, or this gnawing at the root of social well-being getting an honest livelihood.—Prof. Bascom.

COTTRELL. Also, at the same place, Jan. 1871. Benj. F., son of G. B. and H. Cottrell: aged 16 years, 9 months and 8 days.

Benny suffered very much during seven months with an abscess, terminating in dropsy. He evinced much patience. He said he remembered that Jesus suffered patiently for him. I tried to comfort the friends from the text of their choice—Job 19: 25, 26.

PETER S. W. DEYO.

THING. In El Paso, Wis., May 31, 1869, David Thing: aged 54 years, 6 months and 4 days.

The deceased was born in Waterboro, Me., and came to Wisconsin fifteen years ago. He heard Father Miller lecture in Boston, was converted shortly afterwards, and baptized by Eld. Timothy Cole, in Lowell, Mass. He believed the doctrine of the Second Advent! Funeral services by Eld. A. Gibson, of the Baptist church. Text: Ps. 23: 1—"The Lord is my shepherd."

THING. In Clifton, Wis. Aug. 24, 1870, Olive Glere, daughter of Amasa and Hannah Badger, and wife of the late David Thing: aged 59 years, 5 months and 2 days.

The deceased was born in Barnet, Vt. She was converted when sixteen years of age, baptized by Eld Burroughs, and united with the Baptist church. When the glorious doctrine of the Second Advent was preached she embraced it, and, with her husband, died with the expectation of being called from the grave to meet the Savior in the clouds. Funeral services by Eld. O. R. Fassett. Text: Rev. 21: 4—"And there shall be no more death." Thus have passed away both of my parents; victims to the destroyer—death. But my faith looks forward to the time when I shall meet them, to part no more. MILO J. F. THING.

LLOYD. In Berlin, Wis., Jan. 14, 1871, Sr. Elizabeth Lloyd, aged [illegible] years.

I have just received intelligence of the death of this estimable sister and valued friend in Christ. I became acquainted with her at the Lloyd House in Chicago, in 1865. She gave Mr. Lloyd and Mr Hurley, the landlords, the benefit of all her energies and talent in building up the House, and in her sphere as Matron and a Christian lady, she was the light of the house. She, no doubt, laid the foundation for her death by overwork and care in this position, from which she retired to Berlin, Wis., where she died.

She has been a great sufferer for a year or two past. Her letters have indicated something of her sufferings, her patience under them, and her trust in Christ. She embraced the blessed hope at Steven's Point, Wis., some years since, under the labors of Eld. H. V. Reed. Later she was deeply interested in the Advent office at Buchanan, and THE TIMES, of which she was a constant reader, even on her sick bed, till the last week of her life. She often expressed the comfort it gave her, and only wished that she had the means to help in its wider circulation. Her wish was to see me before her death, and had I not been in the far West, I should have spared no pains to have visited her, and ministered the consolations of the gospel. But this was not permitted. Sr. Lloyd sleeps in Jesus. We shall see her no more till the Lord comes.

Just before her death she was asked what text should be used for the funeral sermon. She repeated the following words: "For I know that my Redeemer liveth," and its context. [Job. 19: 25-27.] Mr. Burkholder, the Baptist minister, conducted the funeral services. Many who will read these lines have shared, with us, Sr. Lloyd's generous hospitalities. Her memory is blessed. WE have received a sample of Eastman's Penman's Assistant, a novel instrument for giving correct position and movement in writing, and also a rest and support to inexperienced hands. We are told that it meets with immense success where it is introduced, and that active and responsible agents are wanted in every section of the country: an article of such general utility must meet with a rapid sale, making an agency for the same a very desirable employment. Full particulars may be obtained by addressing, enclosing stamp, H. G. Eastman, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. A Sample set will be sent on receipt of $1 and 35 cents for postage. Send for a descriptive circular.

THE QUARTERLY.—The January number of "The Advent Christian Quarterly," edited by Wm. L. Himes and J. H. Whitmore, discusses, Ancient Jewish Opinion—Satan's Estimate of Sin—Is the Soul a Separate Entity?—Scriptural Doctrine of a Future Life—The Ethics of Eternal Punishment, and Preaching to Spirits in Prison. We had not seen a number of this serial for many months, but on comparing No. 3 of Vol. II with one of the earlier issues, we should judge that there was an improvement in the appearance of the work, though the leading doctrine advocated is the same—the unconscious state of the dead, and the ending of the being of the wicked. Viewed from our stand-point we could wish it were more orthodox. Published in Buchanan, Mich., at $1.00 a year.—Advent Herald.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, ... MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 14, 1871.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: { Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" the personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed, the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead, their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil; the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. R. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. Russell, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent, to whom all communications should be addressed.

A Colporteur's Notes.

We have just published a little pamphlet with the above title for Dr. J. B. Wadsworth, the well-known pedestrian Advent Colporteur, whose walks through the South interested us so much within a year or two. It gives some incidents of his travels, and an exposition of the faith, with other matter. Sent post paid for 10c. tf.

Registered Letters.

We cannot advise our correspondents to send us money in "registered letters." They are no safer than letters sent in the ordinary way. If you cannot obtain a post office order, send us a bank draft, the draft, or in the ordinary way. Your 15c paid for registering does not insure safety. Over a thousand registered letters were stolen last year, and the government makes no restitution in case of loss.

Woman and her Work.

This is a monthly journal of 16 pp., established for the purpose of enlarging the sphere of woman's usefulness, especially in that department which becomes her so well, Christian charity. Published at Concord, N. H. Mrs. T. F. Sargent, Editor; assisted by Mrs. E. S. Jennings, Mrs. H. B. Hastings, and others.

Single copies, $1 a year. Address Mrs. T. F. Sargent, Box 421, Concord, N. H.

N. B.—New subscribers to both papers, will receive THE TIMES (weekly) and Woman and her Works (monthly) for $2.50 a year. Six months for $1.15. tf

The C. & R. I. R. R.

I returned home from my late Western tour over this great thoroughfare from Omaha to Chicago. It connects directly with the great Pacific road, and forms a very important link in the continuous line of railroad now extending from ocean to ocean across the continent. It is furnished with splendid cars, and every pains is taken to secure the comfort and even the ease of passengers. Persons traveling West will find this one of the best routes. Those seeking homes on the prairies will find some of the finest lands of the Northwest on this route. Mr. Hugh Riddle, of Chicago, is the General Superintendent, and spares no pains in accommodating the traveling public. J. V. H.

The Times.

AT HOME.

Suicide, say the N. Y. Times, has come to be so common an affair now-a-days as to attract very little attention. However, one man, in California, who hired three Indians to bury him alive, succeeded in attracting some notice. In fact, his intention was discovered, and he was actually dug up in time to save his life. But, by the way, why may it not be that the reason why some folks think the world is growing better, is because we are becoming so used to latter day sins that their enormity does not appear.—The latest appearances of "ghosts" have been in Virginia and Colorado. In the place they are charged to the disturbance of an old Indian burying ground. These are the latest immaterialist phenomena, and are to be received cum grano salis.—In view of the facts in the case the following item reads queerly: "A sermon delivered in South Carolina in July, 1861, has just been reprinted in Portland, Me. The preacher said 'The triumphs of Christianity rest, this very hour, on slavery; and slavery depends upon the triumphs of the South. The hand of God has severed this nation to perpetuate this institution, and is inflicting judicial punishment on the people who have attempted to violate his decree: "Ham shall be a bondsman." The war is the servant of slavery.'"—Very serious fires are reported in different parts of the country. Last Thursday almost the entire village of Tioga, Pa. was destroyed.—But the most terrible fire of all was on last Tuesday, on the Hudson River R. R. near New Hamburg. As the oil-train passed that place an axle of one of the cars broke, and threw a portion of the train from the track on the bridge. Just at that moment the express train from New York dashed up, ran into the wrecked oil-car, and in an instant the oil took fire, and in a few moments the engine, several cars and the bridge were wrapped in flames, and shortly after the bridge gave way, precipitating, with the rest of the wreck, one sleeping car into the stream below. Only one passenger escaped from this car. The engineer of the express was literally boiled, or burned, in oil, and in all 21 lives were lost.—Serious fears for the safety of the U. S. Steamship Tennessee, with the San Domingo Commission on board, are entertained. It is quite certain that some accident has occurred to the vessel; but it is hoped it may not have been fatal.—The national debt statement for January shows a reduction during January of $4,040,986.75; coin balance, $92,066,500; currency, $24,827,788.84.—A hotel at Kenosha, Wis., was burned Jan. 31, and five souls perished in the flames.

ABROAD.

Russia.

In a pamphlet published by Count Krasinski in London in 1854, this sentence occurs:

"The great mistake which Russia committed in the pursuit of her schemes of aggrandizement,—that which, as present events seem to prove, has rendered her power more apparent than real,—is, I believe, that instead of preparing for her external increase by the development of her internal resources, she commenced by the former instead of the latter; or, to use a homely expression, she began at the wrong end. Hence the weakness of her position in many conquered provinces, the inefficiency of her naval armaments, and the wretched state of her internal administration. These premature external developments of Russia may be not inaptly compared to the parasite offshoots of a tree, which, absorbing its sap, prevent the tree from acquiring a vigorous growth, and are usually on this account lopped off by the gardener. The truth of this has probably flashed more than once on the minds of the monarchs and statesmen of Russia."

All this was true enough when uttered, but it is by no means true to-day. Since Sebastopol fell, however blind before, Russia has discovered her "great mistake," and largely, if not completely, remedied it. Such a criticism cannot now lie against her. Fifteen years devoted with unswerving aim, and with unstinted expenditure of money and labor, to the work of internal improvement, have prepared her to repel not only all attacks, but to precipitate herself, southward, at least, with almost invincible force. Railroads, bridges, military roads, and all the appliances of warlike preparation and strategy have been made the business and the study of the ruling monarch during all these years. Not only have internal improvements been prosecuted to completion, but arms, and supplies, and men are all at hand in profuse abundance. While able to surpass any nation in Europe, perhaps in the world, in the number of men available for war, she has for years been busy in preparing for them a perfect equipment, as American armories can avouch. It is doubtful if any one of the great Powers of the earth is so fully furnished for warlike work; and, considering the pressure of home affairs upon most of her rivals, and the indisposition of the rest to provoke the lasting wrath of such a nation, it need be no marvel if Russia should conclude that Turkey's extremity had become her own opportunity.

England.

The Queen opened parliament on Thursday. Her speech has two items of special interest. One is that the Alabama Claims and the fishery question are to be referred to a Special Commission, as agreed to by our government, and the other, an intimation that the revelations of the late war, demand an increased expenditure on the part of England for army and navy purposes, which the Queen hopes will be graciously submitted to, inasmuch as it cannot be helped.—The Conference at London on the Eastern Question drags its slow and useless length along. Meanwhile Russia will do as she pleases.—In the budget about to be submitted to Parliament, estimates for the expenses of the army amount to £15,851,700 an increase of £2,886,700 over those of last year. The force of the regular army is to be brought up to 131,290 men, an increase of 19,930. Provision is made for the surveying of defensive positions around London, and between that city and the seacoast. New fortifications are also proposed to be built at Dover and Harwick, and on the Island of Malta.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

"The Book of Job contains a passage which is said to have been taken verbatim from an ancient Chinese work: 'Oh, that my words were now written! Oh, that they were printed in a book; that they were graven with an iron pen, and lead in the rock forever,'" says a newspaper item: which reminds us that there are a great many things "said," which are not true.—"The first Ecclesiastical Canon in Europe for the baptism of Babes," was A. D. "514." "The first law, A. D. 769."—"Dipping not Baptizing," is the title of a tract published by the Methodist Tract Society which winds up fifty pages with the following result in small capitals: "The practical conclusion of the whole matter is, that sprinkling, pouring or applying the water to the person is now the only proper, Scriptural and valid mode of Christian baptism; and that dipping, immersion, or applying the person to the water, is not valid, proper or Christian baptism at all."—There are now two trials for heresy pending before the Scotch Presbytery. In one case a minister of the Established Kirk is charged with recommending confession and absolution; in another case a minister of the United Presbyterians is articled for teaching that our Lord preached to the dead in the intermediate state.—Abp. Spalding speaks of this nineteenth Council in a recent lecture as the greatest ever assembled. "Nearly a hundred different languages were spoken; but no difficulty was experienced, as the proceedings were all conducted in Latin. There were forty original bills before the Council, but only two had been finally acted on, although others were under way when the recess took place. So particular were the members, that an entire day was spent on the particular location of a comma in a sentence, and the final vote was not taken until the next day."—It is said that the Rev. Dr. Pusey is founding a new community of Anglican nuns, "who are to be entirely clad in pure and spotless white." If the "order," now, could only make sure of that spiritual quality which the spotless robe in Scripture symbolism represents.

THE CONQUEST OF FRANCE.

THE EFFORTS OF THE PROVINCES.

"From the beginning of the siege of Paris, the "Military Micawber" who waited there for something to turn up, depended less on his own undisciplined masses than on the armies which it was known were forming in the Provinces. The hope which inspired their resolution was a vain one; nevertheless, the grand and heroic efforts of the Provinces almost warranted the confidence reposed in them. The Republic, which had come into power on Sept. 4, had not an army to contend against the victorious half million of Germans on French soil. Only an unorganized mass of enthusiastic volunteers rushed to the rescue. These had to be disciplined, uniformed, armed, and, most difficult task of all, taught the use of weapons, which for twenty years had been forbidden them. The Minister of War, Gambetta, escaping from the besieged Capital in a balloon, undertook the organization of the Provincial armies, and, by sheer force of personal character, inspired the Provinces to heroic efforts. He not only gave them renewed energy, but direction, and out of chaos brought three great armies. Camps were established at Lille and Rouen in the north, at Conlie in the west, and at Orleans, Bordeaux, and Lyons in the south; and to these flocked the recruits who had not, undirected and unwisely, huddled in Paris. The formation of the most distant of these camps was not interrupted by the Germans, whose main forces were still engaged before Metz and Paris; but Gen. Von Moltke seems early to have contemplated a dispersal of the forces which were concentrating, with more daring than discretion, at Orleans, only forty miles in the rear of his position south of Paris. A small army, detached from the investing force at Versailles, under Gen. Von Der Tann, advanced upon Orleans on Oct. 10, surprising the French advance at Artenay on that day, and driving the main body of the Army of the Loire out of Orleans on the following day. Beyond Orleans Von Der Tann durst not venture, and the result of the expedition was simply to push the recruiting French a little farther south. At the same time, Von Der Tann's right became exposed to attack from the troops forming at Conlie, behind Le Mans, and thus he was placed on the defensive in a position which demanded his utmost vigilance. He was glad to remain quiet until a month later, when the surrender of Metz gave him promise of large re-enforcements from the disengaged army of Prince Frederick Charles. No sooner had this event occurred (Oct. 26) than Von Moltke resolved on the dispersal of the French armies in the Provinces. Von Steinmetz's old army, recruited to 75,000 or 80,000 men, was given to Gen. Manteuffel, and directed against the camps about Lille and Rouen and the fortified positions in the North. Prince Frederick Charles, with the old Second Army, was pushed westward with orders to disperse D'Aurelles, below Orleans, and Chanzy at Conlie or Le Mans. Von Werder was already forcing the advance guard of the Lyons army further southward, and debouching from the Vosges into the Saone Valley.

The French Minister of War at Tours no sooner heard of the surrender of Metz than he resolved (after absurdly stopping in his rage to outlaw Bazaine and set a price on his head) to throw the Army of the Loire in overwhelming force on Von Der Tann before Prince Frederick Charles could come up, hoping to crush him and perhaps reach the rear of the investing line about Paris. Some sort of unity of action appears to have been secured by communication with Trochu by carrier pigeons, but all plans failed. Chanzy and D'Aurelles were hastily concentrated for the attack, the former making also a flank movement from Le Mans to the rear of Von Der Tann's position at Artenay. But the German was too well aware of the danger menacing him to relax in vigilance. Constant reconnoissances of his cavalry warned him of the French movement, and, though forced to abandon Orleans on Nov. 9-10, he did not yield without a struggle, which delayed the French advance and hastened the approach of Prince Frederick Charles from Metz. When again D'Aurelles was prepared for advance, he encountered in the initial movement of his left wing at Beaune Le Rotron (Nov. 25) the best troops of the German Prince, and was at once brought to a halt. The sortie of Ducrot at Paris (Nov. 30), made with the understanding that D'Aurelles would by that time have forced his way to a junction near the city would have been thus rendered vain if other circumstances had not already prevented its success. Three days after his repulse at Beaune Le Rotron, D'Aurelles was attacked by Prince Frederick Charles (Dec. 3), and Orleans again occupied (Dec. 5), with heavy loss to the French of 10,000 men, 77 guns, and four gunboats. The Army of Loire was thus cut in two, one-half being forced south toward Bourges, and the other, fighting desperately, toward Le Mans. The French Minister of War endeavored to conceal this violent disruption of his best army by promptly issuing an order creating two armies of it, one under Bourbaki, former commander of the Imperial Guard, and the other under Gen. Chanzy. This defeat was commented upon as "a blessing in disguise" by Paris papers, one of which, determined to see only the bright side of things, exultingly declared, "We have now two great armies where was only one before." Gambetta made the further great mistake of sending the escaped forces under Bourbaki on an ill-considered expedition against Von Werder in the Vosges, instead of concentrating it upon Chanzy in the west. This expedition was a complete—almost absurd—failure, and after a few minor successes Bourbaki was beaten Jan. 11 before Belfort, the siege of which he had sought to raise, and fled toward Lyons to escape capture by a force moving from Troyes. This army reached and attacked Dijon on Jan. 22, but subsequently moved southward and established itself upon Bourbaki's line of retreat. The French, thus caught between the two armies of Von Werder and Manteuffel—transferred to the command of the force from Troyes—was, at latest dates, expected by the Germans to surrender. Chanzy managed to concentrate his half of the Army of the Loire at Le Mans, but only in time to have it driven with severe losses still farther from the capital which it had been organized to relieve. Prince Frederick Charles attacked Chanzy here in large force on Jan. 11, and by concentration late in the afternoon of the 12th forced his left from its position and carried the town. Chanzy fled westward, pursued closely by the Prince, and escaped only by the sacrifice of 25,000 or 30,000 men in prisoners alone. The battle was decisive of the struggles in the Provinces, and forever broke the forlorn hope on which Paris depended.

Meantime, Manteuffel in the north had attacked the French under Gen. Faidherbe, and had broken up his camps and almost dispersed his army. On Nov. 27 he defeated him near Amiens, and the next day occupied that city, and on Dec. 5 that of Rouen. Faidherbe rallied, and again attempted to advance toward Paris, but was beaten again Dec. 22-23 at Pont de Noyelle. He retired toward Lille, his base of supplies, and reunited his forces sufficiently to enable him to again advance a month later. But on Jan. 19 he encountered Gen. Von Goeben, who had succeeded to Manteuffel's place, at St. Quentin, and was beaten in a battle not less disastrous than that which had broken Chanzy's army at Le Mans. His line was cut in two, and his army, after losing 15,000 men, fled in a demoralized condition to Lille.

Thus ended in complete discomfiture the great efforts of the Provinces. Sublime in their enthusiasm and faith, these raw recruits deserved wiser direction and a better fate; but what other than defeat was to be expected under the circumstances? There was no time, after Prince Frederick Charles' army was relieved from the siege of Metz, that the Provinces were competent to force their bloody way to Paris.

THE BOMBARDMENT OF PARIS.

It was not credited for many weeks after the investment of Paris had been completed that the Germans seriously contemplated the bombardment of the city, but trusted for its reduction to that grim ally, Famine. Few suspected that the resources of Paris could sustain its immense population more than a month or two. Indeed, Gen. Trochu never claimed that the city was provisioned for more than two months, and he seems not to have suspected its real strength in this regard. The administration of Paris in this respect has certainly been most admirable, and those who organized the system of food distribution deserve infinite credit. But it is now known that, spite of this economical distribution of the public supplies, Paris early began to suffer from the lack of good provisions. Of bread and wine there was enough and to spare, but by the beginning of November the beef supplies were gone. On the 16th of the same month the supply of horseflesh had been reduced, by the consumption of the animals of the great Company of Undertakers which buried Paris in its days of peace and pomp by Government contract, to about 40,000 horses, and before Christmas week had set in these had been consumed. Mule meat was the next resort, and supplies of this sold, before the holidays were over, at $3 per pound. Domestic animals were devoured as early as Dec. 1, but not in large numbers; and it was not until the supply of mule meat ran low that cats and dogs commanded extravagant prices—$1.50 per pound—or were generally consumed. Rats and mice were never resorted to by the public generally, though there were well authenticated instances of their appearance on the stalls of the Paris butchers. Every indication pointed to the early submission of the city from this cause alone, when the Germans, having completed their preparations, opened the bombardment.

Their preparations had been begun at an early stage of the siege. The batteries planted "south and west of Paris," wrote Gen. W. B. Hazen from Versailles, "were near enough to bombard any part of the city." During the last week of October "a park of heavy guns, such as all other siege parks ever known bear no comparison with," reached Versailles, and was planted to bear upon the southern line of forts. The siege guns on other parts of the line were not, however, in position to begin the bombardment until the middle of December, and it was not until the day after Christmas that the first fire was opened. The French fort on Mont Avron, seized and fortified during Ducrot's sortie of Nov. 30, was the first position attacked. The French fort on Mont Avron, seized and fortified during Ducrot's sortie of Nov. 30, was the first position attacked. The fire of four batteries of Krupp's cannon reduced it after two days' bombardment, and it was occupied on Dec. 29, and a battery commanding the forts on the east of Paris, and capable of throwing projectiles beyond the walls of the city, was at once erected upon it. Forts Rosny, Noisy, and Romainville were soon after silenced from this work, but were not seized by the Germans, nor, indeed, abandoned by the garrisons. On Jan. 5, the batteries south of the city were opened on Forts Issy, Vanves, and Montrouge, and the first two were silenced after a brief bombardment, and the third ceased to reply on the 11th. What purpose inspired the Germans to this bombardment we are yet to learn. That it was futile as against Paris is apparent; indeed, it cannot be said that the city was really subjected to a determined shelling. As against the forts the fire was effective, and established the superiority of Krupp's cannon; but no effort was made to take possession of any of the regular forts whose fire had been silenced. Indeed, it seems more than likely that the whole purpose of the bombardment was to satisfy German public opinion, which HAD clamored for action, and to convince the Parisians that the threats of bombardment had not been made without the power to carry them out. The Germans contented themselves with closely guarding every avenue of escape, repulsing every sortie made by the French. The last of these, attempted on Jan. 19, was a signal failure, resulting in the loss of 6,000 Frenchmen, and inflicting a loss on the Germans of only as many hundreds. The Government of Paris was demoralized by this failure, Trochu was dismissed from command, and M. Jules Favre, despairing of further resistance, repaired to Versailles to negotiate the surrender which had evidently been resolved on as unavoidable. This occurred Jan. 27.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

In accordance with the motion of adjournment at the last Annual Meeting in Amboy, Ill., Sept. '70, there will be a meeting of the Western A. C. Publishing Association, at Amboy, Ill., in connection with the General Conference, commencing Thursday, March 23, at 9 a. m. As this will perhaps be one of the most important meetings the Association has yet held, it is desired that there should be a full attendance, especially of the original members. Let us have a rally of our business men and the ministry in behalf of the business of the cause of truth. Come, and come early. WM. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

Lyman S. H., Wis., near Brs. Robinson and Verbick, eve. March 2.

Vannes S. H., near Br. Reeder's, as Eld. Shears may arrange, eve. March 3.

Prairie du Sac, Sunday, March 5, morn and eve. as brethren may arrange.

Castle Prairie, eve. March 7.

N. A. HITCHCOCK.

The church in New York city meet at 126 West 24th St., not 34th St., as was inadvertantly stated in these columns.

Cecil, Ohio, March 4, eve. and over Lord's day, and once in four weeks until further notice.

A. E. BABCOCK.

Near Clark's Hill, Ind., Feb. 17, and over the following Sunday, as Brs. Boyd and Davis may arrange.

Near Windfall, March 4, and over Sunday, as Br. Junk may arrange, and the first Sunday in each month until further notice.

E. C. ANDRUS.

Afton, Ill., Sunday, Feb. 19.

Milan (Br. White's S. H.) Feb. 26, at 11 a. m.

Johnson's Grove, Feb. 26, at 7 p. m.

Genoa Conf. Wednesday, March 1.

Loda, Iroquois co. Thursday, March 9, and over two Sundays.

Jonesboro, Union co. March 26.

I propose propose to remain in Union co. for two weeks, and longer if the interest demands.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 21, 1871.

What will result from this European war? Some would fain believe it a step or a stride toward the temporal millennium. But we may judge of the future only by the past. And the past shows that war is a great evil. It may sometimes be the choice of two evils: or the result of oppression and governmental iniquity; but war itself is still a demoralizer. And as the late civil war seriously and sadly affected the morals of the land, so Europe must suffer in the same direction from the present conflict. Every European nation seems to be preparing for war. Says Zion's Herald:

Another outcome of the war is the arming and training of all Europe as never before. So far from peace principles prevailing, war principles will yet more prevail. Mr. Phillips well says, "Prussia has put forty-five million of years into this war; fifteen millions of her people have been withdrawn three years from all other pursuits, and devoted exclusively to military training." England and France and Austria are far less severe; so this bully, being the best trained, easily pummels the rival bully, whose weight may equal, but whose flesh is pulpy and who strikes at random. New England, as well as France, must drill. They must put these forty and fifty millions of years into this training. They must become more and more military powers. Prussia necessitates it. Not her schools, or faith, alone or chiefly, but her soldiering has given her the preeminence. Drill has done it; science and system in soldiering.

—A few years since, European statesmen felt that the expense of armaments, alone, would force the nations of that continent into peaceful measures. General peace has been boldly predicted on this very ground. But instead of a reduction of armaments, they are to be increased. The monarchs of Europe mean to make every man a soldier.

THE Advance indulges a jibe at the expense of "special interpreters of the Apocalypse," in an ironical suggestion that Paris, not Rome, is the Babylon of Revelation; and suggest sundry applications of the facts of the present war to prophecy, to be as good as any others.

We would suggests to the Advance that it had better learn the first principles of prophetic interpretation, before it scoffs at the students of prophecy. When a city is introduced as a symbol, it does not symbolize a literal city. It may, very possibly, include the city as the seat of the church symbolized; but it does not represent a city, as such. If Paris were the seat of an Ecclesiastical power, it might possibly be "Babylon." As it is, it is only one of "the streets" of that great Apocalyptic city, whose seat is yet at Rome.

The Catholics seem to understand the vulnerable points of Protestantism. Witness the following quotation from the report of a recent lecture by a New York priest.

The lecturer then went on to show that most of the Protestants derived their forms of belief, not from the Bible, but from the teachings of Luther, Calvin, or Knox, and that on this account they accepted the dogmas of the disciples of these men, with far greater avidity than they would receive the direct testimony of Peter or James, were it possible for them to appear once again in the world. He then drew a picture of the consternation which the appearance of St. Peter and St. James would create in a fashionable church; the terror of the minister; the disgust of the people; and predicted a fearful falling off of pew-rents should such strange doctrines be promulgated. Peter, they would say, is more a Hindu than a Protestant.

IT is well to know, says the New York Tribune, what "the Spiritists" propose to do next—what, as they say, is "before them." This knowledge we get from a seer, who writes to a "Spiritist" newspaper that the work is "to enthuse all humanity with a new religious devotion"—to discover truth; "and if the way be not known, to discover the way," &c., &c. "To the discovery of the discovery of the discovery, they devote themselves"—and a nice little task, it seems to us, have they undertaken. But then the game is worth the candle, after all, for when the triple discovery is complete, what will happen? Why, "the hierophantic souls will sail down the picturesque vistas of protoplasm to the shore of the anagogies."

BECAUSE everyone may not be able to answer all objections to Christianity that unbelief has invented, it by no means follows that we should allow our faith to be shaken, or our minds to be filled with doubts. The basal facts of Christianity are established by sufficient evidence. Objections upon minor points are easily invented, and if not always immediatly answered, the the answer has eventually come. We can better afford to wait, than to be thrown into doubt by ingenious skepticism. A writer in Zions' Herald well says:

Young disciples, when driven to a conflict with an opposer of religion, often allow themselves to be put in the witness-box to answer all the questions and meet all the objections that the artful have invented against Christianity; and if they are embarrassed or puzzled, their antagonist assumes a haughty attitude and shouts "Victory."

It is easier to ask questions than to answer them. Give Antichrist his full time in the witness-box, and a defeat may be turned into victory as soon as Winchester was regained when Sheridan rode from "twenty miles away." Your enemy will exchange the confidence of a Cæsar for timidity worthy of his cause.

PROF. BENNETT has been lecturing in Eastern cities on monumental theology—i. e. the religious teachings found in monumental inscriptions, sculpture and paintings. He is reported as saying:

Gibbon has attempted to account for the spread and influence of Christianity without admitting its Divinity. Attempts have been made to show that the old Greeks tried so to array their graves as to dispel all gloom. But all that has been shown, only proves that the heathen felt that death made the body so loathsome that even the gods could not look upon it without pollution, while the Christians still loved it. While the Greeks burned it, preserving only the ashes, the Christians arrayed and carefully entombed it. The resurrection of the body of Christ, which the apostles preached, shed glory into the graves of his saints.

Yes, the resurrection of Jesus (not of his body, only,) "shed glory into the graves of his saints" because it demonstrated a future immortal life for them. (1 Cor. 15.) On this their hope rested, and not upon the notion of natural immortality. The resurrection of Christ was a weighty fact. The reasonings of Plato and Socrates were unsatisfying, unsustained theories. The apostles preached the resurrection: and the early church loved the hope of Jesus' return to raise the sleepers. They have been succeeded by preachers of immaterialism; and the personal return of the Bridegroom has ceased to be a consummation ardently longed for by the professed bride. She has a new marriage custom—and wants to work here as long as possible, and then go to the Bridegroom. Will he be pleased with this reversal of his plan? We think not.

ROME is still alive, and still at work. Her principal successes appear to be in Protestant countries. We have already referred to the successful manœuvres that have made Romanism almost the state religion of New York. The New German empire, and even the Premier of England have shown a disposition to coquette with the assumer of infallibility. But it is in England especially that the Papacy is achieving its greatest work. The Rock (London) in a late issue says:

Under Elizabeth, the Protestantism of the country was defended by the vigilance and vigor of the State; under James the second it was vindicated by the healthy (and therefore energetic) action of the church. It was reserved for our own times to sustain the shock of both dangers at once. For the last thirty years there has been, on the part of Rome, almost unimpeded progress towards the culmination of political power, accompanied by an altogether unprecedented success in the business of ecclesiastical and spiritual perversion. One by one the few remaining securities obtained at the Revolution disappear before our eyes; while the church, which should resist these encroachments, becomes less Protestant every day. How Popery has acquired and used the balance of power in the House of Commons Cardinal Wiseman told us at Malines; and even without the confession of Dr. Manning, it has long been evident, that among those who eat the bread of the church of England there is a compact phalanx whose allegiance is paid to Rome. It is the secret combination, the simultaneous action, of these two forces, stealthily yet steadily advancing by different lines upon a common center, that we have to fear. The invasion with which we are threatened is more formidable than fifty Armadas; for in our very midst there is a host of traitors who eagerly welcome its approach. Is this a time to indulge the dolce far niente of indolent inaction? Are we never to profit by the wisdom of the past? Shall we persist in disregarding the lessons of truth until they are enforced by the penalties of bitter experience?

THE Rev. Mr. Moule, for many years a resident of China, publishes most interesting facts concerning their theology. We quote from the Independent:

They believe every one has three souls. At death one of these passes to judgment, one remains in the family shrine, and the other goes with the corpse to the grave. These spirits require food and clothing; and this want is to be met by burning gold and silver paper imitations of money. The spirits of those not buried wander about in misery and become ghost-beggars; and, to prevent annoyance from this source, it is said $150,000,000 are annually paid in all the empire to one called "the King of Beggars." Forbidding such worship, Christianity is charged with perpetuating the misery of the dead. It seems the Chinese also have faith in a purgatory—a most lucrative mine to their priesthood, as to the Roman Catholic, and furnishing a sort of bridge between them.

Maranatha.

"Our Lord is coming." Dr. Macduff, following Dean Alford, understands the word "come" in that familiar verse, "The Spirit and the Bride say, come. And let him that heareth say, come" as a response to the Lord's own words a little before; "Behold, I come quickly." There are some reasons for this; the principal of which is that the theme of these concluding verses seems to be so much the Lord's coming. The last words of the Book, the final utterances of inspiration, relate to this supreme event which ought to be, if it is not, the great central object of human expectation. The verse in question acquires fresh impressiveness, if we may venture to understand it as proposed. Responding, then, to the Lord's word, "Behold, I come," the Spirit, whose wonder-working fills up the age of his absence, cries "come!" the church, the Bride, expectant and desirous, cries "come!" and every soul that is made to know of this great hope is bidden to join its own eager petition, "come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

The words that immediately follow in the verse might seem, at first, hardly to admit of this construction—"Let him that is athirst come." Inasmuch as this is so evidently an address to those who hear the gospel— an invitation—the previous sentences may be thought to be the same. And still, it is possible to view them as introduced by a transition whose abruptness is not so great as it at first seems. The Lord is coming; let, then, every thirsty soul come also; come to meet him. Come to the position and attitude where it may welcome him. Come into the company of those who are looking for and hasting unto his appearing.

We refer to this merely as. as interesting view of the passage, proposed by writers whose opinions on such a subject are entitled to all respect. Whether it be accepted or not, the words of the Lord himself, about which there can be no question, are all the same precious; "Behold, I come quickly." Oh! how does the whole creation, indeed, travail in pain together, waiting for the redemption that draweth nigh! How much is the coming of the Great Prince of the kings of the earth needed? What reason have the Lord's people to cry, "Why do his chariot wheels linger?" Too little, indeed, is it realized that the Lord's coming is the world's hope. The ancient faith, and the ancient yearning in this regard are in a great degree lost. Our religion is far less a religion of hope than it once was. But this does not change the fact. We have written at the head of this article a word that should be the motto and watchword of all Christians —Maranatha, "the Lord is coming."—Standard.

Interpretation and Fulfillment

Interpretation and fulfillment are often confounded, and sometimes by persons who ought to know better. Let us hear Webster's testimony regarding the words that head this article: "Interpret, to explain." "Interpretation, explanation; version." "Fulfill, to accomplish; to carry into effect." "Fulfillment, performance." To these we shall add the word prophecy, and again hear Webster: "Prophecy, to foretell, as events; to predict." "Prophecy, prediction." Here are three words wholly distinct in signification, yet requiring a certain order in relation to each other. The order is, first, THE PROPHECY—something foretold in either words or symbols; second, THE INTERPRETATION—an explanation of the words or symbols; third, THE FULFILLMENT—the performance of that foretold.

In regard to the first of these there can be no mistake. The fact that God alone is the author of every prophecy is a sufficient guarantee in this particular. In regard to the third there can be no failure: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away," said Jesus in his great prophetic discourse. (Matt. 24: 35.) In regard to the second there can be mistake—there can be failure! There has been mistake—there has been failure! The fulfillment of a prophecy does not depend upon its interpretation. It will be fulfilled in its time, whether interpreted or not. For the prophecy and the fulfillment God is responsible; for the interpretation man is responsible. Man may err: God cannot. Man may fail; God cannot.

From the above it is quite evident that our business is to interpret, to explain the prophecies. We should not be in too great haste to find fulfillments. The prophecies will all "be fulfilled in their season." (Lk. 1: 18–20.) God will attend to the fulfillment; let us attend to the interpretation. That is his; this is ours. If our interpretations are such as to make one prophecy contradict another, we may feel certain of being in error at one or more points. Interpretations, when correct, do not contradict each other.

The interpretation of the language of literal and figurative prophecies is no more difficult than the interpretation of the language of an ordinance; and, we may add, not more frequently misinterpreted. The symbolic prophecies are more difficult to be understood. But what do we mean by misinterpret? "Misinterpret, to explain erroneously." "Misinterpretation, interpreting erroneously." (Webster.) Take the word baptize: are all the conflicting interpretations given of it correct? No one will say they are. Conflicting interpretations cannot be correct, whether of an ordinance or of a prophecy. If misinterpretation is erroneous interpretation, what prominent part of the whole Bible has escaped such? Are all the interpretations of faith correct? of church? of Christian? of bishop? of eternal? of hell? None so rash as to answer affirmatively. These misinterpretations have been of daily occurrence for hundreds of years. Most of the various religious denominations owe their existence to the misinterpretations of the Bible; and mostly, if not entirely, on those parts not prophetic. We seldom, if ever, find a denomination that owes its existence to the misinterpretation of prophecy, while the world is full of conflicting denominations sustained by the misinterpretation of one or more of the other parts of the Bible! We do not state with what denominations these misinterpretations are found, but only that misinterpretations sustain various conflicting denominations. Correct interpretations could not produce divisions. These many religious denominations are a standing commentary upon the misinterpretations of the book of God! And yet the members, in general, of these denominations are horrified at the misinterpretation of prophecy! Why, we inquire with intense earnestness, is it so much worse to interpret the PROPHECIES than to misinterpret any other part of the Bible? Will some one answer us at an early day?

We are frequently told that the prophecies can never be understood, and that it is useless to try. Why not say the same with regard to the other parts of the Bible? Are they correctly understood by all who read them? Nay, verily! But we shall here call special attention to a prophetic declaration but little heeded, though easily understood: "BUT THE WISE SHALL UNDERSTAND," said Gabriel. (Dan. 12: 10.) Understand what? Why, some of the most important prophecies immediately preceding and connected with the second coming of Christ! Men say these prophecies cannot be understood! The angel Gabriel says they can be. Which shall we believe? Of the prophecies it is said, they shall be understood; but where is this said of faith? of baptism? of church? of any other part of the Bible? Where? —Prophetic Key.

The '73 Time Argument.

It is with due regard for the feelings of those with whom I may differ, that I present a few thoughts, intended to show the weakness of the above mentioned argument. It what I may oppose, does not seem to those interested to weaken the argument, I shall only be pleased if they will explain, so as to make the matter clear and harmonious.

Objection first. I think the position which affirms that the three horns must be "plucked up by the roots" prior to the setting up of the abomination of desolation, is assumed. The prophecy simply states the fact, that three of the ten horns shall be plucked up by the little horn; but does not inform us whether this work shall be accomplished before or after the setting up of the abomination. In the explanation by the angel, we read "And he shall subdue three kings." (Dan. 7: 24.) Hence if the Gothic kingdom had been plucked up in A. D. 538, it would be no positive proof that the abomination was set up at that point of time. But suppose the above position to be correct, we will inquire: was the Gothic kingdom plucked up by the roots in 538? and I answer, I hardly understand how such a position could have been taken, when all history agrees that they were only compelled to raise the siege of Rome in that year. Let it be understood that Rome was not the capital of the Gothic Kingdom, but rather Ravenna; and the Gothic army only fell back in the direction of their capital, where they maintained their position until the very last days of A. D. 539, when Belisarius and his army through intrigue, was permitted to enter the Gothic capital. A few days after, in the beginning of the following year, 540, Belisarius was recalled by the emperor, to Constantinople, when he took with him the keys of the capital, together with their king, as trophies of the war. (See [illegible] a kingdom is subdued, simply by loss of a battle? Is a kingdom when its king and its capital remain unharmed, and its army makes head against its enemies for fifteen long years? For all history agrees that the Goths chose a new king, and their army thrice again laid siege to Rome, entered and sacked the city; and were not finally subdued until A. D. 553.

PLUCKED UP BY THE ROOTS,

But again. The argument claims that some extraordinary power was conferred upon the Pope of Rome by Justinian in the year 538, and by that act the following symbolic prophecy, then and there, received its fulfillment—"And the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority." (Rev. 13: 2.) First, let me ask, what government is to receive this "power and seat, and great authority" at the hands of the dragon? If we refer to the context we learn it is that symbolized by the beast which rose up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and which had the appearance of a leopard. Now is it not almost universally admitted that this leopard beast symbolizes the government which had its rise in the eastern division of the Roman Empire, the Greek nation being the first head? And is it not as universally admitted, not only by Adventists, by nearly, if not all comentators, that the dragon symbolizes the Imperial government of Pagan Rome? Then what has the above transaction to do with the Pope in any sense? I answer, nothing whatever. It was a voluntary act of presentation on the part of the civil government of Pagan or Western Rome, and the gift was accepted by the civil government of Eastern Rome, its center and seat being at Constantinople. And in my judgment there is no prophecy in the book of God, whose fulfillment is more clearly marked in history, than is the above. And although I have quoted it in a former article, yet I will now bring it forward again, as it seems necessary to make the point clear. "The unfortunate Augustus was made the instrument of his own disgrace: he signified his resignation to the Senate, and that assembly, in their last act of obedience to the Roman Prince, still affected the spirit of freedom, and the forms of the constitution. An epistle was addressed by their unanimous decree, to the Emperor Zeno, the son-in-law and successor of Leo, who had lately been restored after a short rebellion, to the Byzantine throne. They solemnly disclaimed the necessity, or even the wish to continue any longer in Italy; since in their opinion, the majesty of a sole monarch is sufficient to pervade and protect at the same time, both the East and the West. In their own name, and in the name of the people, they consent that the seat of universal empire shall be transferred from Rome to Constantinople! (Gibbon Vol. 3, p. 512.) The date given in history for the accomplishment of this important transaction, is A. D. 476; more than sixty years earlier than 538 where the '73 time argument claims the prophecy to have been fulfilled. and now I ask the candid reader to judge. Does not the above quotation show a complete fulfillment of the prophecy under consideration? Please notice: The Imperial title, power and authority, together with th[illegible] of universal Empire, was trans[illegible]ed or given by the government [illegible] Pagan Rome, to the government of New Rome, or Constantinople. That transaction to my mind, looks something like the dragon giving his power, his seat, and great authority to the leopard beast.

But the argument claims that the Pope of Rome was vested with some additional power, and that he was [illegible] that year, 538. But let us examine and see if the Pope did actually receive imperial powers and a regal seat, and great authority in the year 538. For the dragon's seat was royal, and his power was imperial; and when the above prophecy is fulfilled, the transfer must consist of what the dragon has to give. History says, during the period of the conquest of Rome and Italy, from A. D. 536 to 553, two popes occupied the Papal chair, namely, Silverius and Vigilius. The first suffered degradation at the hands of Belisarius and his wife Antonia, at the request of the Empress in A. D. 537, by being driven from his See, and left to perish upon a desolate island. The other, Vigilius, the most doubtful character who had at that time occupied the chair of St. Peter, received his appointment through the arts of the infamous Theodora, the wife of the emperor Justinian, and suffered the judicial punishment of his weaknesses and crimes—"persecution, shame, remorse."

Again, the historian sums up the history of the Papal power during this eventful period as follows: "During the conquest of Italy by the Eastern emperors, and for some time after, the Pope was not confronted indeed in Rome by a resident emperor, but was summoned at the will of the emperor to Constantinople, or in Rome rebuked by a victorious general, or an exarch, who, though he held his court at Ravenna, executed the commands of a sovereign accustomed to dictate, rather than submit to ecclesiastical power. At scarcely any period did the Papal authority suffer greater degradation, or were the persons of the Popes reduced to more humiliating subserviency." (Milman's Lat. Chris. Vol. I, p. 471.) Bower also gives the same in substance.

Thus it will be seen that neither the Papal hierarchy, or the Popes, received any additional power or authority; neither were they exalted to a royal seat, during the period from 538 and onward for many years. But they were rather degraded from the exalted position they had occupied under the rule of the Goths. It is true the emperor showed much respect for the Popes when they agreed with him in ecclesiastical matters; but the emperor commanded, and compelled the Popes to accept his definition of the articles of the Catholic councils. And although the Goths had been driven out of Rome, the civil power was not left in the hands of the Pope, (as is claimed) but was exercised by the generals of the Eastern armies, in the name of the emperor Justin, until the final subjugation of the Goths, when the Eastern emperor appointed a provincial ruler, called the Exarch of Ravenna, who exercised the civil government of Rome and Italy in his imperial name.

But again, the '73 time argument claims that the 1260 years of Papal supremacy ended in 1798, because the Pope was taken prisoner in that year, which was just 1260 years this side of 538, where, it is claimed, the period began. Now the Popes have been imprisoned and exiled so many times during the period of Papal history, that the fact of the imprisonment of a Pope in that particular year, seems to lessen its force as a point in the argument. Pope Silverius, mentioned above, died in exile, and Vigilius the next Pope, after suffering great indignities at the command of the emperor, was finally imprisoned and driven into exile for five months. And although he recanted and was permitted by the emperor to start on his return to Rome, he died before reaching the end of his journey. I will mention one other Pope whose imprisonment and exile comes nearer the supposed point of the ending of the 1260 days. I refer to Pope Pius VII., who, after the death of the imprisoned Pope Pius, VI., was elected to occupy the Papal chair, March 13, 1800. Pius VII. continued to exercise the functions of the Papal office, until A. D. 1[illegible] of the Church Rome and the St[illegible] by the French. [illegible] year 1809, the Pope having ventured to disobey the mandates, and defy the menaces of Napoleon, was forcibly seized in his palace, dethroned, imprisoned, and Rome proclaimed the second city of the Empire. This last captivity seems to be a more complete overthrow of the Pope, and the whole Papal system, than the imprisonment and exile of Pius VI. in A. D. 1798. But it is too late to fit in the argument. And now I repeat what I have said above. I see no force in the argument which ends the 1260 days at the captivity and exile of a Pope of Rome, no matter at what point in its history such an event might transpire. It was not the Pope, neither the Papal Hierarchy, that was to make war on the saints 1260 days; but rather the government symbolized by the leopard beast with seven heads and ten horns. The Papal government is the "mouth" which was given to this leopard beast, which spake great things and blasphemies. And this mouth no doubt counseled the leopard beast government to make war on the saints. And the prophecy affirms that the leopard beast government did make war on the saints 1260 days. Hence in relation to the time when the 1260 days ended, the question is not, when was the Pope taken prisoner, but rather, when did the seventh head of the leopard beast cease to make war on the saints? For the six heads of that beast were to make war during their entire history; but the seventh must continue [margin—make war] only a short space.

☞ For an answer to the above question, I refer you to an article recently published in THE TIMES, giving a history of the rise and fall of the seven heads of the leopard beast, each in their order.

But it is said, you make the seventh head cease to make war on the saints prior to the darkening of the sun in 1780. Certainly; and did not Jesus say—"Immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun shall be darkened?" (Mat. 24.) And yet it is affirmed it was only the tribulation that ended prior to the dark day, and that the 1260 days continued on many years after. But let us briefly examine the affirmation. Does not the Revelator say the leopard beast should make war on the saints 1260 days? and would there not be tribulation as long as the war lasted? If so, then if the tribulation ended prior to the dark day of 1780, so must also the 1260 days' war on the saints. Jesus also says: "Except these days should be shortened, no flesh should be saved." This language indicates that the tribulation would continue the full term of the shortened days. But this position may be looked upon with distrust, from the fact that of necessity the 1260 days' war must have commenced some years before the 1335 and 1290 days. Yet who that has read the history of these times will not admit that the leopard beast government did commence to make war on the different sects, in the interest of the Catholic religion, immediately after Justin was proclaimed emperor in A. D. 518? In some instances he commanded they should be put to death wherever they should be found. In 524 he issued an edict, commanding the Arians to deliver up their church to the Catholics, and their bishops to consecrate them anew. Finally Justinian issued an edict commanding all, whether Jews, Gentiles or Christians, to accept the Catholic faith on pain of death or exile. And history records the fact, that one hundred thousand of his subjects perished under the enforcement of that terrible edict, in the year 532. But notwithstanding all this, I cannot believe the abomination was at that time set up in the sense of the prophecy. In short, it was necessary the beast should make war in the interest of the Catholic religion many long years, before he could set up, or establish that abominable system of worship as the universal law or creed of his vast empire. But, to be brief, I will suggest I do not understand there is an intimation in the prophecy of Daniel that there would be just 1260 days tribulation; yet Jesus clearly refers us to the tribulation of those days spoken of by Daniel the prophet. I admit we read in Dan. 12: 7 about a "time times and a half" but the margin says "a part," which I think is the correct rendering, from the fact that in the answer to the same question reiterated in v. 11, he makes the plain statement that there shall be 1290 days. And as the 1290 days and 1335 days begin together, at the time when the abomination is set up, or established; I conclude that inasmuch as Jesus said the days spoken [illegible] Mat. 24), that the 1290 were shortened so as to end exactly where the 1260 days' war on the saints ended, which was just prior to the darkening of the sun in 1780. I know it has been our position that the 1260 days of the book of Revelations, and the 1335 days of the prophecy of Daniel, commence at the same point of time; and it seems hard to look at the matter in any other light: but when we remember that some eminent commentators commenced the 1260 days in A. D. 606–7, and also that we once held that the seventy weeks, sixty-nine weeks, and sixty-two weeks all had one common commencement; ought we to be too firm in holding to our old position that the 1260 and 1335 days commenced together, especially inasmuch as time has continued so long, that to hold the old position throws the 1260 day period out of harmony with plain statements in the word of God, as shown above?

Again. If the 1260 days did not end until 1798, how can we harmonize that arrangement, with the fact that the two witnesses were slain, if slain at all, prior to that time. For we all agree that the period of 1260 years during which time the two witnesses prophesied in sackcloth, and the period of 1260 years' war on the saints, run parallel; and we read that when they shall have finished their testimony clothed in sackcloth (and the original will not allow of any other rendering), the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, shall make war against them, overcome them, and kill them. Now if they were slain, and lay dead, as I think there is no doubt, during the years from 1791 to 1795, (for every feature of the events presented in the prophecy was fulfilled by the French government during those years), then the 1260 year's war on the saints must have ended prior to that time.

The foregoing are some of [illegible] sons why I cannot accept the [illegible] ation that the 1260 days measure the period from 538 to 1798, and if our tolerant editor permits what I have written to appear for your consideration, in my next, I will give you my views in relation to the abomination, what it is, when, and where it was set up in fulfillment of the prophecy. I do not write to oppose any one. I have great respect for the honest intelligent views of all. My only object is to excite a spirit of kind investigation, that, if possible, a clear light may shine out from the prophetic page to guide us on our journey to the everlasting kingdom. WM. F. COLLIER.

"You Must Die."

The above heading was the subject of an essay written by me in my school-girl days. I was attending school at the seminary in the nearest village to my home. It was nearing the close of the term, and we all were expected to have an essay for the closing exercises. I was troubled for a subject, but at last thought to, as I had done in times previous when in such perplexities, take a ramble along one of the leading roads from the village, and there let my mind wander on any chance object that would meet my eyes, and from that frame my essay. And so I did. This time my path led me toward the village graveyard; and as I neared it, I observed the sky was bright, the hills at a distance purple, and a beautiful golden haze upon them all. It was nearing the last of October. I remember it as if it was but yesterday Every thing was beautiful. Still beneath this beauty lurked an undefined something, hidden sorrow, covered but not concealed.

I stood within the grave-yard gate and thought of the "tribes that slumber in the bosom of the earth." The mind swept across the field and the rustling grass seemed to say, "All these have died." The tall locust that stood by my side at the entrance of the yard, scattering its long leaves over my head from its creaking boughs seemed to say "you to must die." It was true. I knew it. But how forcibly it struck me then! For never before had I given much thought to death.

I sat me down beneath one of the trees and mused; and as I thought I wrote. I thought of the uncertainty of life and the certainty of death. We see evidences of them every day: crape upon some door knob, a hearse before the door; black clothes and mourning vails; yet we look upon death as being so far away. Something to be thought of, but not reached. Dear Reader: Bring the fact closer home. Draw it to you as a friend, and say to yourself plainly, I must die. Let me ask—do not the words sound harsh to you, and cause a strange sensation? Yet as surely as that these have gone before you, shall the coffin lid be fastened down over your face, and you be laid away in the silent grave.

Again I thought, would it not be a strange sight to us (if we could but see it,) that of our own faces in the mask of death: our own busy hands quietly crossed. Yet it is true that that undescribable stillness and paleness of death will cover our features. Those we loved will follow us to our last resting place, and over our lowering coffin will echo those sad words, "Earth to earth and dust to dust." Then the crowd will turn away, some with a careless smile, quickly fading; some with tears which dry as quickly. Then our grave will be filled and overlaid with a sod, a flower be planted and there we must lie and moulder to dust again, and be forgotten. That to me was the saddest thought of all,—to be forgotten. To think of another filling my chair, another doing my little work of love, and my friends forget that it was once performed by my hands; in fact, after a time, to be scarcely thought of. The autumn leaves will fall thickly upon one grave and be left unbrushed away. Winter's chilling frost and snow comes, but their chill makes us no colder, and that shall be our resting place until the great resurrection day.

But, praise be to God, we have a friend in his dear Son that will redeem us from the power of the grave. We shall not be forgotten by him, our Lord and Savior; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and those that have done evil unto the resurrection of condemnation. Job tells us of his hope in a resurrection. So does David when he says—"God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave, for he shall receive me." Isaiah, Ezekiel and Daniel are made to testify on this matter, and in Hosea the Lord says, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave. I will redeem them from death." The New Testament testimonies of the coming of our Lord and the resurrection are too numerous for me to mention here.

Dear Reader: Are you prepared for that future. Is your name written in the Lamb's Book of Life? and have you thought how terrible the consequences of your neglect, if you do neglect the grace of God? "When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and then before him shall be gathered all nations.....And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on his left. Then shall the king say unto those on his right hand, come ye blessed of my father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the earth." Think of the joy, the unbounded happiness we will then have forever with our King. But unless we come to Jesus as a child to an earthly parent confessing our faults, finding mercy and receiving pardon, we will hear those terrible words ringing upon our ears, "Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels."

If you have not already a refuge in Jesus let me beg of you as a friend to seek it at once, and become a citizen of the heavenly Jerusalem. Fly to his bosom, and there find refuge for thy soul. He loves you. For not a sparrow falls to the ground without our Father's notice. And are not ye of much more value than many sparrows?

MARY. H. M.

The Frontier Skeptic.

[We omit "Our Young Folks" department and "Bible Class" this week in order to make room for the following excellent story. ED.

Among the early settlers in an embryo town of the Northwest was a Mr. Blaine, a stalwart pioneer noted for his courage and physical prowess. He was also, though uneducated, intelligent, well-read, and famed for his love of, and ability in debate. His sledge-hammer fist settled many a border quarrel, while his patience under provocation, readiness at repartee, and rough broad eloquence, made him no unworthy opponent in intellectual tournament. An avowed infidel, he boldly challenged the claims of Christianity, and was never better pleased than when he had put to confusion some combative but ill-equipped champion of the cross.

Spring had come. As if by magic, instead of the shroud of snow, and the dead, matted grass, the pairies were covered with flowers and verdure. What a suggestive scene! Mr. Parsons, the resident missionary, inspired by the reawakening of nature, preached a stirring sermon on the resurrection. Tuesday succeeding, a deacon of the newly organized church met him, and with grave countenance said.

"Your sermon last Sunday has caused a great deal of remark. You know the settlers drop in at the hotel of an evening. Last night a large number were there. Blaine was present, and he ridiculed your discourse unmercifully. He sent by me a request that you discuss the doctrine with him publicly. And I don't see how you can get along with his objections."

"What are they?" inquired the preacher.

"He argues that it would defeat justice to raise the body from the grave for purposes of reward and punishment. Because, according to physiology, the human organism undergoes a complete change in all its constituent particles once in seven, if not in every two or three years. Now, if a man dies at forty-nine, which of the seven bodies will come forth at the sounding of the judgment trumpet? And, he asks, Shall the body of the aged person suffer, or be made happy, for what the child-body did, when in the interim there have taken place many total transformations, each one a new creation, wholly distinct from the preceding? He related, to illustrate this scientific fact, that a gentleman recently called on him, who turned out to be an intimate friend in their younger days, but so altered in appearance that Blaine did not recognize him. He affirms that after one of these physiological revolutions we are as much a different being as if just born."

"Was there no one of the company who could answer Mr. Blaine?"

"No," was the reply.

"Well, deacon, don't you worry. I'll see that this matter is properly disposed of," said his pastor, as he bade his official helper a smiling adieu.

Now, "out West," they "fight fire with fire," sometimes. If, for example, the prairie grass is aflame, the pioneer burns towards the approaching conflagration. And the religious pioneer learns to meet error with other than stately sentences shot from the shelter of the sanctuary at non-attending cavillers.

The missionary was not wanting in frontier tact. After a meditative dinner, during which a peculiar twinkle of the eye revealed that his reflections were anything but sombre, he took his way to Mr. Blaine's, a distance of three miles. Back of the worthy's cabin was a strip of woods. Between the latter and the dwelling on the unfenced pairie, a handsome "hobbled" horse was grazing. Warily approaching from the shadow of the trees, Mr. Parsons captured the beast, freed his legs, clapped on a halter, mounted, and pursuing a circuitous course, reached home unobserved, and "tied up" the confiscated steed in his snug log stable.

A few hours elapsed, and Mr. Blaine and son were rushing hither and thither, to learn if any one had seen their horse. Then the settlement was excited by a report that the lost beast had been stolen, for the owner declared that the hobble had been found in the grass, and it "could not have been removed from the limbs of the animal without hands." Search was fruitless, however, the next day at early evening twilight a tumultuous assemblage at the village inn were talking over the occurrence, with a view of devising measures to discover, if possible, the culprit, and protect the settlement against further depredations. While the company was thus occupied, Mr. Parsons came calmly riding into town on Mr. Blaine's horse, and proceeding to the tavern, leisurely dismounted. But he had been seen by a wide-wake urchin, who, anxious to be the first with the news ran into the inn shouting,

"The minister's come, with Mr. Blaine's horse!"

The effect was electrical. Pell-mell rushed the convention out of the doors, Mr. Blaine's huge form foremost. Sure enough, there was the clergyman, quietly hitching the lost horse to a post.

The gratified owner, with a grateful grin ornamenting his sun-burnt face, stepped rapidly forward, saying, "Well, parson, I didn't expect that you'd be the one to recover the critter—where'd you find her?"

"Find who?" returned the minister, in well-affected surprise.

"Why—my horse."

"Your horse!" retorted the missionary; do you pretend that this animal is your property?"

"Oh now, parson, none of your joking; of course she's mine. I could tell her from a thousand." And he walked confidently round the beast, surveying her with a complacent air. "Just her height, build, color, style—one white foot, spot in the forehead—know her as well as I know myself."

"Blaine's horse, and no mistake," echoed the bystanders.

"Gentlemen," gravely observed the preacher, "I trust you will not be rash in your judgment. There is evidently an error somewhere. A remarkable resemblance may exist between this creature and the one my friend, Mr. Blaine, owned; but I think I can prove, even to his satisfaction, that this is an entirely different animal."

"Different!" cried the owner; "here comes my boy; see if he won't recognize her. This way, Daniel."

"Oh, good! there's Nell. Where'd you find her, father?" exclaimed the lad.

"Isn't that sufficient?" asked the father, triumphantly. "And my wife would testify to the same." he added.

"Nevertheless," answered the missionary, "if the crowd will do me the favor to return into the hotel, I will convince them that this is not Mr. Blaine's beast, or surrender the animal to him until we have more light on the subject."

"That's fair," responded several; "let's hear what the parson has to say."

"Now, my friends," said the missionary, after his hearers were seated, "I would like Mr Blaine to inform us how long he has owned the beast now in dispute."

"I bought him seven years ago last spring; my wife and boy will remember about it."

"How long have you been married?"

"Twenty-two years last January; but I don't see what that has to do with case."

"And what is the age of the lad you call your son?"

"Just seventeen," emphatically.

"Gentlemen," remarked the clergyman, "you have heard Mr. Blaine's affirmations. I hope you will give them due weight. I came honestly by the animal he claims, and sincerely desire that he may lose nothing properly belonging to him. But I shall submit evidence showing, first, that Mr. Blaine did not buy this horse; second, that this horse, now claimed by him, he has no ownership in; third, that his testimony and that of the witnesses he cites are unreliable, because he was never legally married, and therefore the lady he lives with is not his wife, and the young man he terms his son is not truly his child."

"What's that!" roared the pioneer, starting up. "Parson, you're gone crazy."

"If I have," mildly answered the missionary, "of course I cannot sustain what I assert, and you'll get the horse; so you can afford to listen."

"The evidence I shall present," he resumed, "is not of the sort commonly received in the Courts, but it is of a kind that neighbor Blaine cannot consistently reject. You have heard of the science of physiology. By it we are taught that the human organism experiences a universal renewing every seven, perhaps every two or three years. Am I correct, Mr. Blaine?"

"Certainly, but what's that to the point?"

"You'll see!

"Now, by Mr. Blaine's statement—and he says his wife and boy will confirm it—he did not buy this horse within the time when this physiological change occurs. It was therefore another Mr. Blaine who made the purchase. Hence it would defeat the purposes of justice for the present Mr. Blaine to claim the reward of what that other Mr. Blaine did in paying the price of the animal. At the end of three or seven years that Mr. Blaine became extinct, and this man bearing the same name is as much a new being as if just brought into the world. He is not, then, the proprietor of this horse. Moreover, the horse that the first Mr. Blaine paid for ceased also to be, at the termination of the seven years. And the existing animal is in all her constituent particles another beast, a colt, so to speak, without sire or dam, dropped full grown by physiological science. What right has Mr. Blaine to this new horse? True, Mr. Blaine professes to identify the animal—and yet he could not identify his old friend, because the fatal physiological transformation had been passed! I should be sorry to question his veracity. But, gentlemen, twenty-two years ago last January, a certain Mr. Blaine was married. Seven years flew by, and his wife ceased to be, physiologically. Another Mr. Blaine sat by the fireside, and another Mrs Blaine sat by his side. Did they live together conjugally? Certainly not, if honest, unless united in marriage. Three times the physiological change came, the present Mr. Blaine and lady being the final result. They pass as husband and wife. Who has seen their marriage certificate? It would 'defeat the purposes of justice,' for this couple to enjoy the privileges of wedded life, on the strength of the ceremony performed twenty-two years ago for the pair then made one. Consider, too, the condition of young Daniel, kept in subjection, and obliged to do duty as a child, when the Mr. and Mrs. Blaine who claim his obedience and service are not the persons of whom he was born, and he not the being that then gladdened the parental hearts. To recapitulate. This Mr. Blaine, according to physiology, is not the Mr. Blaine who bought a horse seven years ago last spring. This horse according to physiology is not the horse that was then purchased. This Mr. Blaine is not the Mr. Blaine, by the same evidence, who was married twenty-two years ago. Daniel Blaine is not the son that was born seventeen years ago. I have therefore demonstrated that the horse claimed by Mr. Blaine is not his, and as they are leading such irregular lives, of what value is their testimony? I rest the case here."

The applause that followed this speech made it plain that the keen-witted frontiersmen saw the point. When the uproar had subsided, Mr. Blaine frankly said,

"Well, parson, I own that you've beat me this time."

"Do you confess that these physiological changes do not destroy personal identity? That if a man, for instance, commits murder at twenty, it would be right to hang him for it at fifty?"

"Yes."

"Do you then give up the physiological objection to the resurrection of the body?"

"Guess I shall have to."

"Then I give up the horse. Gentlemen," he added, addressing the listening group, "Mr. Blaine had often said to me, 'When you want to use my nag, just take her along;' so, wishing last Tuesday to use her for his special benefit, I availed myself of his offer. And as in finding his horse he has found the truth, I trust he will forgive the inconvenience to which my little strategem has subjected him."—Examiner and Chronicle.

W. A. C. P. ASSOCIATION NOTICE.

At the next meeting of the Association the following amendments to the Constitution will be offered for consideration and action:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. The Board of Trustees (or the Association,) shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to ART. III., Sec. 2. But the person filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of ART. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That ART. IV. be amended to read:

ART. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

SEC. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

SEC. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

SEC. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate; and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

ART. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to ART. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make ART. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual of the [illegible]; provided, notice [illegible] the organ of the Association at [illegible] months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

The precise date of the meeting at which these amendments will be considered, has not yet been fixed. It will probably be in March; and may be held in Buchanan.

WM. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

At the Ohio State Conference, Br. C. D. Jefferson proposed to furnish a Mission Tent for the State, provided the Conference furnish two preachers to go with the tent. The following brethren were appointed to solicit pledges for the above purpose, and report to the president of the Conference, on or before the first of Jan., the amount pledged; and if sufficient is pledged, Br. Jefferson will proceed to furnish the tent, and we shall endeavor to put two good and faithful laborers in the field to labor for the cause of truth: A. B. Benedict, Nevada, O.; J. M. Treadwell, Fairfield; Martin Agner, Rockbridge; S. F. Rodgers, Norwalk; A. Mackey, Seal; Martin Bacon Bucyrus; P. T. Light, Plymouth; Dr. H. Koster, New London; Br. Beadly, White House, Lucas Co.; Thos. Boardman, Shiloh; Henry Rust, Stryker; Wm. Sedomall, Pioneer; Geo. English, Montpelier; N. R. Cheadle, Delta; Geo. B. Terwilligar, Antwerp. Dear brethren, now is the time for action. Will you take hold of this matter at once, and report your success, so that we may know what to do? and the Lord will bless you.

E. MCCULLOCH, President of Conf.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 21, 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude to the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

CONCERNING the progress of Spiritism in England, the Hestsays:

The first number of a new "Spiritualist" paper asserts that there are already published in England five periodicals devoted to the exposition and defence of what is termed modern spiritualism; that their combined circulation is very small, and not one of them is a commercial success.

A WRITER in the Christian Observer sensibly remarks that he thinks the earth will not be stricken out of the universe, because "Jesus came to destroy the works of the devil, not his own." Good, say we. And if he could only see that the devil and his works will be destroyed in the very sense the earth will not be, that would be better yet. God made the earth for man; and man will live on it—forever.

ONE can scarcely help being amused when they read in "Campbellite," "Winebrennarian," and other sectarian journals protests against the above and other titles as nick-names, and in the very same papers find more or less frequent allusions to "Soul-sleepers!" An application of the principles referred to in Rom. 2: 21-23 would improve the consistency of such folk. "Soul-sleeper," in the present state of public opinion, is a term of reproach: the other names we have referred to, are not.

WE feel under great obligations to our brethren and sisters who have kept our "Correspondence" department so full for some time past. In many cases we have been compelled to give only "extracts" when the entire letter was excellent. In others we have condensed, and still others we have omitted—not because they were not good, but because the generous space allowed to this department is still limited. Meanwhile we hope that our "pigeon hole" for "Correspondence" will be kept full. When you write on business put in a word of good news, or a few good thoughts for the "Letters and Extracts."

AN editor occupies a singular position. Recently we were found fault with for sometimes appending notes of assent or dissent to articles from our correspondents, on the ground that we ought to leave correspondents perfectly free; and by the very same persons blamed as responsible for the sentiments of [illegible] because we did not say whether we dissented from him. We wish we could please every good brother and sister. But we can not. We try to do as near right as possible, according to our best judgment, and it does not hurt us to be found fault with; because we immediately inquire if the censure is just. If it is we endeavor to improve; if it isn't, we keep on in the right way.

IT is sometimes thought that King James' translators were swayed by their theological prejudices in rendering sheol in the Old Testament, so frequently by the word hell. This is probably a mistake. The simple fact, doubtless is, that the sense of the word hell has been aggravated since their time. The word originally meant about the same as sheol in the Hebrew and hades in the Greek—the grave: and "vain philosophy" used it of the world of ghosts, or shades. But the true sense has come down even to us—to cover in, or hide. In some parts of England the thatch or tiling on a roof is called heling; and our nurserymen talk of heling in trees—i. e. temporarily burying the roots, while they await transportation or transplanting. The Scriptural sense of sheol, hades, and hell, is the general or universal grave; and no fair exegesis can attach any other import to them.

A WORD to preachers from Mr. Spurgeon:

"I recommend every young minister to make preaching his first business. The pulpit is the Thermopylæ of Christendom. Your people may grumble that you don't go about and drink as many cups of tea at their houses as they would like. If you give them good food on the Sabbath they will put up with a great deal. If the Sabbath joint is only a grim scrag of mutton, with plenty of divisions and nothing to divide you will soon discover that your people will not be satisfied. In the next place, do not neglect visitation. It is true that I cannot visit my 4,450 members. But my visitation is done by the elders.

—That means hard study, and patient work. "Good food" isn't to give your people substantially the same sermon, every time you speak, however good it may be in itself. There is a great deal of food in God's storehouse, but it involves patient labor on the part of God's stewards to bring it out and set it in proper order before the household of faith. Brethren in the ministry, let us all work!

INFIDELS know how to present the weak points of orthodoxy to the people; and the people (too many of them) suppose they are the weak points of the Bible. For instance, a few days since Mr. Higginson, in his lecture for the Boston infidels said:

Good Professor Porter, in his sensible but certainly not very vivacious "Course of Readings," heaves a sigh for the "sadness" which prevails among the heretics. Sadness! Remember Emerson, with the serene smile which takes twenty years from his age; Thoreau, with his "inexpressible gratitude for the gift of life;" Parker, and the wondrous hymn of thanksgiving that rolled up to heaven in his prayers—and think of the gloom which ought to overshadow the soul of every living man who believes in the eternal punishment of a single human being: and choose between them.

—Prof. Porter alluded to the hopelessness of the infidel's future; and he was right. But what is there in the extinction of all being to cause sorrow equal to that which must arise from an intelligent belief that multitudes, perhaps a clear majority of the race are to exist forever in sin and suffering? Thank God, the Bible does not teach this, while it does clearly teach a future and eternal life for those who are fit to enjoy it and its Giver.

MR. CHENEY is an Episcopalian minister. Episcopalian ministers when they have sprinkled children (they call it baptizing, but it is not), are directed by the Prayer Book to say—"Seeing now that this child is regenerate, and grafted into the body of Christ's church," etc. But Mr. Cheney did not believe that water could regenerate anybody, unless the heart was changed, so in this ceremony he omitted to state that the children christened by him were "regenerate." The result was a church trial, and a verdict of "guilty" of violating the canons of the church.

However, it seems that Mr. Cheney is not alone in his guilt, but is only more bold than his fellow-sinners. What he openly omitted, they omit by artifice. The following is the testimony of Dr. Sullivan:

Have known Mr. Cheney quite intimately for about two years and six months. There has not existed an uniform usage among the bishops, priests, and deacons of the Protestant Episcopal Church to add or omit from the service of the Church. Have known one clergyman that was always attacked by a violent coughing, when he came to that word "regenerate," and when he had recovered, he had passed that word. Have known individual instances; am not familiar with the usages of the Church in the United States; am more familiar with Canada.

—But, after all, is there anything more absurd in "infant regeneration" than in "infant baptism," or sprinkling? Said Jesus—"He that believes, and is baptised." And it is quite as inconsistent to baptise an unbeliever of [illegible] sixty years. Without belief, faith, baptism is of no account in any case.

"UNDERWORLD."

A late, and in many respects the best popular version of the Scriptures, obscures the Bible doctrine of the state of the dead by translating the Hebrew sheol, by the English compound word, Under-world, of which Webster gives no definition at all related to the sense of the Hebrew word for which it stands. It will not be claimed that it relates to this earth as beneath or under the heavens, or to "that part of the world that is beyond the horizon." And we have been at a loss to apprehend why a body of scholars whose announced intention is to give us a translation in which every Hebrew or Greek word should be rendered by, so far as possible, an expressive equivalent in the English, should choose such an indefinite phrase to express a term of vital importance in some important theological questions.

The only definition of the compound word under-world which can be appropriated, is not given by English lexicographers, but is borrowed from the ancient mythologies. Would the scholars of the Bible Union have us attach that sense to the word in their version? And yet we see no way to avoid doing so, since they do not define the word, themselves, and we can find no other definition. We are therefore driven to the conclusion that these critics believe that sheol, and its Greek equivalent hades, are used in Scripture in the sense of a world under our own, the abode of the shades of the dead.

The ancients believed the world was flat, and supposed that the sheol of their fables their under world, was beneath the earth. But we know that the world is a continually revolving sphere, and that under the earth, above, below, beneath and similar terms are only relative expressions. But inasmuch as the ancients place this "under-world" beneath the earth's surface, we must understand it of an inner-world—a locality within the crust of the earth.

We see no escape from this conclusion. If the Bible Union, and others with them, have correctly rendered this word, and "under-world" gives us "the mind of this spirit," then the interior of this earth is the abode of departed spirits in the period between death and the resurrection: not of bad spirits alone, as the popular geological theory of internal fires would suggest to be the case but of all: for we doubt if any fact can be more clearly demonstrated from the Scriptures, than that all that die go into sheol, whatever or wherever it may be.

This dilemma of the translators is very suggestive, and affords wide play for the imagination. How do the departed souls make their way to this infernal home? Through the solid crust? or openings afforded by extinct volcanoes, or dried geysers? Or was Symmes' theory a true one, and do departed spirits pass to glory or its opposite, via the North Pole? Or will refuge be taken in the idea that an immaterial spirit can pass from place to place without traversing the intermediate space? Of course in this case all difficulties vanish, and a dead man could pass to the center of our sphere, or to hades within the globe, without penetrating the crust at all, and with as great ease as it could traverse open space.

It may be said, this is irreverent. No. It is in serious earnest. If sheol is an under-world as related to that we live in, it must be within the globe. And if that is not what it means, then let the scholars tell us what it does mean, in intelligible English, that we may understand them.

The next number of the Advent Quarterly will contain a careful analysis of the Scripture usage of the word sheol. We commend it to the attention of all.

SUPPORT OF THE GENERAL CAUSE.

We have frequently published suggestions from correspondents upon this important topic, without note or comment, hoping that the various schemes presented might awaken interest in the subject without direct appeals from us. We see difficulties in the way of some of these plans which do not seem to recur to others. The chief difficulty, however, in the way of any plan to divide the support of the Publishing Interest equally throughout the body, lies in the fact that there is no centralization of power among us, as is the case to a greater or less extent in most denominations. Every church is perfectly independent of every other church, and would resent any claim for contributions, if demanded as a right. This reduces us to entire dependence upon the voluntary principle. Nor can we say that we regret that it is so. Centralization has its evils as well as its benefits, and unless we are mistaken, the former are apt to soon outweigh the latter.

Our main dependence, then, for support, must be upon direct contributions, which may be raised upon various plans. We shall continue to solicit aid, from time to time, through the paper, the officers of the Association, and brethren in the ministry. But there is a way in which the church can systematically aid their Association, and at the same time be perfectly independent in their action. It is suggested in the following letter, which is submitted for the perusal and consideration of our readers:

Br. Himes: Enclosed please find draft for ten dollars. Seven of it we send you to be applied to the General Publishing and Tract Fund. The members of the Magnolia Church have subscribed from two to five cents each per week, to be paid in as often as once in each quarter; and this is our first installment. And we hope to be able to send you at least as much every three months until the Lord comes. Five cents per week for each member looks but small; but let us make an estimate, and see how much would be the total, if each subscriber to THE TIMES would pay as much. 4,000 p[illegible] five cents each would make $200. At two cents each it would be $80. And at only one cent each, it would add to the fund $40 each week. Taking the lowest sum, for a year it would amount to $2,080. Only think of it! Brethren what are we about? We profess to believe that we are very near the judgment. We say we love Jesus. We are told almost every week how much good the few publications sent out free are doing; and shall we withhold the five cents a week when it might be the means of saving many that can be reached in no other way? Let us awake while the day lasts. Let us practice as well as preach, and thereby show to the world that we have faith in our profession. I know it is often through thoughtlessness that we neglect duty; and I think if the attention of brethren is brought to this matter, that all will be willing to contribute.

This plan will not prevent those who are able from giving larger sums. Now let some brethren in each locality take hold of the matter, and send what is raised right along. We believe we are nearing the end very fast. As I said before let us be up and doing.

GEORGE HOWARD.

Magnolia, Wis.

—All that is needed to make this matter practical is for one person in each church or neighborhood to take hold of the matter, and see to it regularly. It will involve some little trouble; but let such remember that in their labor they are preaching, perhaps to a larger congregation than any of our ministers usually have. A dollar's worth of tracts may be read by hundreds, yes thousands of persons. And the one who collects, or gives the dollars, is really the preacher to this audience, or at the least, shares the honor.

Let us all give the subject our candid attention; and especially think of the fact, [illegible] a week from each subscriber would, in a year give us over $2,000 to expend in the gratuitous distribution of various publications. Is there no way to reduce this theory of giving to practice? Can we not attain hearty co-operation, without centralization?

SPIRIT AND FLESH.

The following position was recently taken in public by a gentleman of Chicago, who is, we believe, a minister. It was penciled down on the spot and forwarded to us, with a request that we would give it in THE TIMES, with some comments. The speaker said:

If spirit and soul are attributes of the body, and not entities in the body, how can these be said to be a conflict between them and the body? Can the flesh lust against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh, when one is an attribute of the other? (See Rom 7:25.)

How can an effect be at war with its cause?

—Immaterialism never leaned upon a more treacherous support, than the assumption necessarily implied in the above queries. And we may be pardoned the remark that here, as always, it rests upon a perversion (we do not mean a willful perversion) of Scripture. The expression, "the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh," is found in Gal. 5: 17, and refers not to a conflict between a man's own spirit and his body, but between man and the Holy Spirit, as all translators agree, and any one may see by the context. Rom. 7: 16, 18, 22, 25, and ch. 8: 3.

In Rom. 7: 25, referred to, Paul says: "So then, with the mind I serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin." Now if it is claimed that "the mind" here is the spirit, then it must be, also, affirmed that man consists of two distinct intelligent entities; for intelligence is as clearly predicated of the flesh as of the mind. The same thing is affirmed of both—they serve. Can we possibly suppose that any immaterialist can be found to defend this position; to maintain that the literal "flesh" of man has a conscious existence as a distinct entity in man's nature, able to intelligently contend with the "mind?" A singular "dualism" this would be.

In ch. 8: 8, 9, we read: "So then, they that are in the flesh cannot please God. But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit." In carrying out the principle of the above quoted queries, we have in Rom. 7: 25 found two entities in man. And now we learn (i. e., the before named principles being just), that neither of these entities is the real man after all, but that he has his choice of residing in one or the other of them at his pleasure. If he chooses he may take up his residence in the "flesh" entity; or, otherwise, in the "mind" entity. And this introduces a new difficulty. For if the man chooses to reside in the mind or spirit-entity, then he is not in the body; and so, of course, is disembodied. But was Paul writing a letter to disembodied men at Rome? He says, "Ye are not in the flesh!" But it is generally supposed that they were, nevertheless, residing in substantial, material bodies.

The more we look at the above queries, the more intense does their absurdity appear to us. The simple fact is that there is no duality of entities asserted here, or elsewhere in all Paul's writings. What he calls the flesh in ch. 7: 25, he in the same connection designates as "sin dwelling in me," "this body of death," and "the carnal mind." Opposed to this is "the inward man," "the spiritual mind," "after the Spirit." In Eph. 4: 22, 24, he calls the former "the old man," and the latter "the new man." The first is our natural condition as descendants of Adam; the last is our renewed condition, the result of putting on Christ, the second Adam, and the operation of the Holy Spirit. No, no. Man is not made up of several intelligent, irresponsible entities, capable of carrying on civil war, and he the subject of the [illegible] whether he serves with the flesh the law of sin, or with the mind the law of God, it is the "I myself" in either case. The individuality is not lost. It is the same man in different relations.

HOW ARE YOU LIVING?

Among the many letters we have received of late, none have awakened more serious reflection than that from which we here give an extract. Among the many points upon which the church is asleep, is that of the individual influence of her members. Very few, we fear, have any realizing sense of their responsibility in this direction. But let us have the letter referred to first, and then you may be better prepared to answer the question at the head of this article:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir: I take the liberty of writing to you, as I have become somewhat enlightened in regard to the teaching of the Bible. I first became acquainted with you (and approve of the advice given to all), by reading a small tract attached to your spiritual song book, requesting every person to search the Scriptures for themselves; with a number of references to passages of Scripture which gave me much light on the condition of those who have fallen asleep in Christ, and the resurrection from the dead, which has been a mystery to me for some time, although steadfast in the hope of everlasting life.

I suppose you will ask if I am a member of any church.

About two years ago I was staying with some relatives, who reside on [illegible] Illinois Central Railroad. The [illegible] convinced me of the dangerous path I was pursuing, denying to have Christ Jesus to reign over me, and not following the new commandment, "Love one another." And as I had oft times read in that Holy Scripture that we should watch over each other, I thought I must do something to reduce my debt. Therefore I carefully watched the walks and talks of those professing to be followers of Christ, as I thought I should have to do as they all were doing, if I wished to be saved. But I am sorry to say the closer I watched, the blinder I became: for I found among the professors, horse jockeys, liars, fighters, and those who would steal wood and timber off the I. C. R. R. vacant lands.

But, as I am getting a little ahead of my experience. I joined the Feet-washing Baptists, when in my darkest hours, [illegible]id of hell torments, and I thought I [illegible]d better be immersed, so that when I had to give an account of my stewardship, it would reduce my sins a little by belonging to some who professed to love our Savior. But all I could do or think, I could not feel at home in fellowship with those, who I was assured were not afraid to do that which was strictly forbidden. I resolved to leave the neighborhood, after experiencing about eighteen months of the most miserable period of my life, spending a portion of the time in the woods in prayer to God; for I never felt happier than when in solitary prayer, away from all the temptations of those who seemed to me "blind leading the blind."

But I thank God that I have become convinced that, while the devil is seeking whom he may devour, God has heard my prayer, and I have nothing to fear, but rather love God and keep his commandments. I therefore would be glad if you could send me some instructions and directions in the plainest way of understanding the truth of the Bible. G. G.

Industry, Ill.

—Here is food for abundance of thought concerning the sad influence of incorrect doctrine as well as bad practice. But we pass over the former, merely remarking that we have here the testimony of a careful and impartial witness of the inefficiency of the doctrine of hell-torment to restrain men from sin. He says those who professed to believe it would cheat, lie and steal. More than this we know that if men were restrained from these vices simply by fears of eternal torment, and not because they love virtue, heaven would be no heaven to them. the heart must be right, to enjoy the presence of God. But the point to which we are coming is this. Every Christian is watched by others, just as the professors our brother speaks of were watched by him. And what brings the matter closer home is, that every Adventist is specially watched. Your family, your neighbor, the church, the world, are all watching you. You are an epistle, a letter, read every day; and those who know you, know, also, whether you read the same on weekdays you do on Sundays; whether you read the same at prayer meeting that you do in the store, shop, or office. And if your language or actions in the one place read differently from what they do in the other, your character does not suffer alone, but the precious cause of Christ is, however unjustly, also involved. Men take occasion not to scoff at your religion, only, but at all religion. In brief you are a stumbling block.

How are you living? You are a marked, a watched man. Will your conduct bear inspection? Do you overreach in a trade? Do you take a mean advantage—perfectly legal, it may be, but mean? Are you selfish? Are you unkind? If you are guilty of such things, and yet profess to be an Adventist, looking for the coming of the Lord Jesus as your only hope, and expecting the event soon—alas for the cause in your neighborhood. "The name of God is blasphemed" among unbelievers on your account. An Adventist should show by his conduct, that beyond dispute he was trying to live just right; otherwise he need not profess to believe that the "Judge standeth at the door." "He that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." How are you living? Remember you are watched.

Irritability is a breach of good morals as well as good manners. Gentle courtesy we owe to all.

WHAT IS EXPECTED OF US?

Recently a good brother stopped THE TIMES, because it was "sectarian"—i. e. "bigoted in its attachment to its party." At the same time we were arraigned for adding notes to correspondent's articles; and, also, held responsible for the sentiments of one correspondent because we did not express dissent from his views; and blamed for publishing another's articles at all. We did not give way to any bad or unkind feelings. We do not claim infallibility, and sometimes make mistakes. But we never make mistakes purposely. And if an editor is found who cannot make a mistake, no one will bid him a heartier welcome than we.

While thinking over these things, we opened an exchange (the Restitution), and found the following infallible recipe for an infallible, sure-to-please-everybody editor. When found, we will give him a position at this office at once.

AN EDITOR WANTED.

1. He must possess a liberal education, and be fully competent to revise and correct all manuscript sent to him for publication.

2. He must be able to keep accounts correctly, and bear the blame himself of any and all mistakes or delays, whether caused by the negligence of clerks or Postoffice authorities, or any other cause whatever. He must be ready to act as the scapegoat for all, and patiently bear the burden of blame heaped upon him....

4. If he receives an article not worthy of publication, [or that he thinks had better not appear in his columns, for whatever reason,] he must either waive his judgment and publish it or else submit to abuse from the party sending it.

5. He must be liberal, and publish everybody's views without criticism.

6. He must be very guarded, and publish nothing but what he is sure is Bible truth.

7. He must keep out all correspondence of a personal character, and allow no criticism upon articles published, as this genders strife and ill feeling, and creates suspicion in the minds of inquirers after truth.

8. He must open his columns for free discussion and criticism, as this is the only way to reach the truth on any given subject.

9. He must issue his sheet in pamphlet form once a month, and fill it with the choicest original matter and selections.

10. He must issue it once in two weeks, in order to please a larger number of his subscribers.

11. He must issue it in the form of an open sheet, and devote a department to the publication of Foreign and Domestic news, market reports, advertisements, etc., so that the country subscribers, who are his principal supporters, may be able to dispense with their secular papers, and give all their support to this.

12. He must leave out everything except strictly religious matter. His city subscribers take the daily papers, and have no relish for "stale news," or secular matter in a religious journal.

13. He must issue it weekly, and depend upon "promises" for his support. If he is out of pocket at the end of the year, besides working for nothing himself, he must be consoled with the thought that another year will witness a like result.

What is "the Apostasy?"

"Let no man deceive you by any means, for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that Man of Sin be revealed, the son of perdition." (2 Thes. 2.)

We would reasonably infer from this chapter that the Thessalonians were looking for the speedy coming of Christ, or for the end of the world even in their day; Paul knew better, and in this epistle corrects their mistake by informing them that a great apostasy would precede that day. This apostasy is again alluded to in 1 Tim. 4:1, etc. "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils;" didas kalias diamonion, doctrines concerning demons, or doctrines suggested by demons.

The question is, what is the apostasy alluded to in these verses? Is it past, present, or yet to come? A right answer is very important to the understanding of the prophecy, and also to the solution of that other question, Who is the Man of Sin? which I reserve for future investigation. By comparing the facts of history with the Scriptural account of the apostasy, it seems plain to my mind that the Romish communion is signified.

As the very first article in the creed of the apostasy has reference to demonology, or to doctrines concerning demon gods, an examination of this subject will convince any unbiased mind (I think) that this refers to the invocation of the saints as practiced by the Romish church; and if this be true, that communion is the apostasy of which "the Spirit speaketh expressly."

There is a place also in Rev. 9:20, where unmistakable reference is made to this apostasy, and to the same characteristic feature of it that is given by Paul to Timothy "And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues, yet repented not of the work of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood."

Bloomfield on his passage says: "By the ta daimonia, devils, are meant the spirits of departed saints;" and Bishop Newton, and Faber, and Cumming, with many others, agree that the "doctrine of devils" refers to the adoration of the saints, or to the worship of saints or demon-gods. I know that heathens worship idols of gold, and silver, and wood, but there is no allusion to heathens in these verses, for the apostle is speaking of those who "shall depart from the faith," evidently alluding to professed Christians.

Can we reasonably suppose that there will be a time in the future when many will so depart from the faith as to answer this description more fully than the Romish church?

The predicted worshipers of dead men, according to the express declaration of the Spirit, were also to bow before crucifixes or idols, and images of gold, and silver, brass, stone and wood. Will any one suppose that some future antichrist will arise to impose on apostate professors of Christianity such senseless idolatry as is described? I cannot think that allusion is had in these verses to any apostasy except that gigantic one which has cursed the world for ages past. This interpretation of these passages is not mine, neither is it a novelty, for the most ancient expositors give the same rendering. They understand the Spirit to say expressly that such an apostasy would arise as would lead to the worship of canonized mortals, similar to apostasy among the Jews, which led to the worship of Baalam, or departed heroes. I could quote many ancient Christian writers on this subject, but I wish to be brief.

Epiphanius, who wrote in the earlier half of the Fourth century, says: "Some persons are crazy enough to worship the Virgin Mary as a sort of goddess.... In them is fulfilled the prophecy of St. Paul: certain persons shall apostatize from the faith, attending to fables, and doctrines concerning demon-gods. For the purport of the apostle's declaration is this: they shall pay divine worship to the dead, even as men formerly paid such worship in Israel;" etc. Faber, p. 186. I know the Romish church in this country, among Protestants and Baptists, will deny that she pays divine honor to Mary, or that she really worships dead men, but this is only in keeping with the "all deceivableness" ascribed to her in the word of God.[1] In proof that the Romish apostasy does, and has paid divine honors to dead men and women—thus answering to the description of the apostasy mentioned by Paul—I will give a few quotations from the collects and hymns to the saints in the Horus, printed in Paris in the year 1520.

> "Holy Mary, succor the miserable" assist the pusillanimous, cherish the mourners, pray for the people, interpose on behalf of the clergy, intercede for the devout female sex.
> Let our voice first celebrate Mary, through whom the rewards of life are given to us. O queen, thou art a mother and yet a chaste virgin, pardon our sins through thy Son. May the holy assembly of the angels, and the illustrious troop of the archangels, now blot out our sins by granting to us the high glory of heaven.
> O George, renowned martyr, praise and glory befit thee, endowed as thou art with military glory. By thee, the royal maid, existing in sorrow before the worst of dragons, was preserved. In our soul and inmost heart, we beseech thee, that, with all the faithful, we, being washed from our sins, may be joined to the citizens of heaven: that so, together with thee we may joyfully be in glory, and that our lips with glory may render praises to Christ.
> O martyr Christopher, for the honor of the Savior, make us to be in mind worthy of the love of God. According to Christ's promises, for thou obtainest what thou demandest, grant to thy sorrowful people thy gifts which thou hast demanded by dying. Confer comfort, and remove heaviness of mind: and cause, that the examination of the Judge may be mild toward all."
> "O William, thou good shepherd, father and patron of the clergy, cleanse us in our agony; grant us aid; remove the filthiness of our life; and grant the joys of a celestial crown."
> "O ye eleven thousand glorious maids lilies of virginity, roses of martyrdom, defend me in life by affording to me your assistance; and shew yourselves to me by bringing the last consolation."—(Quoted from Faber.)

If this is not praying to dead men and women, according to Paul's description of the apostasy of the latter times, then I utterly fail in comprehending the meaning of these quotations.

The second article in the creed of the apostasy, as predicted by Paul, was "forbidding to marry;" and this points unmistakably to the Romish apostasy. By the sixth canon of the second council of Lateran, ecclesiastics, down to the rank of a sub-deacon inclusive, are prohibited from marrying. The marriage of bishops and deacons is said by that œcumenical council to be an unworthy deed, and no better than chambering and uncleanness. Paul says, that "marriage is honorable in all," but the apostasy, "forbidding to marry," teaches by the tenth œcumenical council, which they regard as infallible, that it is not only dishonorable for a bishop or deacon to marry, but that it is no better than chambering and uncleanness.

Paul says, "A bishop must be the husband of one [a] wife, but the apostasy "forbidding to marry," says that it is "no better than chambering and uncleanness."

Paul says he "must," the apostasy says he must not. Paul says a bishop must have "his children in subjection with all gravity," but, according to the Romish apostasy, if a bishop has children, they must not be his wife's, for they, "forbidding to marry," will not let him have any wife! I believe they call all their priests "father," but Baptists do not believe in unmarried fathers! Paul describes what sort of wives deacons should have, but the apostasy will not let them have any; he also teaches that they should rule their children, but the deacons and sub-deacons of the apostasy will not publicly recognize their children on the streets. Thus we see the prophecy concerning the apostasy fulfilled in the history of the Romish communion; it was predicted that the great apostasy should forbid to marry, and this is exemplified and fulfilled in the Roman Catholic church. This is the main ground on which she discards and utterly condemns the Episcopalians. They say that "everything which has been done in the Protestant Episcopal church since the time of Elizabeth is radically null in principle; null to-day, null to-morrow, null to the very end of time." If you ask them why, they will tell you that the Protestant Episcopal orders are derived from Scory, Barlow, and Coverdale, who were canonically excluded in the reign of Mary. That the marriage of these priests obliterated their Episcopal character. Therefore English and American Episcopal orders, springing from a nullity, are themselves radically null in principle both yesterday, and to-day, and forever. This is what the apostasy will tell you of her allegorical daughter in England and America. There are many apostasies, but this is the only one of any magnitude that forbids to marry, and thus answers to Paul's description of the apostasy. This "forbidding to marry" had no little to do in bringing about the separation from Rome of her Protestant daughters. When Pope Gregory VII caused the marriage of the clergy to be prohibited in A. D. 1074, the effect produced was remarkable. When it was published by the papal legate in Germany, the clergy, so far from submitting peaceably appealing to Scripture, and charged Gregory and his council of contradicting Paul." Yet, after all, this dogma became so popular, and made so deep an impression on the clergy, that when Zuingle started the Presbyterian Church in October 1523, he married the widow Reinhardt, and kept it a secret! (D'Aubigne.)

There are many other evidences that the Romish church is the apostasy mentioned expressly by Paul and the Spirit, but I must reserve them for another article. It is certainly a great error for us to be looking for a future apostasy and a future man of sin, answering to the description of Paul and the prophets, if, indeed, they have been revealed centuries ago, and are still in existence. Instead of expecting a future apostasy, we should rather be looking for the destruction of the present one by the brightness of the Lord's coming, and by the breath of his mouth.—Cor. West Recorder.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES,

A large, neat, eight-page weekly paper, thoroughly devoted to the advancement of the cause of Christ by the faithful advocacy, defence and dissemination of what is called Advent doctrine,

EDITED BY
JOSHUA V. HIMES.

THE TIMES contains, weekly, matter expository, exegetical, illustrative, practical; including communications, selections and original matter, with letters from those of like precious faith in all parts of the country, the news of the body, and a faithful digest of the news of the world bearing upon the signs of the times: with news of the progress of our cause in different parts, and also news of what our opponents are saying and doing, with expositions and refutations of their arguments: articles on prophecy; notices of current and useful literature; short sermons; a column or more for the children, choice bits of poetry—in short matter enough in every number to make a good sized book, and all furnished for only FOUR CENTS A WEEK, or $2 a year. No paper of its class furnishes so much reading matter, even when a greater price is charged.

The paper has been very useful in the past, and can be made more so by extending its circulation. To our friends who are working faithfully for this end, we make the following offer: We will send

THE TIMES, POST-PAID,

to any address in the United States or Canada, on trial

FOR THREE MONTHS,

for 35c. For one dollar, we will send THE TIMES to any three persons, three months, post-paid; and any larger number at the same rate.

Who will take advantage of this liberal offer, to introduce THE TIMES in a village, a neighborhood, a church. For

TEN DOLLARS

you can send a live Advent paper to

THIRTY PERSONS,

or into thirty families, post-paid, for three months. Could it fail to do good? Five dollars will pay for fifteen copies; and one dollar for three.

We make this liberal offer solely to introduce the paper in new fields and localities.

Will the ministry please publish it to their congregations?

Will our friends please tell it to their friends.

Will you who love the cause and wish THE TIMES to prosper, pay for 3, 5, 10, 50, or 100 copies, on these liberal terms. We have now 300 names, of partially interested persons, among whom we could obtain perhaps more, could we send them the paper free for three months.

FIFTY PERMANENT SUBSCRIBERS,

Who will send at once? Send in the names, with 33⅓ cents for each name and if you give the P. O. address plainly) we will guarantee the delivery of thirteen numbers of THE TIMES free of postage, to each one of them.

Three thousand three months subscribers, on this plan, will give us a large and permanent addition to our list.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, Feb. 4. I took leave of kind friends in Dexter, and turned my steps homeward for some rest. My visit and labors with them have been pleasant and I trust profitable for the cause of truth.

Just before I left Eld. Ellis, the Disciple minister called upon me, with others, to exchange views on the kingdom of God, mentioned in Dan. 2: 44. He claimed that the words—"In the days of these kings, the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom," etc., referred to the establishment of the Christian church on the day of Pentecost; that it was "in the days" of the four great kingdoms, instead of the ten kingdoms of the divided Roman empire. I showed by reading the vision with him, that the fourth kingdom was divided before the stone struck the image, and that when the blow fell, the stone smote it on the feet, which symbolized the divided state of the Roman empire. And as this was not divided till the fifth century, the stone could not have smitten it before that period, and it has not been smitten since. Therefore the epoch of the kingdom is yet future, at the second advent of Christ. I got no new light from our brother, nor did he meet my arguments. Our Disciple brethren are in error on this point. I am sure of this.

Hurried along by the cars, I found myself with friends in Chicago at an early hour Sunday morning. I put up with my old friend A. M. Billings. By invitation of Br. Hines I conducted the morning service at the Advent church on Green-st. As I was worn down by continued labor, we had a conference, in which many spoke. It was a pentecostal time. Exhortation, thanksgiving and song were poured out in living streams. At night I spoke on the "signs of the times."

MONDAY, Feb. 6. I attended the daily noon prayer meeting at Farwell Hall. The meeting was opened by singing, prayer, and reading the first chapter of Thessalonians. The speaker referred to Christ's love, and the gift of the Spirit to comfort and guide his church. He then spoke of his second coming, quoting the last verse—"And to wait for his Son from heaven." He said that the Lord had graciously led him of late to look favorably upon this subject. It was now to him a precious doctrine. He thought the Holy Spirit had led him to think of it and receive it, and he rejoiced in it. Another brother referred to the subject with interest. Mr. Moody, also, spoke on the point with special interest. He said we should pray for him to come. Br. James, read John 14: 1–3—"I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am there ye may be, also." The Holy Spirit was spoken of by Br. Barnes, as abiding with us, and that we need not pray for it; should be always filled with it. Br. McClellan spoke of the Spirit of Christ being in us, as the life, and by the same Spirit we should be raised up at the coming of Christ. Br. Morrison also spoke of the connection of Christ's coming with the consummation of our hope. Br. Barnes closed with prayer in which he made reference to the Lord's return. It was a sweet and precious time indeed. Such sentiments openly expressed, in a union daily prayer meeting surprised me. They would not have been welcome one year ago, in this meeting. And even last week there were manifestations of disapprobation. And though all was quiet to-day, I do not think the clergy or laity who advocate the world's conversion will long permit outspoken Adventism in their meetings. Still it may be permitted, as most of those in the orthodox churches who hold to the personal coming, also hold either futurist or Millenarian views of prophecy, with what are called Plymouth Brethren. But let the truth be preached in any way so that the Lord's people may be gathered, and he may come in his glory, and redeem his people.

On my arrival at the depot in Buchanan this evening, I found about [illegible] of my neighbors waiting for the train [illegible] on to take them to Niles, to attend a lecture by John B. Gough, [illegible] concluded to go on with them. His subject was "Peculiar People." I think it was the best effort I ever heard from Mr. Gough. No person could listen to it candidly, without feeling prompted to a better life. In closing he said the "peculiar people," were they who would overcome all obstacles, and have a right to the tree of life, and enter into the City of God; and admonished all to overcome the world.

Through some mismanagement the arrangement to take us back to Buchanan by rail at the close of the lecture failed, and we had to spend most of the night in the car at the Niles depot. This is an unusual thing upon this road, where officers and servants are prompt and faithful. The case was referred to Mr. Sargent, the General Superintendent,—and, by the way, a model one,—who made all the reparation in his power. I travel over many roads in the course of a year; and without any hesitation pronounce the Michigan Central the best of them all. Travelers east or west will do well to remember our commendation when choosing their route.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 8. It seems good to be at home again, where I not only meet with my own dear household but with many precious members of the church, in social relations, and especially in the prayer and conference meeting. How beautiful the singing—the best that I hear anywhere—joins with the united prayers, and words of cheer. It is pleasant to get home and receive Christian greeting.

During my absence Br. L. P. Fox, one of the members of the church, has made them a present of a bell, which was much needed to give notice of meetings, Sabbath-school, and other gatherings. I heard it for the first time this evening. It has a fine tone, and is precisely what was long needed.

Br. and Sr. Mansfield have been invited to supply the church here for another year. Br. Mansfield has felt for some time as though he might do more good elsewhere; but he is not aware of the great good he is doing here. Sometimes ministers feel that they labor in vain, when it turns out very differently. Our brother and sister have done a good, and great work here. The church is the largest and one of the best in the land, and a monument of persevering labor.

THURSDAY, Feb. 9. Do we trust in God? Do we believe in divine Providence? When we can realize that the Lord reigns, and that our afflictions ar permitted for our good in the end He knows all things, and sees from the beginning to the end. He sees the future, and provides for us, when it would be impossible for us to do so. When we get a clean view of the character and perfections of God, we shall not doubt his providence, as we struggle on through life. He will do all things well, and bring us out triumphant. Be not faithless. Believe and trust. Be not afraid. Read the 23d Psalm.

From A. C. Hustson, Pontiac, Ill.

It is very interesting to all of us to read the soul-stirring "Letters and Extracts," and I have no doubt, my brethren enjoy it full as much as I do. But there is one thing that pleases me still better than any other in our paper, and that is the weekly Thermometer on the last page. "Thermometer," Say you; "and pray what is that? Well I will tell you. When the weather is getting warm you say, "The mercury is rising. "And when I see my brethren and sisters getting warmed up in the cause of the Lord, and feel so earnest that others may also see the truth, that they send in fifty subscribers to THE TIMES in one week, then I say, "The mercury is rising." And I realize that there are still those in these troublous times, who are earnestly watching, and praying, and trying to scatter the good seed of the kingdom.

I consider that anything that is worth doing at all is worth doing well. And if we believe, as we profess we do, that the King in his peerless beauty will soon be among us, then it is our duty to notify everybody we can to be ready for that event. Now it is my opinion that the best way to notify our friends and neighbors is to get them to subscribe for THE TIMES. "Oh! but I can't get anybody to subscribe for the paper," I think I hear you say. "Who wants an Advent paper." My brother did you ever try? And if you did try, and was not successful the first time, did you try again? I was told that everybody was so prejudiced that I could not get one subscriber. I went at it, and proved to the contrary. If we could realize our duty in this matter, I am sure we would act quite differently. The brother or sister who gets one subscriber to our paper is a preacher of the truth; for if you can get any one to read it for one year, they are sure to get some of the truth to stick to them. The Lord has raised up a people in the West who profess to look for his coming, who are abundantly able to subscribe for the paper and to send one or more to their friends if they will. Now shall we not all make a grand effort to get subscribers enough this year to set our Association afloat beyond peradventure, that our brethren may be out of debt, and the usefulness of the whole establishment be increased fourfold. I pray the Lord to send us his Spirit that the mercury go up to blood heat, for we want blood earnestness now in these last days in order that our own skirts may be free.

From G. W. Perry, Washara Co., Wis.

I am a stranger to you, yet I would like to add my testimony in favor of the precious truth. I desire to write as if I were talking face to face. Lonely and almost discouraged, cast down, but not forsaken, it seems as though we had been long time looking for Jesus; and yet we look, watch, and pray; and being tired of the things of this life, the time seems long. And I cast my eyes to the east, and long to see the King in his beauty, and hear him call his lonely and tired people away from sin, sorrow, pain, and death, to inherit life. Yes, praise the Lord! Eternal life! It cheers the heart and makes hope spring up, to contemplate the glories of eternal life. We toil on waiting for Jesus. Waiting, did I say? Yes. Well, we must be ready, and waiting. Are we all ready? I want to be in a waiting position. Then all is well. Yes we will have all sin confessed; all square with our fellow men; and then walk in the light as it shines upon our pathway. Let us have oil in our lamps. What is this oil? is it not truth? [Rather the Spirit of truth. ED.] If so let us have it in our hearts, and its light in our dwellings, and we live like men that wait for their Lord.

From Wm. Branch, Lexington, Mich, Jan. 31.

I have just returned from a trip to Delaware in the northern part of Sanilac Co., where Br. Morrison and myself tried to break up the fallow ground a little. At first the people were much prejudiced against the Adventists, and refused to open the school-house. We concluded to hold a few meetings in the house of a friend, and thus give the people an opportunity of hearing for themselves what our doctrines are. Seeing that we were bound to preach, they then opened one of the school-houses. The first discourse was on "immortality." The truth was a fearful blow to their theory, and of course we were opposed. But they failed to quote Scripture correctly, and we had to quote it for them several times. One sister had a "book of arguments" with which she was going to wind us right up; but the Book of Arguments which we had, met all questions and settled them. This very lady came to shake hands with me as I came away, and said she believed me to be a "sincere man." I think the people begin to see the truth, and I doubt not that much good can be done in that region.

On my way home I found a man who has been driven to infidelity by the doctrine of eternal misery; and this is only one case among thousands. I shudder as I think of the awful responsibility that rests upon those who preach a "lie" for the "truth," and make God to be the greatest of all tyrants. Oh! that those who are preaching the truth may be diligent, cry aloud, and spare not. Let us all cling fast to the Word and obey its precepts, that finally we may have "right to the tree of life." Then and not till then shall we be made immortal.

From J. R. Preston, Algansee, Mich.

Yesterday was a good day with us. We have been holding meetings five weeks in all, and the Lord has greatly blessed our efforts in his cause. About twenty persons have commenced the service of the Lord. Some aged persons, who have lived here for years, and passed through several revivals unmoved, have now given their hearts to God. Praise the Lord. Br. D. R. Mansfield was with us during the last week, and labored efficiently in the proclamation of the truth. All his old friends, and others who have had the pleasure of his acquaintance during this visit, are thankful to God for sending him to us. For myself I would say that his coming was like the coming of Titus, of which Paul speaks, as a source of refreshment to him.

Yesterday, seven souls were baptised into Christ. The weather was extremely cold, and the ice collected on my clothes; yet I have never enjoyed baptising more than at that time. Last night six gave their names to the church.

We praise God for his mercy, and pray that these may be kept faithful till Jesus comes. Glory to God, for his great love to us.

From Jacob Wilbur, West Hoosick N. Y.

I feel just like writing a few lines for THE TIMES, to let my brethren in the West know how I am getting along in these days of peril and sorrow. I have not been able to do much for the cause of Christ the past year, owing to sickness of myself and family. I got hurt very badly about one year ago in assisting to take a box of goods off a car, and was laid up for a number of days, so that I could not get out of the house, and have not been able to do a man's day's work since. Next the children were all sick. My wife's grandfather was sick and died, and I had the care of him for a long time. In November my oldest son was brought very near the grave. I had to watch with him for nearly two months. My wife was sick through the month of December, and I have had the Typhoid fever for about four weeks, and at this date I am only able to read and write a little. Yet my trust has been in God and my hope sustained by the promise of one day reaching a place where "the inhabitants shall not say, I am sick." I have preached a little over sixty sermons, and baptised five persons. I hope to do more the coming year. Pray for me.

From A. E. Babcock, Jonesville, Mich. Feb. 3:

I have just returned from Cecil, O., where, with Br. R. Crandall, I have been for the last two weeks, in a protracted meeting. The weather and mud was some what against us, but we had an excellent time, and much good has already been the result of the meeting. Several came out squarely on the Lord's side, and I baptised three heads of families, and four were received into the church. Others are pledged to follow. I left Br. C. to continue the meeting, which he will do until our next Lord's day. We think the church at Cecil is in a better condition than ever before. There has never been as perfect an organization as now. Br. Thomas Pope was elected as their Elder and Brn. John Smith and Lewis Disinger Deacons, and Br. Davis clerk.

From Geo. Thomson, Attica, Wis. Feb. 7:

The Arena (Wis.) meeting was a blessed work. "It is the Lord's doings, and it is marvelous in our eyes." There were no very favorable indications in the commencement. A vast amount of prejudice existed in the community, but it became sensibly diminished as the meetings progressed. There was no unusual excitement, but a calm, solemn, sweet influence pervaded the meetings, indicating the Holy Spirit's presence. Many were compelled to acknowledge its power, and were led to yield to the demands of the gospel. A number of the most influential members of the community were brought to a knowledge of the truth, and are now happy in the Savior's love. Quite a number far advanced in years were awakened and found pardon and peace. One old gentleman, about seventy years of age, remarked as follows: "This thing has come upon me like a thunder-clap. The first meeting I attended out of mere curiosity, not having any serious feelings whatever. I became interested; something got hold of me. I have set up the family altar, and I am happy in the Lord." Others testified of the suddenness and unexpectedness of the work, repeated efforts having been made heretofore by brethren of other churches, to promote a revival, but without success. A number of dear brethren and sisters of other churches attended toward the close, and co-operated with us. God bless them.

We would not forget to mention, that much of the success of this meeting is due to the prayers and preparatory labors of a few faithful ones, who purchased tracts and scattered them, paid for and introduced THE TIMES, into a number of families. These dear brethren now feel that they are amply repaid. Let others do likewise. Br. Hitchcock was also among the first to sow the good seed in this field. We all rejoice together and give God the glory. Some forty in all arose for prayers during the meetings. Some twenty-five covenanted together in church fellowship. Others will unite. A Bible Class and weekly prayer meeting was appointed. We hold these two things to be absolutely essential to the life and growth of a church. Pray for the little band in Arena.

Brief Extracts.

Br. Abner Brooks, says: As you proclaimed the gospel long ago in Fitchburg, Mass., I persume you will be glad to hear from this place. There are from fifteen to twenty brethren and sisters who are looking for the glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. We have preaching every Sunday, and three or four prayer meetings each week. We have no settled preacher, but such as we can get. May the Lord bless the efforts making for the spread of the glorious gospel of the Son of God.——Peter Wilson, Sullivan Co. Mo.: Adventism is gaining ground here, I think. I am trying to do what little I can in the good cause. How I wish the Lord had given me two talents instead of the one that I have; and, indeed, that seems to be only a part of one. The Lord has been very good to us since we came here. The folks hardly knew what "Advent" meant. Now Br. Snow preaches for us once a month, and occasionally our hearts are made glad by fathe Higgins' presence. May the Lord bless him and all the rest who are facing the storm and cold to proclaim the good news that the Lord is coming. We ask an interest in your prayers that there may be a few raised up in this place ready to meet the Lord when he comes.——

——J. T. Townsend, Albany Co. N. Y.: I would like to say, not only to you, but to some brethren whom I used to meet in the East, many years since, and who are now scattered in the States of Illinois and Wisconsin, and many others of "like precious faith" that I am still looking for that blessed hope." Though now a pilgrim and stranger, passing through toils and perplexities. I expect soon to meet all the "loved ones," who are now sweetly sleeping in Jesus.——

——A. W. Averill, Knox Co. Ill. I love THE TIMES, and am willing to labor for it without recompence, only the pleasing reflection that I have been instrumental in the hands of God in spreading light and truth. I want to see THE TIMES raised to a better position: and if every brother and sister would pledge themselves either to furnish one new subscriber, or the money to pay for one extra copy, the work would be done. Dear brethren, try. Nothing will be done unless you try. And if you fail, try again, and you will yet succeed. What a weight of care it would lift from the minds of the Association. How many happy hearts it would make, and how much more light would be diffused.——

——S. E. Lamphere, Van Buren Co. Mich. It has been two years since I started in Christ's service. Though I have not been a faithful servant, yet I praise his holy name that I was brought to a knowlege of the truth at that time. I was brought from death unto life under the labors of Brn. J. M. Snook and C. Fox. I love them, and all the faithful ministers of the gospel. May God bless them and their labors is my prayer. Let us examine our selves, and try to prove faithful until we all arrive at home.

——Alfred C. Huctson, Livingston Co. Ill.: There are seven of us out-and-out Adventists, beside others almost persuaded. And we ought to be thankful for the truth. Just look at this case. I lent my Immortality (Whitmore's) to a Presbyterian. He said it was strong, and logical; but he thought you could "prove any thing by the Scriptures" That's the doctrine, of to-day. If the the Scriptures do not teach what we want them to, then they will teach any thing. May the Lord save us by our holding to his truth; for if that fails, all is lost.——————Geo. Wright, Lexington, Mich.: Since I last wrote we have had several interesting conversions. We organized a church in Elk about one year ago of eight members. Now it numbers eighteen. Five will be added to the church in East Elk at our next meeting, and about the same number to the church in Speaker. The good work goes on. Glory be to God. My own heart has been greatly cheered by these tokens of his favor, and I know you will rejoice with me. As an indication of the progress of the cause in Elk I am happy to report we are to have a chapel. $625 has been subscribed. The firm of Dutcher and Collians, the principal merchants of the town give us $150.——————R. P. Hoge, Prairie Center, Ill. Feb. 6: I have been holding meetings here for over a week, with good results. The church is waked up, and two have indicated their wish to be with us in the kingdom. I am quite worn down, but strong in the Lord.——————Sr. O. N. G. Chicago: I did not receive THE TIMES last week, and I've grown to appreciate it so highly in less than two months, I felt I could not afford to lose one paper. I do enjoy perusing the whole eight pages; but most of all, I love the letters from the dear brothers and sisters, that are scattered throughout this broad land. I may never meet one of them on this earth in its unrenewed state; but, I hope to know and love them better when "Christ, who is our life, shall have appeared."——————L. W. Pierce, New York city: May not this be the year that the end shall be? for you know that God has said "at the appointed time it shall be." I love to think God said so, not man. No passing over of the time God has set. And as we know not the year, I think this may be the one. I hope so. I am obeying the command of God by watching, and expect to until Jesus comes, for herein lies safety.——————G. W. DeLong, Wayne Co. Iowa: I am a little in debt, but I feel it a duty to save a little for the Lord's cause. So I send you my mite with this, to help send tracts to some one unacquainted with the truth, or the paper to those who cannot afford to take it. For my part I will try to do without some things to help spread the light of God's blessed word. I wish every day to do better in the Lord's service, be faithful to the end, and then receive a crown of life. I ask an interest in your prayers. Br. S. K. Gibson is laboring with us. Many are interested.——————G. Y. Bryant, Wayne Co. Iowa: Dear brothers and sisters: Are you all doing what you can for the truth? If you are not, it is high time you were waking up. If you can't do much, do what you can. Lend your paper. I have take THE TIMES six months and have got five new subscribers in this way. Cannot you do the same. Jesus is coming. You want your friends to be ready to meet him. Then help them to be ready by all the means in your power.——————Y. Higgins, St. Catherine, Mo.: The tracts you have sent to this section have done a great amount of good, but how much, can never be known until the judgment. I need more to aid in my work, very much. It is very distressing times hereabouts; and many have therefore been behind in paying for their papers. But we hope for better days.——————Allen Lewis, Kent Co. Mich.: I am in a new country, and find times exceeding hard, among strangers, and strangers to the blessed hope, too. In much weakness, and many fears we still hang to the hope of the gospel. I wish I could be as confident as some are that the morning is so soon to dawn. My longing heart cries out, Oh come!——————J. W. Barroughs, Wallingford, Ill.: Please correct mistake in printing my last letter. I said I had raised up and organized three churches—one of twenty-three members, one of twenty, and one of fifty. You changed it to "one of thirteen, one of twenty," etc. There is a good interest here. The largest congregation they have seen in a great while. There are strong Mormon and Spiritist elements here.——————Br. D. Hammack, Kanawha Co. W. Va.: THE TIMES gladdens my heart every week, while I read of the coming kingdom of my Saviour. I believe he is soon coming. What a glorious hope! To live with Christ! And, also, with the people of God.——————A Baptist brother in Medora, Ill. says: I am a stranger to you personally; I believe we are brothers and interested in the same blessed Bible truths, while standing identified with two different denominations. I would to God there was less striving about denominations, and more for the Bible truth; and especially do I desire that there could be a more perfect understanding of the Bible doctrine of life and death. But the minds of the masses are prejudiced against the simple truth, and seem not to realize that if the penalty of God's law was eternal misery, Jesus Christ could never have redeemed a single soul.——————C. Rima, Howard Co. Iowa: If ever a poor "soul-sleeper" as they call me, needed the prayers of the church, it is I. I am the only one in this place to proclaim in public the signs of the times which tell us that the night is far spent and the day at hand. A voice will soon be heard crying "The Bridegroom is coming!" This is my soul's desire, to live to see my blessed Lord coming in the clouds of heaven. Then pain, sickness and death will be felt and feared no more forever.

The Hygienic Institute of New York.

We are happy to say that Br. George Storrs who was dangerously sick a short time since, has been raised up. He has given an interesting account of his sickness and recovery, which we here quote.

We are acquainted with Dr. Miller. He has our confidence and esteem. We wish him great success in caring the sick in his new and commodious establishment.

ELD. STORRS' NARATIVE.

The general features of our sickness have been already reported. It is sufficient for us now to say, that a hard, dry cough was its commencement. This was sometime in October. For two weeks we continued our work in the office of the Herald, taking such medicine as was prescribed by an eminent physician; which however gave us no relief—night and day our cough continued, till we became so exhausted and our appetite for food had so failed that we were obliged to take our bed about the first of November: from that time we were visited daily and sometimes twice a day by a Brooklyn physician in whom we had great confidence. He did all that human skill could do with homœpathic remedies. He gave us relief from the violence of our cough, but the disease continued unabated. At the end of three weeks we found ourselves in "the valley of the shadow of death;" and our physician informed us distinctly enough that our end was near.

At this point an allopathic physician visited us. He pronounced us incurable. The same day, at evening, Dr. Miller, the hygienic physician, of New York city, came to our house, being urged thereto by Sr. Helen Robertson, who was passing the winter at his Institute; himself also feeling a deep interest in our case from Helen's representation, though he had never seen us but had read some of our writings on immortality twenty years ago.

The condition in which he found us is described by himself in the following note which he has since sent us by our special request:

MR STORRS: Your disease was Acute Bronchitis. This is an inflamation of the lining membrane of the Bronchial tubes. In your case, both the large and small tubes were involved, and the accompanying fever assumed a Typhoid form. When I first saw you, your pulse was about 130 to the minute, and would intermit once in seven or eight beats. Your respiration was 46 to the minute;* there was great difficulty in breathing, frequent cough, and a profuse expectoration of a thick, light colored stringy matter, about half of which would sink in water. The tongue was livid and red; no appetite, bowels constipated, countenance pale and haggard, no strength, spirits depressed great restlessness, yet indisposed to move, with but little sleep night or day.

* Our natural pulse is 55 or 60 per minute, and our respiration about twenty, to which they are now reduced.—G. S.

The result of Dr. Miller's first visit was an interview with our attendant physician, who cheerfully gave our case into his hands. From that time Dr. Miller visited us daily, though living some five miles from us and crowded with business at his Institute. From the first treatment he gave us, we felt a sort of removal from "the valley of the shadow of death" where we had so long lain. He usually spent one hour with us, and applied his remedies with an energy that astonished us. We often said to him, "Doctor, you cannot be laboring thus barely for money." He was truly in earnest, and knew well our case was most critical. For four weeks he continued his daily visits and earnest efforts which proved successful, and after visiting us occasionally for two weeks more left us, saying, "you must come and see me now."

We have made the foregoing statement unknown to Dr. Miller and out of gratitude to him as God's instrument in our recovery from the gates of the grave. The hand of God is visible to us in all this. First of all, then, we thank and praise God and the Lamb for our prolonged life. Next as God's instrument, we thank Dr. Miller for his faithful and kind services, which have resulted in our restoration, thus far. We wish Dr. Miller success, and he cannot fail of it. If you are sick, try him; we doubt not, if your case is a curable one, he will give you back health. Let him examine you. If he cannot help you, he will tell you so; he will not deceive you about it.

The following is a notice found in The Methodist of this city, two weeks ago; and we most cordially unite in the commendation at its close:

TURKISH BATHS.

Dr. E. P. Miller, the founder of the first Turkish bath in this city, has just opened a new and elegant establishment at 41 West Twenty-sixth street, New York. He has a house with fifty rooms, for transient and permanent boarders and patients, with excellent facilities for applying the Turkish baths, Electric baths, Water Cure, Movement Cure, and Lifting Cure.

His house is kept on strictly temperance principles, free from tobacco smoke, and affords a quiet home for those visiting the city for a longer or shorter time.

The Turkish baths are almost a specific for colds, catarrh, sore throat, bronchitis, rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, and many other forms of acute and chronic diseases.

We commend this establishment to all our readers who wish to regain lost health, prevent disease, or secure a quiet, pleasant home in the city.—Herald of Life.

Conference Minutes

Conference Secretaries will please make their reports as interesting as possible. This can be done by making them condensed and pointed, and by omitting all statements of mere forms.

Iowa A. C. Conference.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT.

The second Q. M. of this District commenced at Greely Feb. 3. Members present, Ministers: F. H. Kenny, D. A. Dickinson, H. H. Janes, J. W. Said, C. W. Pitcher, M. J. James. Delegates: L. Barnes, A. D. Townsend, J. Barnes. Reports of Ministers showed not only a zeal according to knowledge, but a spirit of self-denial, devotion and consecration that God their Father was well pleased with. Our hearts were cheered, and we felt encouraged.

Reports of churches showed a coming up. God can but bless the united labors of his people. After due consultation, the following preamble and resolutions were passed unanimously:

WHEREAS, the harvest is great, the laborers few, the time short, and therefore what is done must be done quickly; and

WHEREAS, many of our ministers are spending their time at home, who should be out preaching, and would be, but for want of means; and thus the cause is hindered and souls are lost; and

WHEREAS the call for help is imperative, and we would have our ministers untrammelled, that they may go everywhere preaching the gospel; therefore,

Resolved, that this Conference recommend that each church instruct their deacons and elders to visit their ministers and pastors and ascertain what is needed to help them out into the field; report to the church, and then let the church do her part of the preaching by supplying the temporal wants of the Minister, while he feeds them with spiritual food; and the cause will be built up and souls saved.

WHEREAS, we believe it to be for the advancement of the cause; the edification and comfort of the brethren to know of each other's prosperity, labors of love, and victories, through our Lord Jesus Christ, therefore

Resolved, that we instruct our ministers and delegates to bring written reports. We want to know what you are doing, how and where. And, also, what God is doing for you.

Brethren and friends were in from Iron Hill, Cascade, Manchester, Dutch Town, Strawberry Point, Elk Creek, and York. The preaching was all good, and it cheered our hearts greatly. One manifested a desire to serve the Lord. Increasing interest from the first.

Adjourned, to meet at Manchester, April 28. M. J. JAMES, Sec'y.

Iowa Christian Conference. Q. M.

Met Jan. 28. [place not given. ED.] Br. Durand chosen Chairman, and J. J. Towsley Secretary pro tem. Br. C. L. Jones chosen delegate for the [illegible] Grove church. Visiting brethren are invited to take part with us. N. T. Eggleston was received to membership.

Voted to hold the next Q. M. at Clear Lake, March 10. The meeting was well attended, and we trust some good was done in reclaiming backsliders and turning sinners to God. Preaching by Brn. A. H. Eggleston, N. F. Eggleston, L. Lyons, and P. S. W. Deyo.

NORTHERN DISTRICT Q. M.

The third Q. M. was held at Millbrook, Feb. 2-5, Eld. John Bower, chairman. D. Weaver, L. W. King, and S. Dudley, Business Committee. Report of Evangelist received, and committee discharged. Reports of ministers and churches, encouraging. Br. Jasper H. Palmer was received into the Conference, and granted a license. E. B. Scott was appointed treasurer. Meetings well attended, and the influence was good.

E. B. SCOTT, Sec'y.

Christians might avoid much unhappiness if they would but believe that God is able to make them happy without anything else. God has been depriving me of one blessing after another, but as every one was removed, he has come in and filled up its place, and now when I am a cripple, and not able to move, I am happier than ever I was in my life before, or ever expected to be, and if I had believed this twenty years ago, I might have been spared much anxiety.—Dr. Payson.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 21, 1871.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ THE TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil; the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D R Mansfield, TREASURER; O. R. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,

To whom all communications should be addressed.

Business Agent's Department.

We expected some better paper for THE TIMES this week, but there has been a delay in its manufacture. We hope next week to have a better quality to use.

For the English Sister.

Mrs. C. S. H., D. C., J. D. W. C., E. B., C. P., G. G. Your contributions are all received, and forwarded with our own.

A Colporteur's Notes.

We have just published a little pamphlet with the above title for Br. J. H. Wadsworth, the well-known pedestrian Advent Colporteur, whose walks through the South interested us so much within a year or two. It gives some incidents of his travels, and an exposition of the faith, with other matter. Sent post paid for 10c. tf.

Registered Letters.

We cannot advise our correspondents to send us money in "registered letters." They are no safer than letters sent in the ordinary way. If you cannot obtain a post office order, send in a strictly fastened letter, the ordinary way. Your 15c paid for registering does not insure safety. Over a thousand registered letters were stolen last year, and the government makes no restitution in case of loss.

Woman and her Work.

This is a monthly journal of 16 pp., established for the purpose of enlarging the sphere of woman's usefulness, especially in that department which becomes her so well, Christian charity. Published at Concord, N. H. Mrs. T. P. Sargent, Editor; assisted by Mrs. E. S. Jennings, Mrs. H. B. Hastings, and others.

Single copies, $1 a year. Address Mrs. T. P. Sargent, Box 466, Concord, N. H.

N. B.—New subscribers to both papers, will receive THE TIMES (weekly) and Woman and her Works (monthly), for $2 25 a year. Six months for $1.15. tf

---

THE National Watch Company, of Elgin, are now turning out over one hundred finished watch movements daily, or, three thousand per month—or thirty-six thousand per annum—and even at this rate, so general is the reputation of their watches for accurate time-keeping, they are not able to fully supply the demand. It is expected that their production this year will reach 50,000 movements. Well may the question be asked, what becomes of all the Watches?

The Delay.

Because your letter or article does not appear IMMEDIATELY, do not therefore conclude that it is rejected. Sometimes we receive matter enough in one week to fill six papers; and then, again, a week will pass in which we receive but few articles. The editor must be allowed to use his own judgment in the selection of matter out from what is contributed, and the time when it shall appear, and will endeavor to do justice to all. We sometimes fear correspondents forget that the paper is intended for the body at large, and not for the convenience of a few. Be patient. We have to be.

Obituary.

FIELD. In Yankton, D. T., Jan. 23, 1871, Emily M., wife of Levi Field, and daughter of Moses and Sarah Atkinson; aged 43 years and 6 days.

She was born in Stanstead, C. E. Married 21 years ago. Converted about five years ago at Mindora, Wis. under the labors of Eld. P. W. Hough. Came last fall to Yankton, in hopes of improving her health; but having been a sweet singer, and having overtaxed her vocal powers, together with exposure to atmospheric changes, bronchitis in its most malignant form hurried her away. She had put her house in order; had done what she could, was ready for her change. Preferred for several days extreme bodily suffering to stupefying medicines, that her mind might be clear and her thoughts deliberate. Said it had seemed hard to part with her family, but felt reconciled with assurance that the Lord would provide and take care of them. Was very happy; said she loved Jesus, and Jesus loved her; and she knew she would come up at the first resurrection. Selected John 11: 25 for a text for her funeral sermon, dictating the manner of its treatment, alluding especially to the resurrection. Her remains were sent to Newport, Vt., to rest beside those of her little son. Highly esteemed, she has passed away, among strangers as the Christian dies. Being dead she yet speaketh. May the Lord abundantly bless her husband and remaining children, her aged parents, with other kindred and friends. C. W. BATCHELLER.

CROCKER. In Genoa, DeKalb Co., Ill., Feb. 7, 1871, Eld. Allen Crocker: aged 77 years, 9 months, and 23 days.

He leaves a companion, one son (Eld. A. A. Crocker) and three daughters to mourn his loss.

Father Crocker was born in Shutesbury, Mass., April 14, 1793. Entered the ministry at the age of twenty-two years. Thus for a period of over one-half a century, he continued a faithful minister of the New Testament, in the Christian and Baptist denominations, the greater portion of the time with the former. Was very vigorous until about seven years since, when his bodily health was impaired by a stroke of paralysis. Since this he has labored but little in the ministry, but has occupied a prominent position with those who are looking for the Savior's return.

Thus a father in Israel has fallen, one with whom I have taken sweet and profitable counsel, in this, the early part of my ministerial labors. But thank God, we shall meet in the morn of the resurrection, as we endeavored to show to a large circle of mourning and sympathizing friends, from the text—"If a man die shall he live again?" Heb. 11: 14, Eld. Underwood, of the M. E. Church, assisting. M. MCCULLOCH.

MASE. At South Grove, Ill., Feb. 2, 1871, James Mase: in the 71st year of his age.

Thus we are called upon to witness the removal of one that was loved and respected by all who knew him. He was born in England, and after spending the best part of his life there, removed to this country. The Lord favored him with a privilege, in common with many others, of hearing the good news of the coming Kingdom preached, by H. G. McCulloch, some eight years ago. This was embraced by him, as well as his kindred truths; and on them he leaned until his death. He has gone to rest as a stick of timber fully prepared for that beautiful structure that Jesus will complete when he comes. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from Heb. 13: 14. E. H. BURRINGTON.

DANIELS. In Jackson, Mich., Feb. 13, 1871, little Maud Pearl, only daughter of Br. and Sr. L. F. Daniels; aged 2 years and 7 months.

In answer to a telegram I left home to attend the funeral and comfort the mourner's hearts, which I endeavored to do, using as a basis for remarks, 1 Thes. 4: 18—"Comfort one another with these words."

D. R. MANSFIELD.

TRAFTON. In Minneapolis, Minn., Jan. 24, 1871, Oel Ray, son of Mathew E. and Carrie Trafton; aged 1 years and 6 months.

The parents are in deep affliction in the loss of a beautiful and promising child; but are comforted with the hope of his return from "the land of the enemy."

OEL RAY FASSETT.

AULT. In Montpelier, Ohio, Jan. 29, 1871. Br. Daniel Ault; aged 57 years, 7 months and 8 days.

He embraced the blessed hope not quite a year ago, under the labors of Br. J. M. Smith. He rests in that hope. Words of comfort by the writer. [illegible] C. FOX.

AT HOME.

It is said that an author was recently obliged by his publisher to cut out of his story the narrative of a man who committed suicide in order to enable his family to realize his life insurance policy. The thing was too incredible, even for a modern novel. Only a few days ago, this very improbability actually occurred. The suicide drowned himself in the Ohio River. The Company refusing to pay, the widow has sued them.—One of the most remarkable exhibitions of halos we have ever seen was on free exhibition at 1½ o'clock this (Saturday, 4th,) morning. The moon had declined about one-third from the zenith, and, nearly full, shone very bright. The wind blew steadily from the south-west, and carried over the face of the moon a thin filmy cloud, traveling apparently with great velocity; on this stratum were lined three distinct, bright concentric halos with intervening spaces of varying colors. Between the moon and the nearest halo was a distance of about 3°, colored from the pale white of the moon seen through the fleecy cloud, to a strong yellow which faded to the white ring, and in the second space about 6° became a vivid red, and in the outer circle full 10° was a beautiful pale green fringed with the outer white halo which separated it from the bluish white of the surrounding sky. These colors faded away and grew out again as the density of the cloud raised, and for about a quarter of an hour, until the sky became clear, it continued in beautiful varying changes.—Hartford Courant. Another observer in New York says: The moon was unusually bright, surrounded by a broad white halo of great brilliancy, which in turn was surrounded by a ring composed of all the colors of a rainbow, and about as broad.—Relics of an ancient race have been discovered in a cave in Iowa, on the line of the Dubuque and Minnesota Railway. The skeletons were very large, and about them were found remains or indications of cloths, ornaments, besides copper implements. This extinct race apparently enjoyed a much higher degree of civilization than any of their successors on this continent previous to the arrival of the Europeans. No estimate has been made of the time since they became extinct.—The peaceful development of the United States adds, every few years, to the country a population equal to that of a second-class European Kingdom like Denmark, Belgium, or Bavaria, the coveted possession of which provokes sanguinary rivalries between contiguous States. A province like Lorraine, the shifting ownership of which, in Europe, will produce the burning animosities of a century, is added to the United States every twelvemonth.

ABROAD.

The armistice continues in France; the elections have all been held; and the National Assembly convened. It is composed largely of "Conservatives," or those favoring a Monarchal government. The out and out Republicans, as well as Bonapartists are a feeble minority. Nevertheless, M. Thiers has been chosen President for the present, and a government will be organized under his leadership to treat with the Germans, whether for war or for peace; and the final settlement of the form of government will be referred to a vote of the entire people as soon as may be. Napoleon's last manifesto, like almost every movement he has made for some years past, was a mistake and a damage to him. His claim to be the only legal ruler of France was too absurd, even for Bonaparte loving Frenchmen. Still many predict that he will yet be restored; and when one looks over the wonders of the past six months, he is a bold prophet that dares say he surely will not be. But after sifting the reports of various correspondents, we are of the opinion that he will not be restored to the throne of France; and that any attempt to reestablish the empire would result in civil war.

Meanwhile France is ripe for internal disorders, and great suffering and misery prevail. From all parts of the United States and England help is being forwarded for her poor; but this can only reach a tithe of the distressed ones. Peace will probably be concluded upon the best possible terms; and then as affairs settle a little, we shall begin to know something of what these two great peoples have actually lost in this the most fearful of national duels.

A cable telegram states that the Eastern question has been satisfactorily settled, and the concurrence of France is now alone requisite to dispose of the difficulty. The month of February may possibly become notable for having witnessed the settlement both of an actual and possible European conflict of the first magnitude. No man who pays any attention to the under current of modern history can conclude that treaties of amity at Paris and London will inaugurate an era of peace and good-will among the nations of the old world. The political system of Europe is far too unequally balanced to admit as yet of anything like stable equilibrium. When the wars of the dynasties have ended, the wars of the people must begin.—The war with France comes to a pause, leaving in the hands of the Germans, as prisoners of war, one Emperor, three or four Marshals, 6,000 cannons and about 800,000 men. In the history of the world, nothing like this has been heard of. In six short months it has all been done.

BORDEAUX, Feb. 19.—In the Assembly, yesterday, Keller presented a declaration bearing the signatures of the Deputies of Haut and Bas Rhine, Meurth and Moselle, protesting in behalf of the inhabitants of those departments against the separation of Alsace and Lorraine from France. The proposal of Keller was referred to a committee, who subsequently submitted a report expressing the strongest sympathy with the population of Alsace and Lorraine, and directing that the declaration of Keller be spread upon the records of the Assembly, and referred to the French negotiators when they came to treat with Prussia. In the Assembly President Grevy read a letter from M. Thiers announcing his appearance with the new minister in the Assembly on Saturday. M. Rochfort protested against the display of military force around the Chamber. During the discussion upon the declaration of M. Keller in the committee, yesterday, Gens. Chanzy and Billiot each declared that a defensive war could, if necessary, be successfully prosecuted. The number of deputies in attendance to-day exceeds 600. The Assembly conferred the executive power of the Government upon Thiers. Keller, in a speech, adjured his colleagues to proclaim inviolable attachment to Alsace and Lorraine. The majority of the Chamber appeared disposed to delay the consideration of the subject, but Thiers strongly insisted on immediate consideration, saying that the Chamber must, on its own responsibility, clearly declare its wishes upon this question. The Chamber went into committee, on motion of Keller, and the sitting was subsequently suspended.—Immediately after the vote in the Assembly, the English, Austrian, and Italian ambassadors officially visited Thiers and recognized the French Government.

BERLIN, Feb. 19—Napoleon has received notification not to again overstep the privilege of a prisoner, and abstain from any interference in politics in the form of protests or proclamations. Orders have been given to watch him closely.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

The Moabite stone is a wonderful record, engraved on the hardest kind of stone, in the Phenician, or old Hebrew letters, and is the monument of that Mesha who, when hard pressed by war, offered up his favorite son who should have reigned in his stead, as a burnt offering to Khemosh, the god of the Moabites. This stone fully confirms the scriptural account, and also shows how powerful was the worship of Baal, Khemosh and Astarte, in the days of Elijah.—An exchange remarks that if Maximilian received the papal blessing when he started on his ill-fated expedition, its issue is accounted for. Pio Nono blessed Charles Albert, and he succumbed to Radetsky at Novara; he blessed the King of Naples, and Garibaldi drove him from his throne; he sent his blessing and the Golden Rose to Isabella of Spain, and she became an exile; he blessed the first Roman railroad, and the first train ran off the line; he blessed a convent of monks, and the convent fell down upon all that were in it.—The Weekly Register gives an account of some dramatic performances at St. Patrick's School, Nottingham, which appear to have been oddly composed of Cinderella and the joyful scenes from the Incarnation of our Lord, viz., the appearance of the angels to the shepherds, the arrival of the shepherds at the cave, and their subsequent entrance into Bethlehem announcing the 'tidings of great joy!'" We are told that "the united adoration of the angels and shepherds at the manger" was in theatrical parlance "the great feature of the evening, and invariably elicited an encore."—The Banner of Light (Spiritist) says if a disembodied spirit should desire to indulge the habit of smoking, it has the facilities for doing so in another life! And this is one of the attractions of the Spiritualists' future state!—An exchange tells of a man who puts $12 a year into the church contribution-box, and $28.48 into his tobacco-box. The former does not often get such a large proportion.

Binding "The Times."

EMERSON'S SELF BINDER.

This binder is in appearance precisely like the cover of a regularly bound book. Its peculiar device for self-binding consists of two narrow strips of thin steel inserted in firmly glued casings of binders' cloth on each inside edge of the back, and working hinge-like, as do the lids. The front, or left hand side, contains eyelet-holes, from which heavy threads, with needles, pass through the papers and through corresponding eyelets in the back or right hand strips, and are firmly secured to the "cleat" or fastener by "belaying"—a figure 8 turn—the work of a moment. The flexible back adjusts itself to any thickness of papers, and the strips hold them as in a vice, quite as firmly and neatly as if bound regularly.

We commend this binder to our subscribers. It is a practical thing. The TIMES, as received from week to week, can be added to the file in a minute's time; and the cover will contain over a year's numbers. The prices of these covers are as follows: Leather and cloth $2 50; Cloth, $2 00; Muslin and Marbled Paper, $1 75. Sent free of charge to any subscriber, on receipt of price. Let none who wish to preserve their papers be without this useful binder.

FILES! FILES!

We also furnish a nice newspaper file, post-paid, for 60c. This binds the papers in convenient form, but has no covers.

Advertise "The Times."

We will furnish envelopes bearing an advertisement of THE TIMES, with directions for postmasters to return if not called for, with a blank space in which to write name and postoffice, at the rate of 10c. for a package of twenty-five; sent by mail post-paid. Our friends can by this means obtain a good envelope, cheap, and, at the same time, aid us by circulating an advertisement of our paper.

To those desiring envelopes with their own business card and return address, we offer the following terms: Not less than FIVE HUNDRED envelopes by express, $6; by mail, $6 25. PROVIDED, we are allowed to put upon them the following imprint:

☞ Cheap envelope printing by THE ADVENT TIMES, Buchanan, Mich. Publishers of standard Advent periodicals, books and tracts. SPECIMENS SENT FREE.

A CORRESPONDENT says: "Will you not suggest to the readers of THE TIMES that they may present five of their friends or neighbors with five ADVENT TIMES envelopes each, only costing 10c., and thus be the means of advertising the paper beyond the circle of their own correspondents? Also, they might put a Gem Tract in each."

The next session of the Western Ministerial Conference will be held at Amboy, Ill., commencing Wednesday, March 29, at 2 o'clock, p. m. It is desirable that all the Conferences be represented. Let us have a general rally.

J. V. HIMES, Pres't.

WM. SHELDON, Sec'y.

NEW TRACT.—All who subscribed for the publication of Br. Geo. Thomson's tract, are requested to send the amount to Eld. Himes at once, as the work is now ready for delivery. And any who would like to assist in its circulation, are requested to do so. Send such sums as you can. Any who donate shall receive books in return to the amount of their donations.

The work contains 88pp. and is a review of Warren's "Modern Sadduceeism." It will interest and be of use to all. 10c. post-paid; 75c. a dozen. Address: Eld. Geo. Thomson, Attica, Wis.—or M. D. Perry, Arena, Wis.

BUCHANAN, - - - - - MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 28, 1871.

Turn we now to the amusements of the flesh—to the censuous pleasures, which do so much dominate over the minds of our people—to the dance—the theater, and to the lower animal "pleasures" in which so many indulge. What are they and whither do they lead? Downward! soul and body and mind—downward, in time and in eternity! My opposition is to all amusements which leave the body, the mind, or the soul, in a lower condition than that in which they found it. But, unfortunately, this is the class which is mainly in the ascendent with pleasure seekers. They are eager to gratify the animal in their nature, even though the intellectual and spiritual suffer from the operation. It is against such that I enter my protest; for I verily believe that much of the general demoralization which exists, results from the low nature of the amusements of the masses, combined with their indulgence in base habits, which cannot properly come under this head but are the natural outgrowth of that class of amusements which I have attempted to anathemize.—Life Boat.

—One of the sad facts of the present day is, that the professed church is ministering just such amusements to the world—"the amusements of the flesh." "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." Is there no remedy? Only one. "Come out from among them; be ye separate; touch not the unclean thing."

An Innovation.

The article on another page concerning the attempt to put new life into the doctrine of a temporal millennium, is further illustrated by the following extracts:

Bishop Henshaw, referring to post-millernialism, says:—"So far as we have been able to investigate its history, it was first advanced by Rev. Dr. Whitby, the commentator, and afterwards advocated by Hammond, Hopkins, Scott, Dwight, Bougue, and others, has been received without careful examination by the majority of evangelical divines in the present day."

Joshua Spaulding, pastor of the Tacernacle church in Salem, Mass., in 1796, says: "It was the expectation of believers anciently that probationary time would end, and the great day of God's wrath would come before the millennial kingdom under the seventh trumpet. But in the last century an opinion gained currency that the millennium would be probationary time; and therefore the coming of Christ and overthrow of this world of the ungodly would not take place till some time after the millennium. This opinion has constantly prevailed; all hands, learned and unlearned, have been employed to propagate it, and very little has been done to oppose it; and for about half a century it has been the common belief, consequently people have laid aside all expectation that the day of the Lord is nigh, and old and young, ministers and people, have agreed to say, 'The Lord delayeth his coming.'"

Again he says:—"The sentiments we oppose did not generally prevail, especially among the common people, till the present (eighteenth) century. Even as late as the great earthquake, 1755, many Christian people were looking, not for the modern millennium, but for the second coming of Christ. I have the testimony of elderly Christian people, in several parts of New England, that within their remembrance, this doctrine was first advanced in the places where they lived, and have heard them name the ministers who first preached it in their churches."

Tender Views of The Hereafter.

In our humble judgment, theology makes no greater mistake than when it tries to scare men with future terrors whose grim and terrific magnitude no mortal comprehension can grasp. Add to this, that it frequently describes hell as a "place," of real topographical and physical features, and we have a lurid vision, melancholy and lothesome to contemplate, as making a part of the divine economy of an infinite Father, but still of very little practical and direct force, as a power to restrain men from sin.

A clergyman in one of our large cities, a few Sabbaths since, took occasion to assure his hearers, in effect, that all this awful physical agony; the eternal scorching of the never-consumed body; the licking up of the exhaustless fountains of life by the blue and liquid flames of the nether regions; the racking, tearing, eternal agonies of the poor frame, whose life is to be perpetually renewed, and its senses ever newly quickened, that its tortures may be eternal,—that all this indescribable and inconceivable agony, would be only simple and unadulterated pleasure, compared with the mental suffering of the damned. He said,—this gentle disciple of a divine Teacher who held out a kindly hand, and whispered a word of ineffable tenderness, to the very outcasts of earth—that these red-hot instruments of bodily torment, would be sought, in that other world, as a sort of pastime, in comparison with its other darkness and pangs of sorrow: that the poor blighted souls there would run and lay themselves down on the burning floor of hell, and wrap about their crisped and blackened, but still acutely sensitive bodies the lurid flames, as the tired man of earth seeks the refreshment of his clean, cool couch, and gives himself to the kindly refreshment of sleep.

Now, all this sort of thing may be an essential part of some systems of theology; but the teachers of those systems must have extremely odd notions of recreation, and wonderfully vivid imaginations, to understand how human souls—however damned, or doubly damned, are ever going to reach a condition so desperate or so terrible, that this sort of thing will be genuine pleasure.

And we believe that the sooner theology gives up the abortive effort to redeem the world by teaching such theories, the better it will be for humanity and for the church itself.—Omaha Tribune.

The Truth Told.

Dr. John Hall, the celebrated Presbyterian Minister of New York, preached upon the passover recently. We quote the following interesting passage from the Herald's report;

The Lord's people are strangers and pilgrims, and Israel must therefore

EAT IN HASTE AND BE READY

to enter on their journey at the Lord's bidding. Just so it is with those whom the Savior delivers. Hence the necessity to have their loins girt and their lights burning, and to be as those who wait for the coming of the Son of man. God's apprisal of the Egyptians and of the Hebrews of what was coming was referred to, but the former paid no heed to the warning. The Egyptians passed the hours pleasantly in sleeping, while Israel was patiently waiting. But soon there was a bitter cry and wailing heard all over the land, for there was not a house wherein there was not one dead of all the Egyptians, and the field of Zoan was turned into mourning and a place of sepulchre. It was then seen with what fearful power God can strike when his anger is provoked. The objections raised by cavillers to this event were met. It was not to be for a day, but for all time, and was to be a type for the atonement, and hence the care with which the details are given. The Hebrews looked forward to and we look backward and see

CHRIST OUR PASSOVER SACRIFICED FOR US.

We see Egypt the type of a doomed world; in sin, and therefore under the rod. The world lieth in wickedness. What high hill has not had its idolatrous altars? What forest has not witnessed the basest crime perpetrated beneath its shade? and what soil has not been saturated with human gore and sent up its cry for vengeance? The curse of God rests upon all and soon will be carried into effect, for the Lord is not slack concerning his promise, though he may be long suffering. But the world is oblivious, as was Egypt, and goes quietly to sleep in its sins. It argues that mankind is making rapid progress, and the lamps of science hang out everywhere, and men cannot bear to hear that the earth and the works that are therein shall be burned up. But the day of retribution is at hand. We live in a doomed world; that is certain, and all who seek to lay up treasures here should lay it to heart.

BUT ALL ARE NOT DOOMED.

Christ our passover is sacrificed for us; and though Israel may be in Egypt, he shall be saved. The grace of God, which bringeth salvation, hath appeared, and all men, without exception, and every man, of any Church, time or land, is invited to join God's Israel and escape from Egypt. But it is not enough to shed the blood; it must be applied also, and we must feed on Christ in our hearts by faith.

The Bible in England.

The readiest way for a mediocre man to gain notoriety is, as we all know, for him to proclaim himself an infidel and attack the Bible. His blows may be as feeble as a hen's pecking, but they are sure to attract notice because of the holy and tender regard in which the object that he assails is held by the noblest part of the race. We are always sorry, however, when a man of natural ability is driven to such straits as these to produce a sensation and draw notice to himself; and were especially sorry to find so much of this blue-light stage-thunder in the book just issued by Mr. Conway in England, in which he professes to give a resume of his philosophy or religion which life has taught him.

Mr. Conway is an American, and known to many of us as a clever contributor to some of the magazines and a well meaning man, whose anxiety for bold expressions, however, very much outruns his thought or judgment. It has noticeably done so in this instance. He informs us that in his teens he had made Christian's journey from the City of Destruction to Zion, and reached the feet of Christ. He found (which will, to all other Christians, appear a remarkable experience) that he had nothing further to do but to praise him in words and call himself a miserable sinner; but, learning that better work was done in the City of Destruction, he set out on the back track. Of course, there can be nothing new in the ideas he advances; the jeers at Christianity are the old and well-worn campaigners with which we are all familiar; but we confess ourselves surprised at the want of policy and taste in their manner. Writing for earnest men, Mr. Conway should have known that an earnest doubter, to command attention, would not turn to the gravest subject which the human soul can approach with the quips and cheap ribaldry of a clown. "The myths of the "New Testament," he tells us, "are but a rehash of the Old and those of Greece; and Jesus wears the old clothes which have served Moses and Zoroaster in their turn." It is over the children who are permitted to read the Bible that he lifts up his voice in shrill lamentation. "They are no more capable of comprehending what is pure in its pages than they are Kant's metaphysics, while they learn from it scandals which are without a name. Millions of childish hearts and minds first soiled by contact with those obscene pages are offered each year as a holocaust," etc. Mr. Conway has been unfortunate in his childish reminiscences. The boy or girl who would dig among Levitical laws for obscure uncleanness must have an exceptionally keen scent for nastiness.

There is an effort, however, of more weight making in England to restrict the use of the Old Testament as a common school-book; the argument urged by Catholics (apart from sectarian differences), being that the Jewish patriarchs, addicted, as they were, to cheating, murder, and concubinage, are hardly the proper models upon which to mould the youthful English minds. There would be some force in this if any English boy is really dull enough to suppose that David or Jacob is offered as examples for his wholesale imitation, which we are loth to suppose is the case. It is not probable that any part of the Bible will be withdrawn from use in England. Intelligent Christians are keen enough to see that the doctrinal portions of the Scriptures are singularly adapted by divine inspiration, both in their form and wording, to the minds of children. The text-books of every other religion are accumulations of recondite maxims meant for the research of adults; but the parables and words of Jesus linger with the homely simplicity of an old friend in the child's mind until his eyes are opened, as age and knowledge come to him, and he finds that he has entertained a god unawares. Neither will the merely historical books, we think, ever give place in English education, as is suggested, to Shakspeare or Milton. It is quite true that the ways of God with men could be as plainly taught in the history of any nation as in that of the Jews; but it is equally true that they are not so taught in any book or by any nation. The Hebrews, avaricious and stiff-necked though they were, had always an overwhelming sense of the Divine Presence, equaled only by that of the Scotch Covenanter. They wrote down unflinchingly David a murderer, and Solomon an adulterer, thereby to show more clearly the Avenging Justice that pursued them. There is no history, and probably never will be one, where God and man are brought face to face with such inexorable fidelity to fact in the narative, such dramatic force of description, or expression so lofty and pure. It will be long before the English will give up the dullest books in the Hebraic history as a wholesome and pure regimen for their children.—N. Y. Tribune.

Thoughts From "Exchanges".

Says Zion's Herald: How much happier they who work and wait, who like Isaiah and Jeremiah, Paul and Luther, cling to the church, while they seek to bring her into more perfect union with Christ. Only thus can any reform prevail. Only thus does any reformer prevent his name from being cast out as evil, even if his cause triumphs. Yes, but suppose the church force him out, excommunicates, or, at least, disfellowships the reformer: what then?—The same paper says: Every day some new scheme or device of infidelity to diffuse its poison crops to the surface. Lectures, interesting, fascinating, plausible, yet foul with unbelief; tracts scattered by the most zealous of colporteurs, at the very gates of Christian temples; entertainments charming taste and bewitching fancy; personal effort as serious and determined as Christian ever made for Christ,—all these abound around us.—The Methodist:—There is a disposition among many to underestimate the value of religious belief. Doctrines are supposed to be the dry bones of theology, and to have no special interest for any save professed theologians, just as osteology interests the anatomist more than others. Those who thus think we are not able to clothe these dry bones with flesh and make them live; they turn from them in disgust, such as they feel when they seek to avoid a charnel-house. The thoughtful believer, however, finds in good doctrine living forms of truth and of beauty, which only please him by their loveliness, but help to guide him in the right way. The N. Y. Herald says of Dr. Hall: His is that eloquence which springs from the most thorough belief in and sympathy with the truths uttered and the people who hear them, and which expresses itself in Christian exactness and personal directness. Whoever has listened to the Rev. Dr. Cumming, of London, will understand more readily what sort of eloquence this is.—The Herald has also became an evangelist, and proposes a national church: As we are already one people, speaking a common tongue, let us hope that we soon shall be one people, worshiping at a common shrine. One Lord, one faith, one baptism, with no isms. Let that be our motto.—The Baptist Union: Dr. Kendrick says, if infants cannot be regenerated before they come to the "accountable period," then they are consigned "to inevitable predition." We think not. God is not shut up to such necessities as we make for him. How infants are saved, is a matter wholly beyond our ken. It was not necessary for us to know, and therefore, the Bible does not tell us. It only tells us that "of such is the kingdom of heaven," and this is consolation sufficient for every mourning parent's heart.—The N. Y. Times on the war says: Those who have no faith in the Divine influence over human affairs, may satisfy themselves with the thought that no other agency than that of man has been at work in the tremendous events which we have lately witnessed. But this attitude of skepticism is not yet universal, and there must be many who have recalled the history of France for years past, and have believed they saw what in former and simpler times would have been called "a judgment" upon the nation. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap," is a warning not less applicable to nations than to individuals.—The Christian Observer: The simple love of the truth is a blessed virture which insures the existence and growth of many others, while the love of a one-sided view of truth, it is feared, is not an uncommon substitute, and one which is by no means unpopular. The Advance: And so we learn that a wise discrimination must be made in this matter of encountering human prejudices. Sometimes they must, at first, be dextrously avoided, and then gradually be undermined; and sometimes they must receive the most powerful shock which can be imparted by the batteries of right reason.—Examiner and Chronicle: It is unreasonable, it is the hight of folly—and the history of philosophy abundantly proves it to be so—for man to strive, by reason alone, to "find out God." It it an impossibility; and he whose reason leads him to confess the fact, and to accept the reasonable necessity of revelation, and of faith therein, is alone entitled to call himself wise.

Beware of impatience of contradiction. Do not condemn or think hardly of those who cannot see just as you see, or judge it their duty to contradict you.—Wesley.

That death and sleep are very much alike, the sages all tell us; but see how attractively Leigh Hunt describes the latter: "It is a delicate moment, certainly, that of being well nestled in bed, and feeling that you shall drop gently to sleep. The good is to come—not past; the limbs have been just tired enough to render the remaining in one position delightful; the labor of the day is done. A gentle failure of the perceptions comes creeping over one; the spirit of consciousness disengages itself more and more with slow and hushing degrees, like a mother detatching her hand from that of her sleeping child. The mind seems to have a balmy lid closing over it, like the eye; 'tis closing, 'tis closing, 'tis closing—'tis closed."

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 28, 1871.

Turn we now to the amusements of the flesh—to the sensuous pleasures, which do so much dominate over the minds of our people—to the dance—the theater, and to the lower animal "pleasures" in which so many indulge. What are they and whither do they lead? Downward! soul and body and mind—downward, in time and in eternity! My opposition is to all amusements which leave the body, the mind, or the soul, in a lower condition than that in which they found it. But, unfortunately, this is the class which is mainly in the ascendent with pleasure seekers. They are eager to gratify the animal in their nature, even though the intellectual and spiritual suffer from the operation. It is against such that I enter my protest; for I verily believe that much of the general demoralization which exists, results from the low nature of the amusements of the masses, combined with their indulgence in base habits, which cannot properly come under this head but are the natural outgrowth of that class of amusements which I have attempted to anathemize.—Life Boat.

—One of the sad facts of the present day is, that the professed church is ministering just such amusements to the world—"the amusements of the flesh." "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," Is there no remedy? Only one. "Come out from among them; be ye separate; touch not the unclean thing."

An Innovation.

The article on another page concerning the attempt to put new life into the doctrine of a temporal millennium, is further illustrated by the following extracts:

Bishop Henshaw, referring to post-millennialism, says:—"So far as we have been able to investigate its history, it was first advanced by Rev. Dr. Whitby, the commentator, and afterwards advocated by Hammond, Hopkins, Scott, Dwight, Bougue, and others, has been received without careful examination by the majority of evangelical divines in the present day."

Joshua Spaulding, pastor of the Tabernacle church in Salem, Mass., in 1796, says: "It was the expectation of believers anciently that probationary time would end, and the great day of God's wrath would come before the millennial kingdom under the seventh trumpet. But in the last century an opinion gained currency that the millennium would be probationary time; and therefore the coming of Christ and overthrow of this world of the ungodly would not take place till some time after the millennium. This opinion has constantly prevailed; all hands, learned and unlearned, have been employed to propagate it, and very little has been done to oppose it; and for about half a century it has been the common belief, consequently people have laid aside all expectation that the day of the Lord is nigh, and old and young, ministers and people, have agreed to say, 'The Lord delayeth his coming.'"

Again he says:—"The sentiments we oppose did not generally prevail, especially among the common people, till the present (eighteenth) century. Even as late as the great earthquake, 1755, many Christian people were looking, not for the modern millennium, but for the second coming of Christ. I have the testimony of elderly Christian people, in several parts of New England, that within their remembrance, this doctrine was first advanced in the places where they lived, and have heard them name the ministers who first preached it in their churches."

Tender Views of The Hereafter.

In our humble judgment, theology makes no greater mistake than when it tries to scare men with future terrors whose grim and terrific magnitude no mortal comprehension can grasp. Add to this, that it frequently describes hell as a "place," of real topographical and physical features, and we have a lurid vision, melancholy and lothesome to contemplate, as making a part of the divine economy of an infinite Father, but still of very little practical and direct force, as a power to restrain men from sin.

A clergyman in one of our large cities, a few Sabbaths since, took occasion to assure his hearers, in effect, that all this awful physical agony; the eternal scorching of the never-consumed body; the licking up of the exhaustless fountains of life by the blue and liquid flames of the nether regions; the racking, tearing, eternal agonies of the poor frame, whose life is to be perpetually renewed, and its senses ever newly quickened, that its tortures may be eternal,—that all this indescribable and inconceivable agony, would be only simple and unadulterated pleasure, compared with the mental suffering of the damned. He said,—this gentle disciple of a divine Teacher who held out a kindly hand, and whispered a word of ineffable tenderness, to the very outcasts of earth—that these red-hot instruments of bodily torment, would be sought, in that other world, as a sort of pastime, in comparison with its other darkness and pangs of sorrow: that the poor blighted souls there would run and lay themselves down on the burning floor of hell, and wrap about their crisped and blackened, but still acutely sensitive bodies the lurid flames, as the tired man of earth seeks the refreshment of his clean, cool couch, and gives himself to the kindly refreshment of sleep.

Now, all this sort of thing may be an essential part of some systems of theology; but the teachers of those systems must have extremely odd notions of recreation, and wonderfully vivid imaginations, to understand how human souls—however damned, or doubly damned, are ever going to reach a condition so desperate or so terrible, that this sort of thing will be genuine pleasure.

And we believe that the sooner theology gives up the abortive effort to redeem the world by teaching such theories, the better it will be for humanity and for the church itself.—Omaha Tribune.

The Truth Told.

Dr. John Hall, the celebrated Presbyterian Minister of New York, preached upon the passover recently. We quote the following interesting passage from the Herald's report:

The Lord's people are strangers and pilgrims, and

EAT IN HASTE AND BE READY

to enter on their journey at the Lord's bidding. Just so it is with those whom the Savior delivers. Hence the necessity to have their loins girt and their lights burning, and to be as those who wait for the coming of the Son of man. God's apprisal of the Egyptians and of the Hebrews of what was coming was referred to, but the former paid no heed to the warning. The Egyptians passed the hours pleasantly in sleeping, while Israel was patiently waiting. But soon there was a bitter cry and wailing heard all over the land, for there was not a house wherein there was not one dead of all the Egyptians, and the field of Zoan was turned into mourning and a place of sepulchre. It was then seen with what fearful power God can strike when his anger is provoked. The objections raised by cavillers to this event were met. It was not to be for a day, but for all time, and was to be a type for the atonement, and hence the care with which the details are given. The Hebrews looked forward to and we look backward and see

CHRIST OUR PASSOVER SACRIFICED FOR US.

We see Egypt the type of a doomed world; in sin, and therefore under the rod. The world lieth in wickedness. What high hill has not had its idolatrous altars? What forest has not witnessed the basest crime perpetrated beneath its shade? and what soil has not been saturated with human gore and sent up its cry for vengeance? The curse of God rests upon all and soon will be carried into effect, for the Lord is not slack concerning his promise, though he may be long suffering. But the world is oblivious, as was Egypt, and goes quietly to sleep in its sins. It argues that mankind is making rapid progress, and the lamps of science hang out everywhere, and men cannot bear to hear that the earth and the works that are therein shall be burned up. But the day of retribution is at hand. We live in a doomed world: that is certain; and all who seek to lay up treasures there should lay it to heart.

BUT ALL ARE NOT DOOMED.

Christ our passover is sacrificed for us; and though Israel may be in Egypt, he shall be saved. The grace of God, which bringeth salvation, hath appeared, and all men, without exception, and every man, of any Church, time or land, is invited to join God's Israel and escape from Egypt. But it is not enough to shed the blood; it must be applied also, and we must feed on Christ in our hearts by faith.

The Bible in England.

The readiest way for a mediocre man to gain notoriety is, as we all know, for him to proclaim himself an infidel and attack the Bible. His blows may be as feeble as a hen's pecking, but they are sure to attract notice because of the holy and tender regard in which the object that he assails is held by the noblest part of the race. We are always sorry, however, when a man of natural ability is driven to such straits as these to produce a sensation and draw notice to himself; and were especially sorry to find so much of this blue-light stage-thunder in the book just issued by Mr. Conway in England, in which he professes to give a resume of his philosophy or religion which life has taught him.

Mr. Conway is an American, and known to many of us as a clever contributor to some of the magazines and a well meaning man, whose anxiety for bold expressions, however, very much outruns his thought or judgment. It has noticeably done so in this instance. He informs us that in his teens he had made Christian's journey from the City of Destruction to Zion, and reached the feet of Christ. He found (which will, to all other Christians, appear a remarkable experience) that he had nothing further to do but to praise him in words and call himself a miserable sinner; but, learning that better work was done in the City of Destruction, he set out on the back track. Of course, there can be nothing new in the ideas he advances; the jeers at Christianity are the old and well-worn campaigners with which we are all familiar; but we confess ourselves surprised at the want of policy and taste in their manner. Writing for earnest men, Mr. Conway should have known that an earnest doubter, to command attention, would not turn to the gravest subject which the human soul can approach with the quips and cheap ribaldry of a clown. "The myths of the 'New Testament,'" he tells us, "are but a rehash of the Old, and those of Greece; and Jesus wears the old clothes which have served Moses and Zoroaster in their turn." It is over the children who are permitted to read the Bible that he lifts up his voice in shrill lamentation. "They are no more capable of comprehending what is pure in its pages than they are Kant's metaphysics, while they learn from it scandals which are without a name. Millions of childish hearts and minds first soiled by contact with those obscene pages are offered each year as a holocaust," etc. Mr. Conway has been unfortunate in his childish reminiscences. The boy or girl who would dig among Levitical laws for obscure uncleanness must have an exceptionally keen scent for nastiness.

There is an effort, however, of more weight making in England to restrict the use of the Old Testament as a common school-book; the argument urged by Catholics (apart from sectarian differences), being that the Jewish patriarchs, addicted, as they were, to cheating, murder, and concubinage, are hardly the proper models upon which to mould the youthful English minds. There would be some force in this if any English boy is really dull enough to suppose that David or Jacob is offered as examples for his wholesale imitation, which we are loth to suppose is the case. It is not probable that any part of the Bible will be withdrawn from use in England. Intelligent Christians are keen enough to see that the doctrinal portions of the Scriptures are singularly adapted by divine inspiration, both in their form and wording, to the minds of children. The text-books of every other religion are accumulations of recondite maxims meant for the research of adults; but the parables and words of Jesus linger with the homely simplicity of an old friend in the child's mind until his eyes are opened, as age and knowledge come to him, and he finds that he has entertained a god unawares. Neither will the merely historical books, we think, ever give place in English education, as is suggested, to Shakspeare or Milton. It is quite true that the ways of God with men could be as plainly taught in the history of any nation as in that of the Jews; but it is equally true that they are not so taught in any book or by any nation. The Hebrews, avaricious and stiff-necked though they were, had always an overwhelming sense of the Divine Presence, equaled only by that of the Scotch Covenanter. They wrote down unflinchingly David a murderer, and Solomon an adulterer, thereby to show more clearly the Avenging Justice that pursued them. There is no history, and probably never will be one, where God and man are brought face to face with such inexorable fidelity to fact in the narrative, such dramatic force of description, or expression so lofty and pure. It will be long before the English will give up the dullest books in the Hebraic history as a wholesome and pure regimen for their children.—N. Y. Tribune.

Thoughts From "Exchanges".

Says Zion's Herald: How much happier they who work and wait, who like Isaiah and Jeremiah, Paul and Luther, cling to the church, while they seek to bring her into more perfect union with Christ. Only thus can any reform prevail. Only thus does any reformer prevent his name from being cast out as evil, even if his cause triumphs. Yes, but suppose the church force him out, excommunicates, or, at least, disfellowships the reformer: what then?—The same paper says: Every day some new scheme or device of infidelity to diffuse its poison crops to the surface. Lectures, interesting, fascinating, plausible, yet foul with unbelief; tracts scattered by the most zealous of colporteurs, at the very gates of Christian temples; entertainments charming taste and bewitching fancy; personal effort as serious and determined as Christian ever made for Christ,—all these abound around us.—The Methodist:—There is a disposition among many to underestimate the value of religious belief. Doctrines are supposed to be the dry bones of theology, and to have no special interest for any save professed theologians, just as osteology interests the anatomist more than others. Those who thus think we are not able to see over these dry bones with flesh and make them live; they turn from them in disgust, such as they feel when they seek to avoid a charnel-house. The thoughtful believer, however, finds in good doctrine living forms of truth and of beauty, which only please him by their loveliness, but help to guide him in the right way. The N. THE MEETING PLACE.

Where the faded flower shall freshen—
Freshen never more to fade;
Where the shaded sky shall brighten—
Brighten never more to shade;
Where the sun-blaze never scorches;
Where the star-beams cease to chill;
Where no tempest stirs the echoes
Of the wood, or wave, or hill;
Where the morn shall wake in gladness,
And the noon the joy prolong;
Where the day-light dies in fragrance,
'Mid the burst of holy song:
Brother, we shall meet and rest
'Mid the holy and the blest!

Where no shadow shall bewilder;
Where life's vain parade is o'er;
Where the sleep of sin is broken,
And the dreamer dreams no more;
Where the bond is never sever'd—
Partings, claspings, sob and moan—
Midnight waking, twilight weeping,
Heavy noontide—all are done:
Where the child has found its mother;
Where the mother finds the child!
Where dear families are gather'd,
That were scatter'd on the wild:
Brother, we shall meet and rest
'Mid the holy and the blest!

Where the hidden wound is healed;
Where the blighted life reblooms;
Where the smitten heart the freshness
Of its buoyant youth resumes;
Where the love that here we lavish
On the withering leaves of time,
Shall have fadeless flowers to fix on
In an ever spring-bright clime;
Where we find the joy of loving,
As we never loved before—
Loving on, unchill'd unhinder'd—
Loving once and evermore:
Brother, we shall meet and rest
'Mid the holy and the blest!

Where a blasted world shall brighten,
Underneath a bluer sphere,
And a softer, gentler sunshine
Shed its healing splendor here;
Where earth's barren vales shall blossom,
Putting on their robes of green,
And a purer, fairer Eden
Be where only wastes have been;
Where a King in kingly glory,
Such as earth has never known,
Shall assume the righteous sceptre,
Claim and wear the holy crown:
Brother, we shall meet and rest
'Mid the holy and the blest!

Fall of Babylon.

Will popery ever again have the ascendancy over the saints so as to punish with death for what it may call heresy. In order to answer this question we will examine the Scriptures and history, and ascertain, if we can, what his power was when it commenced, and how long it was to continue. In Dan. 7:25 it is said: "He shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High, and think to change times and laws. They shall be given into his hands until a time and times and dividing of time. In Rev. 11:2 it is called 1260 days. In v. 14 the same time is called "a time times and half a time." I think no one can successfully dispute that these different numbers, mean 1260 literal years. If this is true, then when his power to persecute or wear out the saints shall have continued 1260 years, it shall forever cease, for the judgment shall then sit and they shall take away his dominion or power to consume and destroy the saints unto the end.

In Dan. 12:6, the question is asked of the one standing upon the waters of the river—"How long shall it be to the end of these wonders"—that the saints shall be worn out by this persecuting power? He answers, with an oath, that it shall be for a time times and a half—the same length of time we have already ascertained to be 1260 years. We will now inquire when were the saints given into the hands of this power? In the year A. D. 533 Justinian, the Roman emperor, made an edict in favor of the Bishop of Rome, constituting him head of all the churches, and corrector of heretics. But this code could not go into effect at that time, for Rome as well as all Italy was then in the possession of the Ostrogoths. But in the year 538 they were conquered, and the Bishop or Pope placed in full power, according to Dan. 11:31—"Arms shall stand out on this part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily," or Paganism, which until this time had hindered the setting up the abomination of desolation, or "little horn" power. "And they" (the arms or armies) did "place the abomination that maketh desolate." Then and not before, could it be said the saints were given into his hands. And he was to have the power over them to kill with fire, and sword, and beasts of the earth, or to "wear out the saints." for 1260 years; which added to 538 brings us to A. D. 1798, when the French army entered Rome, took the Pope prisoner, abrogated the code of Justinian, under which he had ruled for the above time of 1260 years.

Although there was another Pope chosen after this, and placed in Rome, yet he never had the power to destroy and wear out the saints, but was placed under the code of Napoleon, which did not give him the power of life and death for conscience sake. But he came up peaceably. See Rev. 13:11, having two horns like a lamb—civil and ecclesiastical power—lamb like—professing to belong to Christ; but he "spake like a dragon," by giving out his "bulls" of excommunication against all, high or low, rich or poor, who would not submit to his dictation, and worship him as the vicegerent of Christ, or "God upon earth;" as one who possessed infallibility in all things appertaining to religion. All who do not thus worship him should be killed, at least politically.

According to the prophecy, about this time, or soon after John saw this two-horned beast rising out of the earth, an angel was seen flying through the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel to preach, saying with a loud voice, "Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment has come!" Was not this proclamation made when Wm. Miller was called out to proclaim the coming of the Lord at hand? Let us see. From the setting up of the abomination, which we have seen was in A. D. 538, there was to be 1290 years before the wise should understand, or the sealed book be opened. 1290 added to 538 makes 1828, which was about, if not the exact time, when he saw the light upon the prophetical periods of Daniel and John; although he did not proclaim it, as he says, for a number of years after, but gave his first public lecture upon the subject in 1832, which was four years after the expiration of the 1290 years. Did not this proclamation cause Christians to fulfill Mat. 25:1? Did they not take their lamps (Bibles) and go forth expecting to meet the Bridegroom. But they were disappointed. He did not then come. While he tarried they all slumbered and slept. After this proclamation, while the virgins are slumbering, as it would seem, another angel is seen following, saying, "Babylon is fallen, is fallen!" This appears to be at the time when the harlot power is saying, "I sit a queen and shall see no sorrow!" When she is glorifying herself and proclaiming to the world her infallibility. Is not this in process of fulfilment? Has she not fallen from her seat? Where is the beast or power that is carrying her to-day? Is not Babylon fallen? May we not expect the final accomplishment in a few months of the words—"She shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."

The next thing seen in the vision was a white cloud, and upon the cloud, "one sat like the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle." He is commanded to thrust in his sickle and reap, "for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe." And the angel did so, and the earth was reaped—which, without doubt, is the time when Daniel's 1335 days end, and he will stand in his lot, together with all the saints, who will then be raised from among the dead, and those who will be alive at that time, will be changed to immortality, preparatory to being caught up to meet the Lord in the air, For Daniel was to stand in his lot at the end of 1335 days from the setting up of the abomination of desolation by the force of arms. This number 1335, added to 538, when the Bishop of Rome was placed in power over the saints, brings us to A. D. 1873, which will be the time spoken of in Isaiah 26—"Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out her dead. Come my people, enter thou into thy chambers and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity. The earth also shall disclose her blood and shall no more cover her slain."

But it may be objected—that we cannot be so near the end, for there was a two-horned beast to arise after the one who was to continue 1260 years. That is true. But this last beast was to be the image of the one set up by the armies of Justinian. The first was upheld by the dragonic power for 1260 years. Then his power over the saints was taken away. This last beast was set up, or permitted to continue, by the power of the French under the Code Napoleon, peaceably, or lamb-like; but it was a deceiver. It spake like a dragon—was in spirit and purpose the same idolatrous power, the image of the former dragonic beast.

Comments On Revelation. No. 1.

For some months past I have felt a desire to submit some thoughts upon Rev. 13 to the readers of your increasingly interesting paper. But my health hath till the present prevented me. Some very liberal articles have appeared therein, but yet I humbly trust there is a desire for an interchange of views upon this decidedly interesting part of Holy Writ. In accomplishing this desire, unless I digress widely from my present state of mind, nothing dogmatic or censorious shall in the least emanate from your brother in Christ.

There are three prominent characters brought to view in this chapter: (1) The Dragon; (2) The beast like unto a Leopard; (3) The beast having two horns like a Lamb. Permit me to identify

THE DRAGON.

It is unnecessary to consume either time or space in the accomplishment of this design, for it is, so far as my knowledge extends, admitted by al expositors to have been Pagan Rome, and we without doubt endorse that view of the subject. Therefore the dragon is the antecedent power, that transmits to the leopard beast, "his power, and his seat, and great authority." Please notice the prediction:

> "And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy. And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion; and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority."

Concerning the transfer of the seat, power, and authority of the dragon and the most literal fulfillment of the prediction, permit me to say I cannot see any necessity to doubt. Furthermore, if we can succeed in identifying the government to which this transfer was made, we have obtained a very important point. Permit me to call it what it appears in reality to me to be.

Please bear in mind, that the words of the Revelator implies a voluntary act on the part of the dragonic government. "The dragon gave him," the beast like unto a leopard, his power, etc. The following testimony from the Decline and Fall of Rome, by Gibbon (Vol. 3, p. 512), will or should, it seems to me settle all doubts upon this matter.

> "The unfortunate Augustulus [the last Roman emperor] was made the instrument of his own disgrace. He signified his resignation to the Senate, and that assembly, in their last act of obedience to a Roman Prince, still affected the spirit of freedom, and the forms of the constitution. An epistle was addressed by their unanimous decree to the Emperor Zeno, the son-in-law and successor of Leo, who had lately been restored, after a short rebellion, to the Byzantine throne. They solemnly declaim the necessity, or even the wish, of continuing the imperial succession of Italy, since, in their opinion, the majesty of a sole monarch is sufficient to pervade and protect at the same time both the East and the West. In their own name and the name of the people they consent that the SEAT OF THE UNIVERSAL EMPIRE shall be transferred from Rome to Constantinople; and they basely renounced the right of choosing their own master, the only vestige that yet remained of THE AUTHORITY WHICH HAD GIVEN LAW TO THE WORLD. * * * His (Zeno's) vanity was gratified by the title of sole Emperor, and by the statues erected to his honor in the several quarters of Rome; and he gratefully accepted the imperial ensign, the sacred ornaments of the throne and palace, which the barbarians were not unwilling to remove from the sight of the people."

It would seem utterly impossible for any person to dictate a more eloquent comment upon, or imagine a more literal fulfillment of the words of the holy seer. It will be sought for in vain. The mould was then and there fulfilled.

This having been a voluntary act, and the recipient being the Emperor of Modern Greece, I conclude we have identified what we are to understand by the symbols. Before proceeding farther allow me very briefly to state that I cannot see how by any parity of reasoning, the "leopard beast" can be considered the Popedom, as some have supposed. These are my objections. (1) The transfer was not made to the Roman Pontiff. (2) The seven heads of the Sea-begotten monster which denote seven changes utterly, preclude such an application; for old infallibility would scorn the intimation of any such changes. (3) The transfer was made unto and received by his superior in imperial, if not in pontifical authority. At the time this prophecy was fulfilled, respecting the act of transfer, the Popes were more sycophants, truckling at the heels of their imperial masters. The above reason is sufficient to ignore the idea without further reasoning. But in order to confirm my statements please notice the following standard authority, even as late as the eighth century:

> "Supreme power over the whole sacred order, and over all the possessions of the churches, was both in the East and the West, vested in the kings and emperors. Of the power of the GREEK EMPERORS OVER the church and its goods and possessions, no one entertains a doubt. The prerogatives of the Latin emperors and kings, though the flatteries of the Popes labor to conceal them, are too clear and manifest to be concealed....Nor could the consecration of a Pope take place, unless the emperor's embassadors were present....The Roman Pontiffs obeyed the laws of the emperors, and accounted all their decision definite.... Moreover, the emperors and kings had the right of calling the councils and presiding in them; nor could the decrees of a council have the force of laws unless they were confirmed and ratified by the emperor." (Mosheim, vol. 2, pp. 26, 27.)

In a work called The Vanatious of Popery, by S. Edgar, (p. 215) he testifies:

> "The Roman hierarchs however, during these seven revolving ages, professed unqualified submission to the Roman emperors."

On the above plain testimony I rest this part of the argument.

The Second Coming of Christ. No 4.

In Dan. 7:14, we are informed that Christ has been given the kingdom by his Father, the "Ancient of days." We will now follow him, for we shall see him in a character far different from any we have yet. He has appeared as a man of sorrows, as prophet and as priest, but now we shall behold him as the avenging God, and the destroyer of his enemies.

Zachariah prophesies and says—"Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations as when he fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives which is before Jerusalem on the east, and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north and half of it toward the south. And ye shall flee to the mountains; for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azel. Yea ye shall flee as ye fled from Uzziah, king of Judah. And the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee." (Zech. 14:3–5.) Isaiah, speaking of the same event asks—"Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? this that is glorious in his apparel, traveling in the greatness of his strength?" The Messiah answers—"I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save." Again the prophet asks—"wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat?" He is answered—"I have trodden the wine-press alone; and of the people there was none with me; for I will tread them in mine anger and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiments. For the day of vengeance is in my heart, and the year of my redeemed is come. And I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold; therefore mine own arm brought salvation unto me and my fury it upheld me. And I will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunk in my fury, and I will bring down their strength to the earth." (Is. 63:1–6.)

Such is Jesus, portrayed by the prophet Isaiah, as the destroyer of those who have filled up the measure of their iniquity, by despising his counsels, and setting at naught his entreaties. But, here, again, some one may object and say the prophecy here given has no reference whatever to Christ in his kingly character; but to his coming in the flesh, as man's surety and Calvary's victim." Look again, and read with more attention the words of the prophet, and tell me if you really believe he has reference to the humiliation and death of our Savior? Do you believe that the apparel of the suffering Savior, which was stained with his own most precious blood, can be called "glorious?" Will you say that the time that he with much labor and great weakness toiled toward Calvary, bending under the weight of the cross on which he was to be suspended as a common malefactor, was that in which he traveled in the "greatness of his strength?" Were the people—the cruel mockers, revilers and bitter persecutors. "trampled" by him "in fury" as they taunted him with, "he saved others, himself he cannot save!" And was he in his agony and when bleeding from every pore, dying from weakness and exhaustion, exhibiting his God-head power by visiting "vengeance" on those his enemies? No! The events mentioned by Isaiah in his prophecy and those which took place in the days of Christ's humiliation, are separate and and distinct the one from the other. Isaiah foretells of the day of wrath and retribution, which the Savior mentions as to take place when those "who would not have him to reign over them shall be slain;" and when he "will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword, will the Lord plead with all flesh." (ch. 66:15, 16.) The two events are entirely different. Christ is represented by the prophet as returning from a great slaughter, with his garments stained with the blood of his enemies, not his own blood. His words are those of the mighty Jehovah, not of one despised, rejected and oppressed, as was the case when he tabernacled with men, and yielded his life a sacrifice [illegible] them.

We will now refer to the questio[illegible] "when may we expect this period [illegible] arrive?" and give the answer as giv[illegible] in God's word. And he says it w[illegible] be when the church generally, and t[illegible] world particularly, are unprepared [illegible] his coming; when worldliness a[illegible] formalism will characterize the actio[illegible] and motives of the largest part of t[illegible] professed followers of the Lord Jes[illegible] Christ; when scoffers will be hea[illegible] asking—"Where is the promise of h[illegible] coming?" When men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." And to this catalogue may be added, when great zeal will be displayed for rites and ceremonies, names and parties, while great indifference will be manifested against the revivifying power of Christianity on the heart! Go over the above once more, dear reader; and ask yourself as you read each phase of character delineated by the apostle, whether such a state of things exists in the present day.

Is the question given by Christ now appropriate in its character? "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" A. H.

Pray for Our Press. Why not?

Since reading the conversations with "the Press," my thoughts have turned to the important subject of offering daily fervent prayer that this powerful engine may be used to disseminate those glorious truths of our soon-coming King. If the child of God can say, "Pray for me!" if the weeping sinner exclaims, "Pray for me!" Why not pray for that our press may be aided to send to its numerous readers those blessed truths that will lead men to seek to know the Lord. Oh! what a responsibility! Some blessed truth in a single tract or paper may reach the eye of some poor despised person, and lead them to rejoice in hope of the glory of God. One error written by my pen and scattered over the world through the press may lead many astray, and result in eternal ruin to many, who otherwise would become the children of God. What a responsibility on the writer and on the editor. Pray for "the Press," that it may send out its living truths each week, that it may be kept pure, free from error. Let us pray daily for the blessing of God on our press. B. JUDSON.

Our Young Folks.

MY young friends must remember to sign their names in full, to all communications; not that they must appear in the paper, but that I may know who you are. Here is a letter that will interest all.

Dear Uncle: I want you to explain what is meant by "unpardonable sin." I heard a sermon last night on that subject, and the idea the preacher conveyed to us was, that if we resisted the strivings of the Spirit when we were convinced we ought to be Christians, we committed the unpardonable sin. Now I cannot understand this at all. And I would like to have you explain Heb. 6: 4-6.

What is commonly called the unpardonable sin is defined by the Savior to be blasphemy against the Holy Spirit. When the words were spoken, they were to rebuke the Pharisees, who had just attributed the works of Jesus to the devil—"This fellow doth not cast out devils but by Belzebub the prince of devils." I understand therefore, that blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, is to impute the works wrought by its power to the devil. Those who resist the Spirit's influence are not necessarily blasphemers; but they may so harden themselves in this course, as to pass beyond the reach of mercy.

Heb. 6: 4–6 is parallel to Heb. 10: 26, 27, and refers particularly to [illegible] selves beyond the reach of mercy.

And right here let me tell a story that I have selected for our young folks; about having courage to be a Christian. I fear there are many in Henry's condition; but we ought to fear God rather than men:

HAVING COURAGE.

"What's the reason you are not a Christian, Henry?'

"I hardly know."

"Do you wish to be?"

"Yes. I would give anything if I were a real Christian, such as Mr. K— is."

"You know the way. It is simple."

"I know it, but—"

"But what?"

"To be honest, Mr.——, the real reason is, I am afraid."

"Afraid of what?"

"Of the boys—those I know and meet with every day."

"And what of them? What will they do or say?"

"They will not do anything, but they will laugh at and plague me, and call me pious, or something of the kind."

"Would that hurt you?"

"It would hurt my feelings. I can't bear to be laughed at."

"Not for Christ's sake? Not for his love?"

"It would be hard."

"Perhaps so, but if you are ever to be a Christian, you must be willing to bear as much as this. Let us see what your friend here thinks of it. James, you love the Savior, do you not?"

"I do."

"And have the boys troubled you very much?"

"Not at all. I made up my mind to take the laugh as it comes. I expected the boys would begin on me when I went to school, but they never have."

"And if they should?"

"I should be more sorry for them [illegible]

The Bible Class.

"God did tempt Abraham." Gen. 22: 1.

The usual meaning of tempt, is to solicit to evil. But God does not solicit any one to do evil. The meaning is, God tried Abraham.

"The lean kine." Gen. 41: 3.

This is the old plural for the word cow, "cowen," as swine is the old plural for sow, "sowen."

"Joseph dieth and is chested." Gen. 50.

Who would suppose that this means that Joseph dying, was put in his coffin? The word chest was by some of the old writers used for coffin. But, in any sense, chest, as a verb, is becoming obsolete.

"In earing time and harvest." Ex. 34: 21.

Earing means ploughing, or tilling. Though much used by old English writers, it is now entirely obsolete.

The grave, in Ps. 49: 14.

The original word for 'grave' in Ps. 49: 14, Com. Version, is sheol; occurring twice in this verse, and once in v. 15. The Septuagint translates it, in each instance, by hades. The Latin Vulgate translates it by infernus in v. 14, and inferus in v. 15; both meaning, the place below, the region of the dead.

V. 14 in some of its other words is very difficult to translate. The Bible Union Revision, by Dr Conant, gives it,

Like sheep they are laid in the grave;
Death shall feed on them;
And the upright shall rule over them in the mornin ;
And their form shall consume in the grave from its dwelling.

The first two lines might be translated,

Like sheep they are taken to the grave;
Death shall be their shepherd.

Literally, "they put them to the grave;" i. e., they are put, they are taken, to the grave.

The last line, unlike the first, has no preposition before sheol; so that I would render it,

And their form the grave shall consume, from its dwelling.

But the Hebrew margin informs us, that some copies omit a point that is used to double a letter in the word translated "dwelling;" the effect of which would be to remove the preposition "from." The line might then be rendered,

And their form shall waste away—the grave shall be its dwelling place.

The Psalmist triumphantly adds, in v. 15,

But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave; For he will take me!—C. W. Waterhouse.

"Comparing spiritual things with spiritual." 1 Cor. 2: 13.

This short clause has puzzled many; and the knot of the puzzle lies in an erroneous, or at least, an inadequate translation. It is not quite certain, perhaps, what is the correct rendering of the clause, but it is quite certain that the correct rendering is not exactly that of our common version. Among various renderings, two only have any claim to notice. One is that of Meyer, De Wette, &c., "uniting spiritual things with spiritual;" the other that of Alford, Ruckert, &c., "interpreting spiritual things to spiritual men." Either of these renderings makes a meaning perfectly [illegible]

Notices, Etc,

The next session of the Western Ministerial Conference will be held at Amboy, Ill., commencing Wednesday, March 22, at 2 o'clock, p. m. It is desirable that all the Conferences be represented if possible. Let us have a general rally.
J. V. HIMES, Pres't.
WM. SHELDON, Sec'y.

In accordance with the motion of adjournment at the last Annual Meeting in Amboy, Ill., Sept. '70, there will be a meeting of the Western A. C. Publishing Association, at Amboy, Ill., in connection with the General Conference, commencing Thursday, March 23, at 9 a. m. As this will perhaps be one of the most important meetings the Association has yet held, it is desired that there should be a full attendance, especially of the original members. Let us have a rally of our business men and the ministry in behalf of the business of the cause of truth. Come, and come early. WM. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

W. A. C. P. ASSOCIATION NOTICE.

At the next meeting of the Association the following amendments to the Constitution will be offered for consideration and action:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board o Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. The Board of Trustees (or the Association,) shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to ART. III., Sec. 2. But the persons filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of ART. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That ART. IV. be amended to read:

ART. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

SEC. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

SEC. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

SEC. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate; and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

ART. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to ART. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make ART. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

The precise date of the meeting at which these amendments will be considered, has not yet been fixed. It will probably be in March; and may be held in Buchanan.
WM. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

At the Ohio State Conference, Br. C. D. Jefferson proposed to furnish a Mission Tent for the State, provided the Conference furnish two preachers to go with the tent. The following brethren were appointed to solicit pledges for the above purpose, and report to the president of the Conference, on or before the first of Jan., the amount pledged; and if sufficient is pledged, Br. Jefferson will proceed to furnish the tent, and we shall endeavor to put two good and faithful laborers in the field to labor for the cause of truth: A. B. Benedict, Nevada, O.; J. M. Treadwell, Fairfield; Martin Agner, Rockbridge; S. F. Rodgers, Norwalk; A. Mackey, Seal; Martin Bacon Bucyrus; P. T. Light, Plymouth; Dr. H. Kester, New London; Br. Beadly, White House, Lucas Co.; Thos. Boardman, Shiloh; Henry Rust, Stryker; Wm. Sedonall, Pioneer; Geo. English, Montpelier; N. R. Cheadle, Delta; Geo. B. Terwelligar, Antwerp. Dear brethren, now is the time for action. Will you take hold of this matter at once, and report your success, so that we may know what to do? and the Lord will bless you.
E. MCCULLOCH, President of Conf.

P. S. Churches desiring the first quarterly conference held with them, will please notify me immediately.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 28, 1871

AS WE allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His re ty, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

ELD. J. H. WAGGONER denies making the statement attributed to him in an article in THE TIMES a few weeks since. We are sorry the article was published without first giving him an opportunity to deny the charge in private.

DR. PARKER, of London, a prominent "Independent" preacher, teaches that the soul is "terminable," says a correspondent of the Christian Observer. We do not find terminable in Webster; but we conclude that the writer means to say, that Dr. Parker denies the immortality of the soul.

IMMATERIALISM has a great deal to say of the resurrection of the body. The Bible talks of the resurrection of the dead, of dead men. Immaterialists talk of the body being made incorruptible. Paul says, "we shall be changed." Immaterialism holds the body to be a home for the man. The Bible teaches that it is an essential part of the man himself.

THE truth comes out sometimes, without the intention of the speaker or writer. For instance: the Baptist Union, noticing Mr. Shimeal's last work, in which he attacks the Adventists, speaks of "his [Mr. Shimeal's] skill in complication." He meant compilation. But it's all right. When one undertakes to maintain the Bible doctrine of the saint's inheritance, and mixes with it the vagaries of immaterialism, and bitter Judaism, we call it a "complication." That's the right word, neighbor. Let it stand.

THOSE who teach that the soul is immortal, teach what is nowhere stated in the word of God. "But," say they, "it is implied." Then would it not be better for them to leave it to be implied in their sermons and works? Is ringing the changes on immortal never-dying soul a spirit better than God's way? What "orthodox" writer has used the words soul and spirit SIXTEEN HUNDRED TIMES without once adding immortal? The Holy men moved by God's Spirit have done it; which we cannot believe they would have done had they have believed the now popular dogma. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

THE Confession of Faith of the Scotch church declares (ch. 25 : 5, 6): "There is no other head of the church but the Lord Jesus Christ; nor can the Pope of Rome in any sense be the head thereof, but is that anti-Christ, that man of sin and son of perdition, that exalteth himself in the church against Christ and all that is called God." This is the simple truth plainly declared. The Papacy is antichrist, not in that it openly denounces Christ: for then it would have no followers; but in that it has usurped his place and apostatized from and perverted his faith. It has fulfilled all the conditions of the prophecy. Why, then, should we look for another, especially for the absurdly impossible "personal, universal-dominion antichrist?"

EVEN secular papers recognize the anti-Christian character of Romanism. The London Saturday Review, speaking of Mr. Gladstone's late advances to the Papacy, which, fortunately for England, he dares not follow up, asks if England, too, is to become a partner with "anti-Christ." What, says the Review: "If anti-Christ cannot manage his own affairs satisfactorily, is England to undertake to manage them for him? Is the Papal jurisdiction, 'the deadly foe of all religious and political freedom,' to 'be made the object of the watchful and fostering care of the advisers of a Protestant Queen?'" —The point we wish to call attention to, is this. The Papacy is generally recognized as fulfilling the prophecies of "the little horn," "the man of sin," the anti-Christ. Its power is now nearly extinguished. Its final fall was to be in immediate connection with the second advent. Have we not, then, in view of the existing situation, strong ground for believing the latter event is at hand?

A KIND friend in a late business letter remarks: "The most difficult point you advocate is the soul-sleeping, as many term it. A great many want to go to heaven at once, and cannot be reconciled to the unconscious intermediate state."

Within a comparatively brief period we have received many intimations that if we would drop this or that point of doctrine, our views would soon become more popular. But the fact is that those views that beget the strongest opposition are the very ones in which our strength lies. We are told that Adventism, with "the life and death question" left out would flourish wonderfully. All we have to say is that, Why does'nt it? Adventism of that kind is preached, by faithful earnest men, of no mean ability. But so far as progress is concerned, it accomplishes but little compared with the results of preaching the Lord's coming in connection with so-called "soul-sleeping." But the question with us is, not what will take best, but, What is truth? To adopt the language of Isaac Taylor, in another connection: "Our concern, however, is with truth, not immediate comfort; nor dare we cherish illusions, however agreeable. In the present instance, truth has to be followed over rugged ground."

DR. BONAR has given us a life of John Milne, a Scotch minister of Perth. Late in life he emerged from the fogs of mystical interpretation, so far as the advent is concerned, and began to look for the personal advent of Jesus. Among his sayings on this subject, the following are quoted:

"To look forward to the Lord's coming when he will rest from his labors, be fully glorified, fully gladdened, when the whole body will be gathered in,—that is the true Christian spirit."

"I have been thinking that the Lord's coming is strangely overlooked by most. It seems as if Satan contrived to spike the battery."

"Christ's coming is a definite, and distinct, and comprehensible object. Put this away, and then death, heaven, and a kind of dreamy idea of lengthened life is all that people have to occupy the future. All along, since it was said, 'The seed of woman,' etc., there has been a looking forward to the coming of a PERSON."

—The Pauline doctrine is, that if the second advent is taken away, there is no future life at all. (See 1 Cor. 15.) And the doctrine of the Lord's personal coming was never overlooked until the notion of going to heaven or Paradise at death began to prevail. Then, as people who 'go to the Savior could see use of his coming to them, the doctrine fell into disrepute. And no wonder. Yes, Satan not only has spiked some of the church's batteries, but has induced them to work some of his artillery.

AN ERROR REVIVING.

In the year 1726 died one Daniel Whitby, an eminent Doctor of Divinity, and the father of the theory of the spiritual millennium before the personal advent of Christ. Those who wonder how immaterialism could have crept into the Christian church at so early a date, unless it were sanctioned by the apostles, will find a parallel in the growth of the Whitbyan heresy. Only one hundred and fifty years have elapsed since the death of its author and now it is held by the vast majority throughout Protestant Christendom; and that, too, in spite of the fact that the doctrine does not appear in their confessions of faith; and that often their creeds teach or imply the true doctrine. Nor did Whitby revive an old and neglected doctrine of the church. It was a new thing—unheard of before, and dubbed by himself "a new hypothesis." Henry Dana Ward (and no man is better posted on the history of this doctrine than he), challenges contradiction when he affirms that the notion of a spiritual millennium, without the resurrection, to the race of Adam, was never taught until set forth by Whitby: and yet in less than one hundred years it became the predominant faith of the church, especially in America.

In view of this fact, is it

A MATTER FOR WONDER,

that within a hundred years of the apostles we find the idea of consciousness in death obtaining a foothold in the church? or that a little later, the dogma of the natural immortality of the soul should have obtained a firm foothold, and become the foundation of the greatest apostasy the world is destined to see, and the ground of heresies innumerable? The speedy conversion of the church to this spiritualizing interpretation of Scripture, is a remarkable exhibition of the rapidity with which an error developed in a pleasing form will take possession of the minds of men, and fully accounts for the growth of other heresies, including those we have mentioned.

Of late the Whitbyan theory is having a revival. It has suffered not a little the past thirty years, in the popular estimation, both from the stern logic of facts, which have rudely given the lie to the prophets of "peace and safety," and, also, because of the dissemination of a purer doctrine, proclaiming that Jesus—the same who went away—is, according to promise, coming again, personally; and that never till then will earth see conditions of permanent peace and safety. Nor can we account for the recent revival of the spirit of the Whitbyans, unless it be due to an increase of positiveness in the general impression that "great events are now upon the gale," and that a world-wide revolution, is impending; and with their views, the introduction of the temporal millennium must be the impending event: there is nothing else for them to look for.

OR CHANGE OF DISPENSATION,

It will be seen, then, that they agree with Adventists concerning the time in which we live, but disagree with them concerning the nature of coming scenes and events. Whichever theory is right, both parties must be strengthened in their convictions that they are nearly right as regards the time of the expected events. Throughout Israel and, indeed, the world, there was a general expectation of "a coming man" about the period of our Savior's birth. But, alas! how few had any just conceptions of his true character? In what darkness Judaism dwelt in consequence of its rejection of the literal interpretation of the prophecies relating to their times! Surely there are some teachers in this day who may well ask with the Pharisees, "Are we also blind?" If the theory of the temporal triumph of the church in a spiritual millennium is true, then all who look, or have in the past watched for our Lord's personal coming have been and are blind. But, if, on the contrary, the doctrine referred to is and we have no doubt it is, then the church is walking in darkness. And this accounts for the prevalence (universally acknowledged) of lukewarmness; the lack of spirituality; the mingling with the world; its love of pleasure; its festivals, fairs, shows, and a thousand and one things that are its reproach.

A LATTER-DAY FABLE,

It accounts, also, for the assurance with which the Word of God is turned upside down, and declared to teach just the opposite of what it says.

some uninspired writer after this fashion—Shakspeare, or Hume, or Gibbon: what would be said? But millions sustain him in giving to the words of inspired men a sense directly opposite Allusion is here plainly made to Rev. 11 : 17, 18. But when we turn to the Scripture itself instead of "the universal triumph of Christianity," we read, "The nations were angry and thy wrath is come." Not conversion or mercy, to the world, attend the removal of the kingdoms of the world, to make room for the kingdom of God. There is mercy and "reward" for the "saints small and great;" but destruction to the workers of iniquity. See the passage.

Another writer declares that all

THE ELEMENTS ARE HERE,

and the millennium will come just "when the church of Christ chooses to have it come;" "The Millennium will have nothing more or different [from what we have now], except in degree." Or as the poet has it:

"That song of love, now low and far,
Ere long shall swell from star to star!
That light the breaking day, which tips
The golden-spired Apocalypse!"

But this, like a great deal other, though very beautiful poetry, is very poor theology. And we may be pardoned for saying that as long as the church crowds to her festivals and neglects her prayer-meetings; dispenses pleasures and ministers to the appetites of crowds for the sake of their money, but can interest only a few in the heavenly riches; in short, so long as the present tide of worldliness prevails we may be pardoned for doubting if the church is ready to write "Holiness to the Lord!" upon herself and all that she possesses.

But of all the ideas connected with millennium glory of the church will ushered in.

—Now this all sounds very fine; bu it is only sound. If it's a fact that "Millennium figures won't lie," the the world is converted, whether we a conscious of the fact or not. More than eighteen hundred years ago th were one hundred and twe ty gathered in one heart and mi Jerusalem: the visible and true chur of Christ, outnumbering Mr. Wesley class twelve times. We have not the time to go into a calculation of how many Christians there ought to be in the world, if "Millennium figures don't lie." They would populate several hundred spheres of the size of our own. The trouble is that "millennium figures do lie." The "evangelical churches" do not even keep up with the increase in the population of the earth.

Meanwhile the work of the gospel goes on, and a people is being gathered out of every kindred, tongue and people under heaven. These will constitute the nations of the saved; and their millennium will not be for a beggarly thousand years, and in the mortal flesh at that, but will be after the resurrection, and their change to immortality, and transfer to the renewed earth, and will endure forever and ever.

AFFAIRS IN ROME.

It would be hard to conceive how the temporal power of the Pope could be more nearly destroyed that it is, and yet survive. For it does survive, if a form of life with power may be called a survival. The Italian Parliament, by a vote of 204 to 139, has declared the inviolability of the residence of the Pope. In other words, the Leonine City, containing the Vatican, and comprising that part of Rome upon the left bank of the Tiber, is to continue under the civil jurisdiction of the Pope, who is to have, hold and exercise in this petty domain the authority and forms of kingship, at his own sovereign pleasure. Not a few students of prophecy have been of the opinion that the temporal power would be continued in some form, but continually growing weaker, until the Advent should occur. This has been, and still is our opinion. We understand the passages in Dan. ch. 7, and 2 Thes. ch. 2, to teach that in the latter days of the Papacy it should fall into a decline, and during the period styled "the time of the end," grows weaker and weaker, but that its ultimate destruction would be accomplished by the coming of Christ himself.

We see no reason to change our opinion. During the past three quarters of a century blow after blow has smitten the political power of the Papacy; and although it survived them all, nevertheless each has perceptibly hastened the "consumption" of "the man of sin." After every stroke, there has followed a little interval of quiet to the apostate hierarchy. The last invasion of the Papal privileges was the capture of Rome itself, and the restriction of the Pope's domain to the Leonine City. We may now look for an interval during which the present situation will continue. But soon the final stroke must fall, and the temporal power disappear. And how soon this may occur, who dare say? The aspects of time in the prophetical city of Rome as we read them, indicate the near approach of the desire of his people. If this were the only sign, we should feel that we might be mistaken in conceiving these to be "the latter days." But taken in conjunction with the multitude of other signs, we cannot see how it is possible to mistake the time we are living in. The world's course is about run: the kingdom of heaven "is nigh at hand."

Somebody says, that every cord of wood given to the poor is recorded above.

The Object for Which Jesus Christ the Son of God Came into the World.

As the manner in which sin shall be ultimately dealt with, will clearly tend to the understanding of the future relative conditions of the saved and unsaved, our inquiry is directed to the object for which the Son of God became incarnate, or took "the likeness of sinful flesh," and to the mode in which that object is said to be fulfilled.

1. He came to glorify his Father (John 17: 4)
2. He came "for sin," and "to put away sin."

These are not two objects, but one; for by the putting away sin, the Lord Jesus laid the sure foundation, whereby regenerated man should hallow the name of God the Father, and should do his will on earth, as it is done in heaven.

"Now once in the end of the age"—close of the legal dispensation—"hath HE appeared TO PUT AWAY SIN by the sacrifice of HIMSELF." (Heb. 9: 26).

"Forasmuch, then, as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might DESTROY[1] him that had the power of death, that is, the devil. (Heb. 2: 14.)

"For THIS PURPOSE the Son of God was manifested, that HE MIGHT DESTROY the works of the devil." (1 John 3: 8.)

In these several scriptures there seem to be three objects to be attained by the work of the cross, but in reality they again merge into one. By the abolition of sin, the destruction of the works of the devil necessarily ensues, both as regards children of God, and unbelievers. By the abolition of sin, death is no more, for it is born of sin: "Sin came into the world, and death by sin." True, there remains the destruction of the devil; but he is merely sin personified; the putting away of sin is virtually putting away the devil; the simple act of consigning him to the lake of fire that he may be consumed, is all that remains.

Now, Christian reader, apply the meaning of the word "destroy" to the Scriptures quoted above, and then ask yourself the question in the light of reason, whether the devil or his works can exist for ever? You may still be incredulous whilst pondering on traditional ideas, or "vain philosophy;" so I proceed with an examination of God's word as quoted, wherein he has given a pledge for THE DESTRUCTION of sin and of the devil. The performance of this promise you will hardly question. First of all I would remark, that in scrutinizing the Bible,—from the transcendantly beautiful frontispiece, the paradisaic type of the predestined crowning circumstances of the heavenly family, to the close of "The Book of the Revelation of Jesus Christ," where the Spirit fills in with divine coloring the expanded glory of the original groundwork,—we behold a "God of all grace" serenely contemplating the hour wherein he most surely knows that "he will purge out from his kingdom ALL THINGS that offend;" when he will expunge sin, root and branch, from his new creation, destroying both its author, Satan, and its companion, death. The mind of Omniscience is shown to have been "before the foundation of the world," anticipating the period when the Father, the Son, and the royal heavenly family shall be found in oneness of mind, condition, and joy. (John 17: 21. with Eph. 13–6; Is. 25: 6–8.) The eye of Divine holiness is seen to be prospectively scanning the condition of the universe when "there shall be no more curse," for the source whence came the curse shall for ever have disappeared, and not the faintest jot or tittle of leaven shall be seen or heard from whence evil can possibly arise, "for the former things will have passed away!" But I am anticipating, and proof is demanded.

Sin was not of God. It was, and is an exceptional, abnormal element in the economy of creation, for every thing that was made was once pronounced "very good." It became a hideous, festering excrescence, poisoning the life of man, and deteriorating the proper fruitfulness of the earth. The germ of evil was implanted by an act of "that old serpent the devil," and the result was that "By one man sin came into the world, and death by sin."

Adam, who once had sweet communion with God in innocency, and had revelled in the perfection of serene loveliness that prevaded creation, must have been awe-struck at the terrific change that passed over the face of the whole scene on the introduction of the dark shadow of the curse wrought by SIN. But mark well! this same man was permitted of God to hear the doom of the author of this dire calamity; viz., that the seed of woman should bruise his head (Heb.: break in pieces, hence destroy as to its vitality). Enabled thus to see that a time must come when the once beautiful work of the hands of God should be purged from the cause of its corruption, and restored to its "very good" state by the excision of that foreign excrescence, SIN, he called his wife "Eve," "the mother of all living," or who should have life under such circumstances. He had a belief, according to the mind of God and the glimmering of light vouched, in the resurrection; in proof of which God clothed him and his wife with the emblems of the character of that sacrifice by which this result was afterwards to be obtained. In other words,—they were enveloped in symbolic robes of righteousness, resurrection garments, which Adam certainly would not have obtained had his faith not rested on the God of resurrection, or of "the living." (Matt. 22: 32, with Gen. 3: 20.) Such is the very essence of the belief through which righteousness is imputed. (Rom. 4: 16–25.)

I have been particular in the introduction of this scene, because in its several incidents are found the elements of the everlasting Gospel, the work of the cross of Christ, its necessity and results.

Jesus the Son of God, was manifested—God in the very similitude of sinful humanity, appeared on earth, because in no other guise could he accomplish the Divine will in the putting away of sin, and in destroying the devil and his works. As far as the interest of God is involved, these results are now attained; but they will be so actually, completely, and eternally, when these instruments have fulfilled the purpose for which they were permitted to exist.

The devil has become the self-constituted god and prince of this present economy. Sin is the weapon which he has ever wielded, in all its various forms of fascination for the flesh, in order to the maintenance of his authority, and the subjugation of his subjects. It has been his aim to create a love of ignorance as well as defiance of God, dishonor to his name, rejection of his gospel of grace, and blindness to the promises of his glory. It was to meet these circumstances in the very spot where they had birth, and were in action, and finally to annul them, that the Son of God came from heaven and became the Son of man by being "born of a woman" into the world. He came to grapple with the usurper, overcome him, and set free his captives for ever.

"The strong man armed" with sin "keepeth his palace," furnished with every allurement seductive to human nature, and consequently "his goods are in peace." His subjects, under the the opiate of things seen though temporal, are entranced and diverted from things not seen and eternal. It was necessary, therefore, in order to destroy the effect of this false peace tending to the certain ruin of man, for "the stronger man" first to "come upon him and overcome him," and then to "take from him all his armor" of offence "wherein he trusted." (Lk. 11: 21, 22.) Even during his lifetime we perceive the sure symptoms of the final victory of the Lord Jesus Christ; disease and death, the children of sin, and demons fled at his word; nay, Satan himself was discomfited, and forced to yield before the power of the stronger man. But it was on the cross that all the armour of the strong man was delivered up to the divine conqueror, for he was made sin, "died unto sin," was judicially treated "for sin," by being put to death in the flesh on which sin had been laid. (Rom. 6: 10; 8: 3; 2 Cor. 5: 21.)[1] Therefore, "by the sacrifice of himself, HE PUT AWAY SIN."

This act of divine holiness against sin is more fully shown in the sin-offering of Levit. 4. The Hebrew word for "sin-offering" is the same as that for "sin," the former being the perfectly vicarious covering for the latter. The sin-offering represented adequately the entire load substitutionally laid upon it, i. e., the entire animal, or actual substitute with which sin was identified (v. 4), was wholly consumed till "ashes" alone remained to tell of the full accomplishment of the sacrifice.

"By the sacrifice of himself," Christ displayed on the cross an open and complete triumph over "the principalities and powers," spoiling them (Col. 2: 15) as by the Stronger Man. [illegible] effect of this we are now to [illegible] both as regards believers [illegible] lievers. As to the former [illegible] "freed from sin;" "sin hath [illegible] dominion over them," though their present condition in sinful [illegible] still for a time remains. But this [illegible] flesh, called "the body of sin," the present state of the body to which sin is at present attached, is, as to its ultimate condition, destroyed; it has, according to the intent of him "who calleth things that be not, as though they were," been "crucified with Christ." (Rom. 6: 6–9.) Believers are in Christ precisely as Christ himself is to God, "perfected forever;" and have a resurrection state in prospect when the above will become a manifest reality, for they will be changed morally and personally into the heavenly similitude of the Son of God, sinless both in body and character. (Phil. 3: 21; Rom. 8: 29, 30.)

As to unbelievers, or those who have no faith in the fact that Christ "died unto sin," they do, by that very act of unbelief, retain "the body of sin." Their rejection of the Gospel shuts out Christ as the propitiation for their sins, although God offered him for the sin of the whole world, if the world would receive him. Thus unbelievers will necessarily have to supplement the consumption of sin, of their interest in which believers have availed themselves—by being consumed in their own persons; for all sin must be "put away," since Christ gave himself for that very end.

It is thus that sin will be judicially disposed of; and that being so, its "reign unto death," must cease; there can be no more death, for its very source will have ceased to exist. So we read that the same act of Christ on the cross that abolished sin, "abolished death." Again, "the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

I must here retrograde one step in point of time in order to bring to notice a solemn truth in connection with the subject of this paper. When the Divine judgment on the last state of "this present evil age" shall be manifested by the down pour of "the vials of the wrath of God," we read of the terrific yet indisputable effects thereof in cries of defiant anger and blasphemy; sin of the deepest dye without a shadow of repentance. (Rev. 9: 20; 16: 21.) If such be the case, then under eternal torments the sinful blasphemies of the damned would be careless; I say, then, that the Lord Jesus Christ cannot be said to have accomplished the work for which he sacrificed himself; for that sacrifice will be proved to have been incapable "to put away sin!" Neither will it have possessed sufficient power to destroy eit er the devil or his works! Let the advocates of the popular theory solemnly weigh the above in the fear of God.

The very mention of the new earth and its atmosphere "wherein dwelleth righteousness," renders nugatory any questioning as to the completeness of the destruction, in its primary and evident sense, of sin, death, and Satan; for the first earth and its atmosphere, with which they are associated, will flee away from the face of him who shall occupy the great white throne, and "no place be found for them." (Rev. 20: 11.) Thus, by the work and judgments of the Son of God, will the name and majesty of the Father be vindicated in a scene where he was dishonored; every vestige of the cause of that dishonor will have been swept away, together with the very theater itself on which Satan, armed with sin and the power of death, has been playing so terrible a part.

"There shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain!" This is not said of any particular party, it is of universal application. Death, sorrow, and pain, cannot be dwellers with righteousness in the new economy, or "Paradise of God," for "the former things" with which they were connected, will have "passed away." "Behold," saith he who sitteth on the throne, the Creator, "I make all things new! (Rev. 21: 4, 5.)—Lieut. Gen. H. Goodwyn, in Rainbow.

[1] Destroy. — The meaning in Webster's dictionary is, "to unbuild, to pull down, to separate violently into constituent parts, to break up the structure and [illegible] of; syn. to consume, extirpate, extinguish, kill.

[1] It is strange that Mr. Fridham, whose work, "The Doom of the Unbelievers," was reviewed in the September Rainbow, in which eternally he advances the eternal [illegible] of [illegible], should in his [illegible]. Romans 8. 3, thus write, "God's purpose was [illegible] life. With this view he deals with sin. The [illegible] the free act of God as the judicial destroyer of sin. Keep Your Garments.

"Behold I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame." (Rev. 16: 15.)

This is a note of warning of great importance to the church of God. It is the announcement of Christ's coming to judgment when least expected by the great number of his professed followers. It is the knell of the dragon beast and false prophet, which have for ages been conspiring against our Lord and his suffering saints. It [illegible] introduce the saints to the marriage [illegible] of the Lamb in the New Jerusalem. Blessed is he that hath ears to hear and a heart to receive this blessed note of warning, kindly given by our Lord.

We are exhorted to keep our garments, lest we walk naked and our shame be seen. In this we see there is a possibility of losing our garments, after having obtained and worn it for some time. We put on this garment when we put on Christ by our faith in him. As long as we abide in him by faith, we have this garment to cover our nakedness. This is Christ's righteousness imputed to us by our faith in him, and no fig-leaf apron of our own righteousness, as a substitute, will be accepted at the gate of the Holy City. Dear fellow pilgrims, traveling to the city of the Great king, we are surrounded with perils of various kin [illegible] Let us see to it that we defile not the garment by mixing in the sinful pleasures of the world and professed church of these last days. The Scriptures say—"Pride goeth before destruction." Because they have departed from the humble position of our fathers. I can remember when I was a boy, attending Methodist meeting in an upper room and sitting on hard benches, without backs; and I can well remember what melting power there was in that upper room. I remember distinctly as though it was but yesterday, how the man of God when he was warm in his sermon took off his coat and threw it on the side of the pulpit. There was power in the ministry in those days—fifty years ago. Many of those men had to work at their tr[illegible], and travel to their appointments [illegible] five to fifteen miles on the Sabbath [illegible] study their sermons on the way. [illegible] leaned on the arm of the Lord for [illegible], and he did help them by his Spirit. But now we have a learned ministry as a substitute for the Holy Spirit. We have churches costing $200,000. These costly buildings must be sustained and therefore it becomes necessary to get up some plan to raise funds to pay the interest on the debt. This compels them to cater to the world to get their support; and as the world loves pleasure, they furnish them with plenty in the shape of fairs and festivals, at which gambling, and other vices are nourished, but all under the garb of religion. This is the Jesuit maxim carried out; "Let us do evil that good may come." These are some of the omens of the coming day of God's wrath. We see in the fall of the temporal power of the Pope and the fall of France the eldest son of the Roman church, and the general preparation of the nations for the coming battle of Armageddon, a sure sign of immediate deliverance. Lift up your heads. Our redemption draweth nigh. We have seen all the signs of our Lord's coming, save one, the shaking of the heavens. Let us examine ourselves and see whether we have on the wedding garment.

H. CAMPBELL.

Green Point, R. I.

No thanks to man that Jesus reigns over the universe. Had his sinful wishes been realized, would he not now have been a prisoner in the grave, instead of a monarch on the throne?

At a religious anniversary in England, a few years ago, a very excellent but eccentric clergyman was called on to close the meeting with prayer; and as the exercise had been protracted to an unusually late hour, and many of the audience had already left the house from excessive fatigue, he was requested to offer a short prayer, which he did in the words following:

"O Lord, forgive the tediousness of the speakers, and the weariness of the hearers, Amen."

The following discourse by a converted Chinese tailor, with reference to the relative merits of Confucianism, Buddhism and Christianity, is worth preserving. A man had fallen into a deep, dark pit, and lay in its miry bottom, groaning, and unable to move. Confucius walked by, approaching the edge of the pit, and said, "Poor fellow! I am very sorry for you. Why were you such a fool as to get in there? Let me give you a piece of advice: If you ever get out, don't get in again." "I can't get out!" groaned the man. A Buddhist priest next came by, and said, "Poor fellow! I am very much pained to see you there. I think, if you could scramble up two-thirds of the way, or even half, I could reach you, and lift you up the rest." But the man in the pit was entirely helpless, and unable to rise. Next, the Savior came by, and, hearing his cries, went to the very edge of the pit, stretched down, and laid hold of the poor man, brought him up, and said, "Go, and sin no more."

THE

ADVENT CHRISTIAN

TIMES,

A large, neat, eight-page weekly paper, thoroughly devoted to the advancement of the cause of Christ by the faithful advocacy, defence and dissemination of what is called Advent doctrine.

EDITED BY

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

THE TIMES contains, weekly, matter expository, exegetical, illustrative, practical; including communications, selections and original matter, with letters from those of like precious faith in all parts of the country, the news of the body, and a faithful digest of the news of the world bearing upon the signs of the times; with news of the progress of our cause in different parts, and also news of what our opponents are saying and doing, with expositions and refutations of their arguments; articles on prophecy; notices of current and useful literature; short sermons; a column or more for the children; choice bits of poetry—in short matter enough in every number to make a good sized book, and all furnished for only FOUR CENTS A WEEK, or $2 a year. No paper of its class furnishes as much reading matter, even when a greater price is charged.

The paper has been very useful in the past, and can be made more so by extending its circulation. To our friends who are working faithfully for this end, we make the following offer: We will send

THE TIMES, POST PAID,

to any address in the United States or Canada, on trial,

FOR THREE MONTHS,

for 35c. For one dollar, we will send THE TIMES to any three persons, three months, post paid; and any larger number at the same rate.

Who will take advantage of this liberal offer, to introduce THE TIMES in a village, a neighborhood, a church. For

TEN DOLLARS

you can send a live Advent paper to

THIRTY PERSONS

or into thirty families, post-paid, for three months. Could it fail to do good? Five dollars will pay for fifteen copies; and one dollar for three.

We make this liberal offer solely to introduce the paper in new fields and localities.

Will the ministry please publish it to their congregations?

Will our friends please tell it to their friends.

Will you who love the cause and wish THE TIMES to prosper, pay for 3, 5, 10, 30, or 100 copies, on these liberal terms. We have now 300 names, of partially interested persons, among whom we could obtain

FIFTY PERMANENT SUBSCRIBERS,

perhaps more, could we send them the paper free for three months.

Who will send at once? Send in the names, with 33⅓ cents for each name, and (if you give the P. O. address plainly) we will guarantee the delivery of thirteen numbers of THE TIMES, free of postage, to each one of them.

Three thousand three months subscribers, on this plan, will give us a large and permanent addition to our list.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

SABBATH, Feb. 12. I spoke to the Advent church on Green St. to-day, and a blessed day it was. The prayer-meetings were full of life and joy. I spoke in the a. m. on the inheritance of the meek in the earth, which seemed to be received with all readiness of heart. At night we had the Lord's supper. I spoke on the passover, and the supper, as two distinct institutions, and the object of each, after which, and during the breaking of bread, many testimonies and songs were given. It was a feast indeed.

MONDAY, Feb. 13. At the daily noon prayer-meeting Mr. Moody read from the first three chapters of Revelation the several passages which speak of "overcoming," and the promises attached to each. This was the theme of the meeting, overcoming self, and the world. It was a profitable time.

At 3 p. m. Mr. G. O. Barnes, from Kentucky had a meeting which was open for those wishing to ask questions upon those subjects upon which he had preached to them, connected with the coming of Christ, and the events which are soon to come upon us. He holds some new and strange views, to which he will not be likely to make many converts. But he made some practical observations in a sweet spirit which could not fail to do us all good.

At night I heard him in Illinois St. chapel, from the text—"Wilt thou be made whole?" (John 5: 6.) He went on to show that salvation was all of grace. The sinner was not to do anything. He could not do anything. He could not even pray, nor had he need of prayer. All that was to be done, was, to consent to be saved. Wilt thou be made whole? The sinner was called upon to consent, to be saved.

He spoke severely against the modern style of protracted meetings, and the way our ministers preach, and protested against the whole thing.

TUESDAY, Feb. 15. Called upon Br. Snyder, our German Advent preacher in Chicago. He is still in feeble health but able to preach most of the time. He has taken a noble stand with our people, and is adding others. A young man in Wisconsin, is about to be ordained to the work, who is building up an interest there.

In the p. m. had a pleasant interview with Eld. Richardson, pastor of the Indiana Avenue Baptist church. I had preached for him in Moline, Ill. many years ago. He is friendly to the Adventists, and a full believer in the literal resurrection, and the future kingdom of God on earth. Our interchange of views was very pleasant. Would that it could be so with all professed religious teachers.

Prof. Oscar Owen, an English Millennarian, is giving lectures on the prophecies in the lower Farwell Hall. He is a Futurist. His subjects have been, Babylon, Return of the Jews, Anti-Christ, etc. I went to hear him to-night. There was about a hundred persons present, among whom were a number of intelligent Adventists.

Mr. Owen began by saying, that his views of anti-Christ were quite different from the common view, and he solicited candor on the part of his audience. The anti-Christ which was to arise, was a man. He was to embody and concentrate in himself the principles of republicanism or the right of the people to rule. They would reject the Bible, become infidel, and follow an infidel democracy. He would be an infidel anti-Christ, a man of sin, who would rule the world three and a half years. He is not the Pope, nor connected with any church.

His proofs, of such an anti-Christ, were Dan. 11: 25–28. And then he applied to him Dan. 11: 36–45. This he said wholly related to him. It had never yet been fulfilled! Next he applied 2 Thes. 2: 1–8 to the future democratic infidel anti-Christ, who must be revealed before the coming of Christ. He then read Rev. 13: 5–8, which he said was not yet fulfilled. Next he read Is. 14: 9–15. "Hell from beneath is moved for thee," etc., and applied this to the future anti-Christ! He said it had the same application as Dan. ch. 7, and 2 Thes. 2: 11. He then quoted from 1 John—"He is the anti-Christ who denieth the Father and Son," and applied this to the future man of sin. He was to be a man of extraordinary wisdom. All men would submit to him. He then read Rev. 17: 12–16, and applied this to his anti-Christ, and added Dan. 7: 21, 25; Rev. 13: 17

These Scriptures were read, and applied to a future anti-Christ, a creature of his own imagination, without the application of any principles of interpretation. The entire discourse was made up of a confused mass of ideas, which exceeded in absurdity anything I ever heard for an exposition of prophecy.

He closed by saying that many had become dissatisfied with Protestant exposition, in which the above prophecies had been applied to the Papacy. He gave us his new application as a substitute, and as new light upon the sacred Word! ! I confess that I was sorry to hear a professed teacher of the Divine Word thus present darkness for light.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 15. Attended the Second Baptist church with Dea. D. D. Cole. It was the weekly prayer meeting. Some two hundred were in attendance. Eld. Goodspeed, the pastor, read Matt. ch. 18, and made interesting remarks on the condition of the lost, and called on the church to take an interest in their salvation. The time was well filled up, with prayers and appropriate addresses and songs. Eleven arose requesting prayer. It was a solemn and hopeful time.

Mr. Goodspeed, is one of the ablest of the Baptist ministers. His church numbers some eleven hundred persons. They enjoy unity and prosperity under his labors. I heard nothing in the meeting that I would object to except a few words from the pastor. He said: "Some say God will not cause men to suffer in hell, because he is love. He referred to the Hamburg Railway disaster, and the burning of so many in the cars in the flames from the tanks of oil. Yet God was good. And he will cast men into the burning lake, where they will suffer eternal death" by which he meant eternal life in misery! But we might ask what relation there is between the doom of the railway's victims, who could have been conscious but a few moments at most, and eternal suffering in the fires of gehenna? God may be good, and permit temporary sufferings connected with sin; but to hold the lost sinner, in endless wailings is not, I think, consistent with goodness or love in the Judge of all the earth.

THURSDAY, Feb. 16. I spoke in the Advent chapel on Green St. to-night, on the prophetic landmarks.

FRIDAY, Feb. 17. My work done in Chicago, I took the cars for Shelbyville, Ill. On the way I was recognized by some citizens of that place, who had seen my photograph. One of the gentlemen was a German Jew, who had been brought up after the strictest manner of the Jews in Bavaria. Since coming to this country he had not been as strict in the observance of Jewish ordinances. He said very few of his countrymen had any idea of returning to Palestine. They were now entering into all the various branches of trade and were building their houses, and synagogues, with a view of a permanent residence in the lands of their adoption. Indeed, they had no wish or thought of going to Palestine.

In speaking of the manner of keeping their Sabbath, in Bavaria, he said, everything was arranged so that at sunset on Friday night, all work of every kind should cease. At sundown they light six candles, which are kept burning. The family were all given up to devotion and great solemnity, and all secular thoughts and plans were banished from the mind. They built no fires, and did not prepare their food on the Sabbath-day, this work being all done beforehand. They did not use their beasts of burden for any labor; only feeding and watering them on that day. Thus the day is kept according to the law. Neither man, or beast does any work on the seventh-day.

This is the way to keep the Jewish, or seventh-day Sabbath, if it is to be kept at all. Those who walk long distances, use their teams to ride to meetings, build fires, and cook, and do "any manner of work" on the Sabbath, do not keep, but break it.

Under the gospel dispensation, which was designed for all nations and climes, it is different. We observe the first-day as a day of general rest, and in it celebrate the resurrection of Christ, while we worship God. Abstaining from secular duties, not by special commandment, but of a free will, we attend to necessary work, only. All Christians should do this. They need the day of rest for their own physical health; and their religious wants demand the day for reflection, consecration and Divine worship.

At Shelbyville I was welcomed by Brn. Penwell, Cheney, and others. Br. Cheney who is an elder in the Presbyterian church, made me his guest, where I enjoy a liberal hospitality. He informs me that he has held the Advent truths for many years, and has been outspoken; yet has been retained in his office, and in good standing in the church. I am to speak at his place of worship on the Sabbath forenoon. This afternoon I attended prayer meeting at the Methodist chapel with Br. Cheney. They have been holding meetings for weeks, with some results. I love the house of prayer, and enjoyed the meeting, though the pastor did not seem to wish to recognize me. He believes the world is in its infancy.

We next called on the Baptist minister, who is a graduate of Shurtliff college. He gave me a hearty reception, and we had an edifying talk on the Word of God. We also made a call on the Presbyterian pastor, who gave me a cordial reception, and for two hours we discussed subjects of fulfilled prophecy, in the spirit of love of the truth. In the evening I went to hear Mr. Davis, the Methodist minister. There were about one hundred out. He spoke rom Jas. 1: 5. "If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God." He gave sound advice, and exhorted men to come to God. Three came to the altar for help.

SABBATH, Feb. 18. We have a beautiful morning. The birds are singing and the spring seems coming, with all its life and glory, beautifully showing forth what is soon to come in the resurrection, and the restored Paradise.

I spoke this a. m. in the Presbyterian chapel, and showed that the Scriptures of the prophets were fulfilled literally in the first advent, and that Jesus of Nazareth is the true Messiah; and pressed upon all the unsaved to come to him. Why, oh! why will not men come to Jesus? What a mystery! Why will they choose to die? "Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go therein." God be merciful.

I spoke to the children in the Sabbath-school on the love of Jesus for children, making the hearts of many little ones glad. We do not pay the attention we ought to the children in our societies. Let us look to this, and see to it that the lambs are cared for.

At night I spoke in the Christian chapel, the largest audience room in town, which was filled in every part with as attentive an audience as I ever addressed. The way was prepared by a full notice, before I came. And besides, the most of the clergymen are friendly, and some gave up their meetings and were out with their people to hear.

From Philo Hitchcock, Ocean Plains, Pa.

The cause of truth is gaining ground in this region, notwithstanding the determined efforts of our opposers to crush it. Br. Adrian held a discussion at Linden, commencing Jan. 11 which lasted two days. The following was the question for debate: Resolved, that the Bible and philosophy both teach that the soul is immortal. The M. E. preacher brought forward their usual testimony to establish his position, among other things affirming that the devil told the truth in Eden, notwithstanding the Divine statement that he was "a liar from the beginning." His time was considerably occupied in calling us Sadducees, and misrepresenting our true position, which only tended to help the cause of truth, as the people are well acquainted with our views. Br. Adrian gained the favor of both parties.

One argument offered by the M. E. preacher was, the assumption that thoughts were immortal; and as the stream cannot rise higher than its fountain, therefore the soul must be immortal. For instance, Humes' thoughts in his writings, which are still extant, while the author is dead. He forgot that Hume's thoughts in his writings will perish in the judgment, if not before: and if his works ever cease they are not immortal.

On the second day the question was reversed, Br. Adrian taking the affirmative, in which he showed the absolute mortality of man. Some, being prejudiced, cannot see the force of our argument; yet in the main they are appreciated by the thinking class. And although it is cried, as never before, that "Adventism is dying out," truth has gained a foothold that opposition will only tend to strengthen, and cause to grow.

[We have some notes of the discussion referred to above which we shall give soon.—ED.

From Charles Waffle, Victoria, Ill.

The year 1870 has gone, and with it a great many trials and sorrows. We have been called to pass through deep waters of affliction. Death, with its iron grasp, without one moment's warning has taken one loved one from us; but praise the Lord for the blessed hope there is in the Gospel. Jesus has promised life and immortality through the Gospel.

But with all the sorrows of life, how much joy and peace there is in the blessed word of God for his obedient children. He has promised that our light afflictions which are but for a moment, shall work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Brethren may the Lord help us to lift up our heads and rejoice, for we know that our redemption is very near. I am strengthened in the faith when I read the many blessed letters in THE TIMES. It does seem to me I could not do without it. The Bible first of all books, and the ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES first of papers. It is a great comfort to me that we have a paper which invites all to share its blessings in communicating to each other their prospects of eternal life. The cause demands the effort of every Christian, and may God help us to do our duty, that when Jesus comes he may say, "Well done, good and faithful servant!" God will have a tried people, and the promise is to those that endure to the end. We, as a people, are looking for the day of judgment. Are we ready for that great event? If so, then we can say, Come Lord, and come quickly!

From O. M. DeWolf, Rochelle, Ill.

As the result of the late conference here three have made a start to be Christians. Two of them were heads of families. They seem to be in earnest, have erected the family altar, and talk out their faith. We have two prayer-meetings a week at our house, We do not have a great number, though they seem to be alive in the work. Last night sixteen in all were present, and we had a precious season. Nearly all spoke and prayed, and said it was good to be there. We feel to thank and praise the Lord for what we feel in our hearts, and can exclaim with the Psalmist—"Let everything that hath breath, praise the Lord!" Two more have almost made up their minds to be Christians. There seems to be a spirit of inquiry about these things. Pray for this place, that God may pour out his Spirit, and many more be brought to the knowledge of the truth, and be saved in the day of his coming. Lord! help my husband and myself to so live that others may know that there is a reality in what we profess, is my daily prayer.

Any of the brethren coming this way, will find a welcome at our house; and if we know in time, we will find a place for them to preach.

From Aaron Rittenhouse.

Some time ago I promised friends that I would speak on the coming of Christ and destiny of man in Wilmot, Ohio, provided they would secure a house for that purpose. They thought there would be no trouble of getting a place. Br. Putnam, a new member of the M. E. church, arranged with all the trustees for their church, and then sent to their minister to know when he was going to start their protracted meeting. He said not at that time. He was then presented with the subjects that I was to speak upon, and asked to announce the meeting, which he objected to, and said we taught "the outlines of infidelity." The next thing our friends heard, the minister had announced a protracted meeting to commence on Thursday before my appointment. It bothered Br. Putnam and others, to think their minister would take such a course. However, they arranged to get the United Brethren meeting-house, for an afternoon meeting. Quite a number came out to listen, and were very attentive to hear concerning the coming of Christ. But as I told them that one of the objects of Christ's coming was to destroy the wicked, as well as save the righteous, and referred them to some passages of Scripture, that was more than some of them were able to bear. After I was through speaking, one asked me whether I meant that the wicked would be totally destroyed, and be as though they had not been. I told him I meant so. He then asked me what was the use of preaching; for he thought they would be as well off as they could be. I told him I thought differently; that I thought life was worth saving. He then remarked that if he thought so, he would just as soon indulge in evil practices as not; for he would consider that to be altogether unconscious would be as good a condition as could be. Thank the Lord, they did not all think so. I spoke to an attentive assembly in the evening, with good results. An old brother of the Evangelical church said to me that he could say amen to every word. The result is they want a tent-meeting in the vicinity of Wilmot, for which we have started a subscription to help pay for a mission tent, providing they will pitch it in the vicinity of Wilmot the coming summer. We would like to have it some time in May or June. I will write to Br. McCullock about it.

A Confession of Faith.

In the minutes of a late meeting in New Hampshire I find the following confession of faith, by one of the ministers present.

As to the faith of the Evangelical Adventists, if I understand it, I am with them, except on the point of the trinity; and as to the conscious state of the dead, and the future punishment of the wicked, I can candidly say I have not had a doubt for years. The doom of the lost I regard as an eternity of hell torment.

What kind of man must that be who "for years" has contemplated an "eternity of hell-torment" as the doom of a large portion of his fellow-men, without "a doubt," and is able to stand before a congregation, and state his dogma as coolly as he would an axiom in mathematics. If he knows his own heart (and we doubt if he does), he is the strongest argument in favor of the Edwardsian theory, that the saints will find satisfaction in gazing upon the torments of the damned, that we have yet met. If the Secretary of the meeting had told us that either he or his audience seemed affected by the deliberate denunciation of such a horrible dogma, it would afford some relief to its bald ghastliness.

NEMO.

God's ways seem dark, but, soon or late.
They touch the shining hills of day;
The evil cannot brook delay,
The good can well afford to wait.
Give ermined knaves their hour of crime;
Ye have the future grand and great;
The safe appeal of Truth to Time.

—Whittier.

From An Old Friend.

Dear Br. Himes: The past year has been to me one of deep affliction. On the 9th of last May my dear and only brother Charles Clark, who had been my partner in business for thirty-three years, died, and on the 25th of Dec. Charles P. Clark, my nephew, the only son of my brother, and who was to me a very dear friend, also died. The resurrection hope has been my consolation in these afflictions. I trust they are in a salvable condition, that they sleep in Jesus, and will be raised to eternal life when he who is the resurrection and the life shall appear. I have thought much of the words of Jesus to Martha—"Thy brother shall rise again." May these words prove a source of consolation to another Martha, the only sister of my dear nephew. And may the widowed mother of this only son derive consolation from the same blessed resurrection hope, by anticipating the time when her loved and lost shall be resurrected to eternal life at "Jesus' bright appearing."

CONSOLATION.

"Thy brother shall rise again."

So spake the Savior to the sister dear
Of him she loved, though now in death he's laid.
Her grief was deep, because her love was strong;
But death had come, and done his cruel work,
And to console the anguish and the grief
Of bleeding hearts, these precious words he spake.
The sad'ning news from Bethany went forth,
That Lazarus, whom the Savior loved, was sick:
And though he heard, he yet abode two days
In the same place, because he knew all things.
He best knew how God could be glorified,
And best what power was vested in himself.
He knew what truth need to the world be taught,
And by example illustrated plain.
  In due time Jesus wends toward the home
Where he so oft had been refreshed from toil.
Martha in anguish goes to meet her Lord
"Had'st thou been here my brother had not died:
But even now what thou shalt ask of God
I know that he will surely give to thee."
Thus did she pour the sorrow of her heart
Into the ear of her acknowledged Lord.
And these the words of comfort which he spake:
"Thy brother shall rise again." Amazing words!
No fabled tale of ghost or spirit man,
From clayey tabernacle now gone forth,
Still living in imaginary spheres,
Did he present to soothe her sorrow deep.
He might, had it been true, have said to her—
"Thy brother now hath soared to heaven above:
Is happy in the presence of his God:
Therefore weep not!" But no, he did not deal
In such unreal, such delusive tales.
"Lazarus is dead!" said Jesus in plain words.
He, thy dead brother, for whom thou did'st weep,
That real form, yes he, shall rise again:
And he, the real, at the words "Come forth,"
Did spring to life, with grave clothes bound; his head
With napkin wrapt about; a living form!
'Loose him, said Jesus, and they let him go.
  There is another act left on record
Which proves the power of Christ to raise the dead.
Nain's city gate he neared, when a dead man
Was carried out, "a mother's only son,
And she a widow:" and much people there
To share her sorrow and to sympathize.
Her grief was bitter, and her tears did flow.
The Lord beheld her With compassion moved,
Approaching the procession as it passed,
He touched the bier, and they that bore stood still.
"Young man arise!" he said: and he arose.
The same one that was dead, sat up and spake.
Thus Jesus did restore the widow's son
Unto his mother, and he was alive!
  Again, there was a ruler of the Jews
Jairus his name, who fell at Jesus feet
Greatly beseeching him that he would come
And heal his little daughter, saying she Lay at the point of death. The Savior went,
And as he journeyed, at a single touch
Of garments by him worn, a woman who
For twelve years was diseased, was wholly cured.
Nearing the Rulers house, the message came "Thy child is dead! Trouble the Master not."
The Savior heard—"Fear not, but believe!"
Was his reply to cheer a sinking heart.
Then, with the father and the mother, he Peter and James and John alone did take Into the death room where the damsel lay.
He took her hand and said to her "arise!"
And at his bidding she arose and walked!
  Such was his power and such his acts
Such was the sample to the world produced
Of that stupendous work he will perform,
The bringing forth of all the sleeping dead
In the last day—Some to Eternal Life,
Some to damnation and the second death
When the great harvest of the world is reaped.
The wheat, the righteous, shall be saved secure
The garner of the Lord shall be their place.
The tares, the wicked, be in bundles bound,
To be consumed in the devouring flames
  I hope to meet with loved ones in that day,
When separation will be known no more.
Oh! blissful thought! what peace, what joy it brings!
For that glad morning I still longing wait.
  Oh! that the unprepared would now make haste
To meet in peace the coming of the Lord.
And hear at last from his own gracious lips—
'Servant well done! enter my joy and love
With me in bliss and glory evermore!"

Shall We Exchange?

Myself and husband have for a few weeks past been reading, talking, and reasoning on the doctrines of atheism. I will give your readers a few extracts from some of their able writers on subjects of the greatest moment to the race. The first is found in an editorial by Abbot, on the probabilities of future existence. He says:

Unless the future existence for which we think all earnest men and women must at least hope, shall offer higher conditions and larger opportunities than the present, we express only our own feeling in saying that it does not seem intrinsically desirable. Knowing nothing on this point, we covet continuance of being if, and only if, such conditions and opportunities are possible. The necessary unattainability of ideal perfection in this life is, in our opinion, the most solid ground of hope for a larger life hereafter. If ideal perfection can be attained under possible conditions and opportunities of a higher kind in another life, we think our hope will not be disappointed. If on the contrary such conditions and opportunities are impossible, we see no reason to accuse the Power to which we owe our being for not eternally prolonging it, For we do not believe that impossibilities are possible. Who is wise enough to unveil all the secrets of Nature?

The following extract is from an essay read in Dover N. H., on the words of Solomon—"The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord." (Prov. 20: 27.)

I once heard Wendell Phillips tell the following story:—Many years ago, two men, of no small name and influence in their day and generation, were sent from widely distant parts of the country to Washington as members of Congress. They were both selfish in their views of life; and in their living were faithful enough to the theories they held. Ambition and self-interest lay at the bottom of their public course, and gave direction to the employment of their large abilities. On meeting, they contracted a strong friendship for each other, and whatever time they could save from public duties they spent in each other's company. Being both thoughtful men, their conversation ran mostly into intellectual channels; and in the privacy of their own rooms they talked often and earnestly about the immortality of the soul. Equally sceptical as to its continued existence beyond the grave, they endeavored to find some reason for accepting a belief which they would gladly have entertained, if they could have convinced themselves of its truth; but their discussions, however frequently held, and however long protracted, led always to the same conclusion. It was no use,—they remained sceptics still. On the expiration of their terms of service, one was re-elected the other not; and dwelling so far apart, they found no opportunity of further intercourse.

At last after an interval of twenty-five years, they both happened to attend a Presidential levee at the Executive Mansion. Across the large and brilliantly-lighted hall, they saw each other entering at opposite doors; the crowd was dense, but slowly edging their way towards each other, they met at last, and joined hands in a long, cordial, and hearty grasp. For some moments they looked into each other's faces in perfect silence. At last one spoke:—"Any light, Albert?" "No! Any light, Louis?" "No!" Without another word, they clasped hands once more looked sadly into each other's eyes, and parted in that gay throng, never to meet again. After twenty-five long years of anxious groping they went, as they came, in the dark.

How true it is that nature, nor the longing desire of man, nor the belief of many heathens, all combined can ever satisfy reasoning men of a life of any sort beyond the grave; but all is a dark, gloomy uncertainty to the rejector of revelation.

Most surely the gospel brings immortality to light, instead of heathen philosophy. Give Christ the praise.

I will now quote an extract from an inaugural address of a minister at the commencement of the service in a Free Religious church. Hear him.

The first Sunday that I preached here I gave the benediction, as had been customary; but during the week I analyzed a certain jarring sensation in my own mind, and perceived that it was one of those instinctive feelings that it is perilous to disregard. Reflection soon persuaded me that the benediction had its origin in the supposed power of the priest to pronounce a blessing from God after the absolution of sin,—a power not even supposed to be inherent in any Protestant minister. On the Protestant construction, the benediction must be either a prayer of petition to God or a polite form of dismissing the congregation. But prayers of petition are not in harmony with faith in natural laws; while the idea of degrading prayer to a mere form of dismissal is exceedingly repugnant to my sentiments of true reverence and propriety. Besides, the same objection of lifeless routine stands against the benediction which stands against any other regular prayer; and these various reasons combined convinced me that I should be deaf to the still, small voice within, if I consented to stifle my scruples out of an easy compliance with mere custom. It was no wilfulness or caprice that moved me, I trust, but a feeling that deserved profound respect. I have learned to heed such feelings as the saviors of character.

This teacher will not ask for any thing of God because his laws are unchangable. Thus reminds me of the reasoning of Aunt Katy, a slave woman. "Massa says 'taint no use ter pray: dat de Lord neber change, and does all his business after fixed laws; but I recon one on 'em laws is dat we must pray. I spose it clares away de tick clouds dat am 'tween us and de angels, so day can see where we am, and what we wants, and come close down and help us." Aunt Katy, thou reasonest well! I never did, nor never could realize the fearful gloom of the uncertain future prospects or hopes of those who reject Christ as a Savior, as I have of late. Suppose for a moment that infidelity is true; then in the end the believer in Christ's atonement will share the same fate, or be just as well off as those who reject him, while in this sorrowful short life the believer has a buoyant hope of an endless, better life in the reach of faith; and this belief in the atoning sacrifice never yet demoralized one soul. No, not one. Then there is no possible motive for us to exchange our hope and our Christ for their rayless future; but with the poet we can say—

"The Savior! Oh! what endless charms
  Dwell in the blissful sound!
For guilty rebels, lost in sin,
  How doth his grace abound!

On thee alone my hope relies,
  Beneath thy cross I fall,
My Lord, my life, my sacrifice,
  My Savior, and my all."

What a contrast! what a contrast between the prospects of the humble Christian and those who scorn the all-atoning blood; live groping in darkness, die in sin, and awake too late to be saved by the forced knowledge that Jesus of Nazereth is not a myth, but an Almighty King, now come to judge the nations.

"At his call the dead awaken,
  Rise to life from earth and sea,
All the powers of nature shaken
  By his look, prepare to flee."
    Careless scoffer,
  What will then become of thee!"

MARY A. SEYMOUR.

A Crown of Righteousness.

Paul says I have fough a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me in that day; and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing. Paul speaks as if he knew that he had a crown laid up for him. And how is it with us? Can we speak with the same assurance of a crown being laid up for us? Or are we groping our way in partial darkness, without the blest assurance from day to day that we are the children of God? It is our privilege to live so as to know, of a surety, as Paul did, that we are heirs to an heavenly inheritance, and have crowns of righteousness laid up for us. Let us be earnest Christians, that is, living working Christians; and valiant soldiers, always found at the post of duty, holding that fast that we have, that no man take our crown.

Paul speaks as if he loved the appearing of Jesus, and as if the crown of righteousness were laid up only for those that love his appearing. Do we love the appearing of Jesus? Is his coming a theme upon which we love to dwell? If so, then we can only say with him, "henceforth there is a crown of righteousness laid up for me, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me in that day." What day? Why the day of his coming. Let us not falter, nor faint by the way, but prove faithful to the end that we may receive our crown with joy.

But dear sinner, there is no crown laid up for you; and what a lamentable condition you will be in at the appearing of Jesus, without either crown, or wedding garment; and consequently you can have no admission into the marriage supper of the Lamb! Your condition then will be awful! There you will have to take the last farewell, yes the last of loved ones; perhaps a kind father or mother, or it may be a dear companion, or a babe, who have received their crowns, and you forever shut out from that home of bliss. Will you not come to Jesus, and buy of him gold that is tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich? and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed? Then you can say, "Henceforth there is a crown of righteousness laid up for me, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me in that day."

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 28, 1871.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ THE TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed, the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil; the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Barr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Book Notices, Etc.

We acknowledge the receipt of the Seneca Weekly Courier, ... Wilkinson, Seneca, Nemaha Co., ... recently sold out in Waterville, and now ... a new paper at Seneca. They know ... a leading journal, and are evidently ... upon the ... a year.

The Theological Medium is a Cumberland Presbyterian ... at Nashville, Tenn., at $ per annum, and edited by Rev. Dr. T. C. Blake. Its motto is "in medio tutissimus ibis"—The middle path ... The January number presents eleven articles ... Reasons for Preferring the Cumberland ... The Incarnation; Language; ... of God; The Scriptural Faculty; History of Infant Baptism; Two Kind of Decrees; The Day of the Six Creative Days; Ministerial Education; and Justification.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for March will, we think, be pronounced a most brilliant and entertaining number. The illustrations, about fifty in all, are particularly excellent and attractive. Prof. Maury's second article on "Weather-Telegrams and Storm-Forecasts" has the leading place, and is profusely illustrated. The Professor treats an important and timely subject in a decidedly graphic and popular manner, and no one should neglect to read these articles who desires to be informed as to the latest developments of science, and the practical adaptations of the latter to the purposes of agriculture, commerce, and the ordinary business of life. Besides this, we have King Gambrinus and his Subjects; Will She Ride or Walk? In a Garret; Lucky Peer; Homeward; The Ancient Fenians; Victor Emanuel's Queen; Life in the Cannibal Islands; Wilfrid Cumbermede; The Ambulais in Sunday School; Topics of the Time; The Old Cabinet; Beyond the Seas; Home and Society; Books and Authors at Home; Etchings.

Published by Scribner & Co., 654 Broadway, New York.

Obituary.

SNOOK. In Brooklyn E. D., Long Island Island, Feb. 17th, 1871, Mary S. Snook, widow of James Snook; aged 80 years, 7 months and 22 days.

Mother has been a great sufferer most of the time for fifty-seven years. Now she sweetly sleeps in Jesus. Her hope was in the coming of Christ, and a resurrection to immortality and incorruptibility. We do not sorrow as those who have no hope, but look for satisfaction when we, with her, shall awake in the likeness of Jesus. J. M. SNOOK.

The Times.

AT HOME.

We have news at last of the rescue of the crew of the U. S. Steamer Saginaw, wrecked upon a desolate Pacific Island. A boat's crew made their way to the Sandwich Islands, arriving nearly exhausted and five of them were drowned in the surf while attempting to land. Relief was immediately sent, and the remnant of the crew saved, after "spending sixty-eight days on a sand spit."—Washington held a great "Carnival" last week. Thousands of strangers poured into the city from every direction. There were processions, balls, races, revelings, and such like.—The Tennessee has arrived safely at San Domingo. There was much needless anxiety on her account, a New York paper has created a rumor of her probable loss.—San Francisco, with other points in California was astonished at the appearance of a tremendous thunder storm, last Tuesday. Thunder and lightning are almost unknown in that section. At about 12 o'clock, rain commenced to fall copiously, and with it came such as was never witnessed. One flash of lightning would scarcely fade away when another made its appearance; and in this way for nearly an hour, the city was in a blaze of flame, the deafening peals of thunder and the clatter of the huge nuggets of ice the meanwhile, adding horror to the scene. Wind, too, came in tremendous gusts from the south-east and if ever mortals thought their time had come those of our city did. The night will long be remembered. Several persons were killed by a falling wall.—The secret organization known as the Ku Klux seem determined to keep the South in a continual turmoil. The outrages at their hands are innumerable, both upon negroes and northern men. The negroes, also, are guilty in some sections, of hideous brutalities.—The present Congress is drawing near its close. But little business of importance, beyond the passage of appropriation bills, has been accomplished. Its successor will meet at once, on the adjournment of the present body, at noon, March 4.—A tremendous wind storm raged throughout the Interior from Ohio to Nebraska, and northward, last Thursday night, and to some extent on Friday. Buildings, bridges, trees, fences, etc. were more or less injured, and some persons were seriously injured.—A correspondent of the Boston Journal counts up an appalling list of twenty-five earthquakes by which portions of our globe have been agitated during the past two years, and fearing that we have not yet reached the end of the earthquake term, longs unavailingly for a prophet's glance to read the future aright.

THUNDER, LIGHTNING, AND HAIL.

ABROAD.

The conflicting despatches of the last week concerning the nature and progress of peace negotiations, possess but little interest. As soon as a reliable return of the terms of peace is received, we shall be glad to lay them before our readers.—A Chicago Journal says: Recent disclosures seem to indicate that it is not Bismarck who is to blame for the prosecution of the war since the capitulation of Sedan, but the King of Prussia. It is said that both Bismarck and the Crown Prince were in favor, after that event, of bringing the war to a close upon terms which should dispense with the acquisition of any territory by Prussia; but that the old King, true to the barbarous precedents of his ancestral house, was inexorable. The result is that although France has been severely punished, Prussia has suffered also, in a way that her people will be likely to remember against the monarch who has been the occasion of the suffering. There may be expected a day of reaction, when, after counting the cost and the result, it will be decided that the last three months of the war are sacrifices to the ambition of the sovereign, of the lives and the treasures of the people.—Berlin advices say that during the month of January the French lost 800 pieces of artillery and 350,000 men. Of the latter Chanzy lost 25,000; Bourbaki 12,000; Faidherbe, 11,000 and Bourbaki 20,000. The army of Paris is 150,000, and of the army of the East, 80,000 entered Switzerland.—It is stated on German authority that one could hardly find a family in Germany from the highest to the lowest, which has not some relative to lament in consequence of this war. France has not suffered nearly so severely in this way, because service in the campaign has not been nearly so universal among the French families.—After a prolonged stillness, Mount Vesuvius is again giving visible signs of activity. For upwards of a year the mountain has been growling and shaking, and this agitation was regarded as the indication of disasters at some distance. Palmieri inquired of his seismometer, and the instrument interpreted these movements as signs of earthquakes in the Calabrias, Romagna, and elsewhere, and everything happened as the professor foretold. Indeed, the sensitiveness and correctness of the seismometer have now been so well tested that the Italian Government has consulted Palmieri as to what parts of the kingdom it would be well to place them in, and by his advice they are to be fixed at various railway stations in Romagna, Calabria, and elsewhere. Giovanni Cozzolino, the principal guide, writes as follows:—"On the night of the 12th inst. a new crater was opened about midnight, under the grand cone towards Somma. It sends forth a large column of fire and from the 10th to the 12th January the grand principal cone was filled with fire to its edge. Besides this new cone, two others existed previously, which sent out columns of stone, but these have relaxed in their activity. Shocks are frequently felt, and are sufficiently strong to cause houses in the neighborhood to tremble. Vesuvius is still covered with snow, as are all the mountains near Naples and as far as the eye can see; but over the white mantle one can trace a black line marking the course of the lava." Palmieri is of opinion that this agitation indicates the cessation of the period of earthquakes which for some months have shaken Europe, and Italy especially.—The Pope's prison—since he insists on so calling it—contains upwards of 12,000 rooms, including a chapel as large as an ordinary-sized church, and several court-yards; and it has a fine garden or park attached, where, when the weather is fine, he takes his constitutional walk. This splendid palace is attached to St. Peter's by a long gallery and suite of rooms, and stands on the right-hand side as we face the church. A man ought to be satisfied with 12,000 rooms to choose from.—A telegram from Bombay says the steamer Outram, foundered in a cyclone in the Indian Ocean, and fifty three lives were lost.—It has been ascertained that only ninety-eight lives were lost on the French transport Locerf, wrecked off Cape La Hague. It was first reported that 1,200 souls were drowned.

Feb. 25—It is reported on good authority that the peace negotiations have been concluded, and the terms imposed by Prussia have been accepted by the commissioners appointed by the French National Assembly. The imposed conditions are more severe than was anticipated a few days ago, though there seems to be no doubt in well informed circles of their final ratification by the Assembly. They are as follows:

First—The cession of Alsace and Metz, but Belfort to be restored to France.

Second—The payment of war indemnity of five milliards francs.

Third—A portion of French territory, with some fortified towns like Sedan, to remain in the possession of the Germans until the conditions of the treaty are fulfilled.

Fourth—The German army to enter Paris Monday, and occupy the Champs Elysees.

Fifth—Peace to be proclaimed when the French Assembly satifies these conditions.

—It is rumored that England has interfered in the matter of cession of Metz, and also has persuaded the Germans to abandon their march through Paris.

Spain.

LONDON, Feb. 26.—A difficulty has arisen between Spain and Egypt caused by the insult offered the clerk of the Spanish Consulate at Cairo. It was reported that all the Spanish Consuls had quitted Egypt. The Madrid Imparcial denies this. An ultimatum has been sent by the Spanish government to the Viceroy. The reply of the latter is not known.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

A Romanist priest in New York was threatened with suspension for doubting the necessity of the temporal power to the Pope. He sympathizes with Italy, rather than the Papacy, in the late revolution at Rome. But the Hierarchy finally concluded not to suspend him. Were they afraid of hurting their influence in "free America?" So we judge.—A large number of Mormons being emigrants from England, Episcopal and Methodist missions are quite successful in reclaiming them to their former faith. These influences, aided by the impulse given to "Gentileism" by the Pacific Railroad, give hope that the great delusion will ere long be dissipated. It will not be without hard struggles to keep it up, but the end is inevitable, and every measure of Christian influence hastens it on.—The Association for the Propagation of Christianity Among the Jews in Philadelphia, under the patronage of the Episcopal Church, reports the conversion of four adults and three children to the Christian faith during the past year.—One must go away from home to hear the news. The Hartford Christian Secretary, an old and persistent traducer of Adventism says: "The Millerites of New England have fixed upon the 11th of February for their ascension. They are said to be in a flutter of anxious expectancy quite natural to such a position." Such paragraphs have only one origin and aim—a desire to foster the popular prejudice against Adventism.—Within two years the income of the Methodist Church Extension Society has increased from $46,000 to $150,000, and is going steadily up to a quarter of a million a year, when they will be able to build a church every day in the year. They have already aided churches in all parts of the country, and dedicated four churches a day for every working-day in the year.

"With What Body do They Come."

One of the objections to the doctrine of the literal resurrection of the body, urged by the late Prof. Bush and others, is drawn from the new combinations of the particles between death and the resurrection. A correspondent of the Sabbath Recorder thus touches on the point:

"I have already said that this 'difficulty' was one of conjecture merely. Let our brethren on the opposite side prove that even two men ever died having one particle of matter in each at death, or that two persons have ever died having the same particle of matter in each at death—otherwise these difficulties are a mere fancy. Christ declares that God exercises the utmost care over us. 'Not one hair of your heads shall fall to the ground without your heavenly Father's notice.' With such pledges from the Infinite, need we fear? God is as capable of taking care of each part of me, as the whole. I have no fear on this score. But, really what of this transmigration of matter? To hear what is said by the advocates of the 'difficulty,' we had well nigh turned cannibals, and gone to eating up each other, as did the cats of the fable. Demonstration has gone far to shake this 'difficulty.' Plants and shrubs have frequently been grown, and to a large size, in a given amount of dirt, without the least perceptible loss of weight.

"In the presentation of the facts on this point, I will follow D. W. Clarke, who follows Dr. Kingsley in his work on the 'resurrection of the dead,' who says, 'Let us take up the case where vegetation, raised upon soil enriched by the decomposition of a human body, is used for the nourishment of human beings. Here, at the outset, we are met by the fact that but a very small part of the matter enters into the composition of vegetable existence. This is easy of demonstration. It has again and again been shown, from actual experiments, that if plants or trees be set in pots or urns, and the dirt to which their roots have access weighed, the tree may increase many pounds, while the dirt, if carefully shaken from the roots and weighed, will be found to be diminished only a few ounces.' Based upon this fact, we have a calculation furnished at our hand. 'Suppose a human being to have eaten grain—in quantity say one hundred pounds—that had grown upon soil enriched by a human body. Now not more than one twenty-fifth part of this grain—that is, four pounds—ever becomes actually a part of the human body. But not more than one-twentieth part of the grain at first was converted earth; and of this not more than one-fifth of one pound in a hundred is incorporated into the body of the person who has eaten it. And, again, probably not more than one-thousandth part of the earth absorbed by the roots of grain could ever have been human dust. This must be a large estimate. The result, then, would give that of the one-hundred pounds of grain eaten, not more than one five-thousandth, one three hundred and twentieth part of an ounce of matter, could thus be transferred from one body to another. And strong probabilities exist against the transfer of even this small amount. But suppose it to have been actually transferred, a large portion of this small amount would go to the gross part of the system, not at all necessary to the resurrection body; and might not the whole be directed in the same way? Or, again, why may not this small part of human dust, absorbed by the growing grain, be lodged in the roots of the stock, without ever becoming a part of the kernel? Thus the objection, when subjected to severe scrutiny, becomes absolutely void.'

"But let us take the case which the objector regards as his stronghold, that of cannibalism. With reference to the cannibal himself, this kind of food with him was exceeding rare, and formed a very small part of his food, and then, again, but a small fraction of that fraction could become a part of his body—those parts that shall not enter into the resurrection body; or if the inquiry relates to the victim, and it is inquired, 'How shall he recover his body that has been devoured by another?' It must be observed, that, in all such cases of cannibalism there are large portions of the body, such as the skull or bones, that are not thus eaten. And, indeed, if the whole body were eaten, the parts essential to the resurrection body might still, as we have already seen, be guarded by the special working of Divine providence, or even by an established, yet undiscovered law, of nature, which forbids the commingling of that portion of our bodies, or that essence of our physical nature essential to our bodily identity, thus preserving, through all transformations, as well as all time, our physical as well as mental individuality. This latter idea is of great force—especially when we remember that the blood as well as some other parts of our system has no nutritious qualities, and cannot therefore in any ordinary mode of taking food be incorporated into any other body. Viewed, then, simply as a matter of rational inquiry, the objection is specious and groundless. It is unsustained by either fact or science. But when we look at the subject in the light of revelation, and learn that it is a question of God's power and determination, who shall set limits to his skill or bounds to his power? If he has decreed that the 'dead shall be raised and we changed,' can he not so guard the elements of matter that his grand purposes concerning us shall be according to his own wisdom? The objection is based upon that essential infidelity that would circumscribe the power of God by the cavil of an unbelieving heart. The whole talk about 'one generation living on another' is clearly fancy, and answers for smoke in the eyes of the 'unthinking.'"

A late missionary to India is reported, by the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, as saying at a late anniversary that it made him tremble and feel afraid to stand in grand churches. He said: "Is there not danger that thousands of souls from India and China are put into the corner-stones of these grand buildings? The Lord Jesus loves human hearts more than marble piles and monuments. One church had given to missions seven cents a member. Why? The society was building a grand church, and so excused itself from mission gifts. There are more churches and preachers that are gotten up after that pattern. They put souls into costly churches and parsonages, and think they are doing God's service." Many souls are buried, metaphorically speaking, by needless expenditure, private as well as public.

No saying of St. Paul bears more strongly on the point than his exhortation to "bear one another's burden," adding, as both an explanation and a reason, "and so fulfill the law of Christ." What "law," if it be not the law of love in obedience to which he bore our burdens, the law which, while it inspires the heart, calls us to duty, work, tender sympathy, and brave endurance? As a stern mandate we may, perhaps, have regarded the injunction, "Deny thyself and take up thy cross;" but after all it is only a direction to get out of self and under the control of love. We talk much of our "rights." We have, under Christ's law, the right to love and be loved, and what more do we need in a holy brotherhood? Does not love do all? It seeks to help under the heaviest burden, and at the post of severest duty, and rejoices most when it has lifted upward a human soul toward God.

The Dead Who Die No More.

"The Son of God was the first divine messenger to announce the immortality of the dead."

Patriarchs and seers had taught for ages the doctrine of an undying soul, [Take this assertion for what it is worth, which is very little. Ed. Times.] but the kindred doctrine of the final restoration of the body from the dishonors of the grave was never revealed by them.

And what is the substance of this inspiring truth? That a period will arrive in the history of all men when they can die no more; when physical death can have no more dominion over them; when they shall be transformed into children of the resurrection and made like unto the angels of heaven. As God lives so shall they live, for in the glorious economy of mercy and grace they all live to him. Perishing matter is made angelical or deathless.

It is worthy of notice that the Holy Redeemer first proclaimed this vital and essential truth to the sect of the Sadducees, who denied the possibility of the resurrection. Some of the scribes who were present willingly adopted it, for their reply was, "Rabbi, thou hast spoken well."

No one by the exercise of his reasoning powers can reach the conclusion that decaying matter can possibly preserve its identity. The Stoics could tolerate almost any theory, however wild and improbable it might appear; but when the apostle discussed the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, they turned away from him in disgust.

The unsanctified world has uniformly rejected this doctrine as unphilosophical and absurd. It has appealed to the evidence of the senses, and to the experience of every thinking mind, and upon that appeal it has rested the case. The great Teacher, however, did not attempt to accommodate this revealed truth to the theories or opinions of men. He spoke authoritatively, and to accept or reject it was left with the hearer.

Sadducees might mock, and scribes believe; but the eternal purposes of God were not to be changed.

Strong faith in the promises of God can impart a noble heroism in the hour and article of death; but no faith, however exalted, can deprive physical death of its dreadful sting.

The will may be sufficiently commanding to suppress the murmurings and groans of the flesh, but it can never render us callous to the bitter pains of the last hour.

Prince of Terrors, death seems to reign absolute, and will contiune to reign until God shall place us in a position in which "we can die no more;" in a victorious position, where neither graves nor mausoleums can offend the eye.

Children of God, children of the resurrection, made like unto angels in heaven. "we can die no more."—Cor. Christ. Advocate.

A Discussion.

In January I commenced a meeting in the Town House, Linden, Wis. At the close of my first meeting, I remarked, "I am willing to try to defend the truths we hold in public or private." In the morning one of the members of Mr. Richardson's church came to my boarding place and asked my propositions. I gave them. He handed them to his minister who agreed to them, and a discussion was appointed. Mr. Richardson is the man who came into Eld. N. A. Hitchcock's meeting at Cross Plains, and insulted him. He is the man that has boasted all through this vicinity of "using up" Eld. Sheldon at Sparta, some time since, and destroying three or four Advent churches. I thought I would give him a chance to use up one more.

Mr. Richardson led off in the affirmative, on the question of man's immortality. He quoted Gen. 2: 7, and argued the creation of a spirit for man at his formation. I replied with Gen. 7: 22, and proved that "the beasts" and "creeping things" had the same spirit, or immortal soul, in them, if immortal soul it was. By 1 Thes. 5: 23, he wished to prove that it took spirit, soul and body to make a man. To this I agreed, and asked him to tell the audience how the spirit could be a man, if it required the three to make one man.

He evidently did not like his compound. He then claimed that angels are spirits. In reply I admitted angels to this relation, and soon found them partaking of a dinner with Abraham, and supper with Lot, and desired him to explain to the audience the process of changing material food into spirit. He then admitted angels were material beings. This was all I asked: spirits are material beings. Not willing to yield the point, he flew back to Gen. 2: 7, and said God formed man out of the dust, but the earth produced the beasts; and the Spirit he made out of [illegible] "The Lord God formed every beast out of the ground." As to the spirit being made out of nothing, I thought there was nothing to that argument. He now felt he must prove the separate existence of the soul, and presented Is. 53: 10. "His soul was made an offering for sin." I inquired how an offering could be made for sin without the death of that which was offered. He evidently felt crowded, and appealed to the garden of suffering. I asked him how the soul could be sorrowful unto death," when it could not die? He thought the criticism unfair, and introduced Acts 2: 31. "His soul was not left in hell." I replied, this was death or state of the dead, and proves the death of both the soul and flesh of Christ. He became much excited over this conclusion, but it was now dinner time.

He came in after dinner, still somewhat excited, and told the audience that the word expressing the place of Christ's soul, was a plural noun. I opened the Greek Testament and asked him to look at it. He refused. I told the audience that the word was hadou, and a singular noun. He became angry and would not obey the Moderator, so I sat down until the Moderator got him still. He referred to Zech. 12: 1, and tried to prove creationism. I replied, Is it reasonable to believe that God holds such a relation to our race that he must obey the mandate of adulterers. He then denied having reference to creationism. He flew to traduction, and this gave me the ground. I soon demonstrated the materiality of the soul from his own premises. In his excitement over that he handed out the Rich Man and Lazarus. This it appeared, he thought to be positive proof of the soul's immortality, I soon made him acknowledge it a parable; then I showed the audience that the same portion of the rich man that was buried, in the case of the poor man was carried to Abraham's bosom; that the poor man became dead to the law, by the body of Christ, and by this became a child of Abraham; while the rich man became dead to the law by adultery with the world, and was buried from sight.

I then called upon him to explain to the audience how spirit-fingers could be expected to convey cold water to cool a spirit-tongue. He said he knew a man that lost his leg, and always after, when his material limb was cold his spirit-leg was cold, too. This, I replied, was a tough case; yet I failed to see the danger of the foot of an immortal soul freezing up! I reminded him of that soldier in our rebellion that lost both legs and arms, and still lived. I could but think what a misfortune it must be to have his spirit-legs and arms sticking out from the stumps, exposed to the cold. His feelings became excited by this horrible description, and he fled to the transfiguration. He first took the gronud that it was a reality. I compelled him to admit it a vision, and then argued that there was no necessity of either Moses or Elias being present to produce the vision, any more than there was that the sheet let down to Peter must be full of literal living creeping things. He denied it was a vision of the future kingdom of God, and said it was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost. I referred him to 2 Pet. 1, in which the [illegible] tecost, that it referred to the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. He was willing to let that pass! He next called my attention to 2 Cor. 12, saying Paul was caught up to paradise, third heaven, or place of departed spirits, intermediate state; stated that the soul of Paul was caught away. I replied that he knew more than Paul did about it; for Paul did not know whether his body was caught away or his mind, he was so entranced by what he saw. Paul's spirit could not have gone from the body, for "the body without the spirit is dead;" that if the third heaven was one beyond the other, and the third was the intermediate state, then Mahommed was on the safe side with his seven heavens,

Next came 2 Cor. 5, on which he said Paul desired to die that he might have his house from heaven. I replied that if Paul desired to die to get his house from heaven, and his desire was granted, he got his house when he died; and in the resurrection he would get his old one back, immortal, from the dead, and have one house to spare! He evidently did not like the looks of that. I denied Paul's having any desire to die, and called attention to v. 4 in proof. I argued that Paul was standing between temporal life and death; he could not decide which would be best, but he did know that he desired immortality and the coming of Christ. In proof that this was the question on his mind, I referred to v. 10—"For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ."....

He referred to Matt. 25: 46, and gave me a most splendid exhortation to repent my ever having taught "annihilation." He declared the punishment of equal duration with the happiness or life. I agreed with him on this point, but inquired what the punishment was; saying it was eternal torment was begging the question; for kolasin did not mean torment: that Christ did not mean to teach torment; if he had he would have used the word that signified torment, basaniso, always translated torment. It was my turn to exhort him, now, against ever preaching such "a God-dishonoring doctrine" as he did, and I did it faithfully. His only reply was, it was none of my business what words Christ used. But he did not take up that hot iron again. ....He declared the soul to be an immortal, immaterial, unorganized thinking substance. I asked him if he would explain to the audience how an immortal, immaterial, unorganized soul, could evolve thought any better than a mortal, material, organized brain, animated by a flow of life. He fled to the undying worm and unquenchable fire, and said the worm was the conscience of the immortal soul. I referred to Is. 66: 24, and invited him to tell us all about the immortal carcasses of that Scripture. I then referred to Job 4: 17—"Shall mortal man be just with God?" and remarked that justice was not a quality of the body, but of the mind, and that this was a positive proof of man's entire mortality....

Having the negative of the question on the last day, the closing speech belonged to him. Contrary to all rules of debate he introduced new matter of argument into the debate, quoting Rev. 14 and 20, with Pythagoras and Plato. I attempted a reply to these points, but [illegible] feeling sure the audience would appreciate his position, I desisted, and so the debate closed.

I. Adrian.

BRIEF EXCERPTS.

The Interior says: No church of any denomination can have more than a temporary rest from division of opinion, until the whole problem is solved, and the systems of faith and practice are made perfect.—The Rock: "Lawlessness" is one of the most prominent and striking features of the great Apostasy depicted in the prophetic language of Holy Writ. Lawlessness is one of the most prominent and striking features of the Papacy in every stage of its development, and we may add, even in its decline.—The N. Y. Times has little faith that France will be the better for her recent chastisement: "Paris has had the same experience before—and was as merry in three months as ever. Doubtless the theaters will speedily throw open their doors, and the boulevards again become alive with gayety and bustle. Paris soon forgets, and in a few weeks more her population will be living up to their old maxim of "Vive la bagatelle."—The Western Recorder: The tendency of the times is to freedom in every thing—especially in sin. Fearful!—The Advance: And now what is to be done? We thought if any thing was certain, scientific demonstration was. But here comes a distinguished Chicago chemist with an analysis of some water in which he finds certain elements whose co-existence another distinguished chemist asserts "is a well known theoretical as well as practical impossibility." And they are squabbling over it! And there are folks who scorn Faith and will believe nothing that cannot be "scientifically" demonstrated. We are sorry for them.—Zion's Herald: The Free Religionists are consistent. It was noticed that at the opening lecture of the Horticultural Hall (Boston) course, the blinds were closed and the gas lit. No hall in the city is more accessible to the light of the sun than this. Thus to exclude God's sunlight that they may employ some of their own invention, seems a true type of their religious action. They discard God's written revelation, and by the insufficient glimmerings of a possibly misread intuition, and by the guidance of a certainly perverted reason, they endeavor to supply its place, and to become revelators themselves.—The Liberal Christian: It is not our business as ministers or religious teachers to take care of the truth, but tell it. The truth will take care of itself and of us if we are faithful to it. The best service that any teacher can possibly render is to give his people as much truth as possible.—Examiner and Chronicle: Fortunately for the credit of the ministry and the good of the church, we have seen many more pastors who have learned that half a loaf is better than none. We find them generally suggesting, rather than ordering their church work; giving full play to the minds and hearts and wills of the brethren; making just as few issues with their churches as possible; going round obstacles which they can't bore through, and don't care to blast away; taking with gratitude the half loaf when they can't get the whole one—but with a mental reservation to have the whole loaf at the very first opportunity. And the whole loaf these men do have, sooner or later, while their more exacting brethren are feeding on mouldy crumbs. How do you do it? we once asked a young pastor who was having his own way wonderfully with not a notably docile church. "By waiting till to-morrow for what the brethren don't feel like doing to-day." He had evidently learned the wisdom of putting up with the next best thing.—Watchman and Reflector: Darwin's new work, The Descent of Man, is a two volume attempt to run our genealogy back into a ape-dom, and through a long line of constantly deteriorating animals until we come to nothing or worse. We have known men to "come to nothing" at this end of the line, but to go back to nothing is discouraging. We like genealogical investigations, but there is a limit to the study, and we don't care much to go back beyond brains.

GATHERED FRAGMENTS.

The motto on every Christian banner is—Forward; there is no resting in the present, no satisfaction in the past.—Robertson.

God did not take up the three Hebrews out of the furnace of fire, but he came down and walked with them in it. He did not remove Daniel from the den of lions; he sent his angel to close the mouths of the beasts. He did not, in answer to the prayer of Paul, remove the thorn in the flesh; but he gave him sufficiency of grace to sustain him.

The Lord will come in person to this earth; that his risen elect will reign here with him and judge. This is my firm persuasion, and not mine alone, but that of multitudes of Christ's waiting people, as it was that of his primitive apostolic church, before [illegible] to the light of prophecy.—Alford.

[illegible] at first is but a silken thread,
Fine as [illegible] gossamers that sway
In the warm sunbeams of a summer's day;
A shallow streamlet, rippling o'er its bed;
A tiny sapling, ere its roots are spread;
A yet unhardened thorn upon the spray;
A lion's whelp that hath not scented prey;
A little smiling child obedient led.
Beware! that therad may bind thee as a chain;
That streamlet gather to a fatal sea;
That sapling spread into a gnarled tree;
That thorn, grown hard, may wound and give thee pain;
That playful whelp his murderous fangs reveal;
That child, a giant, crush thee 'neath his heel.

—In an English cathedral there is an exquisite stained window, which was made by an apprentice out of the pieces of glass rejected by his master, and it was so far superior to every other in the church, that according to tradition the envious artist killed himself with vexation.

All builders of society had rejected the "sinners" and made the painted window of the "righteous." A new builder came; his plan was original, startling, revolutionary; his eye was upon the condemned material; he made first last and the last first, and the stone which the builders rejected he made the head stone of the corner. He always specially cared for the rejected stone. Men had always cared for the righteous; it was left to Christ to care for sinners.

The conclusion of the whole matter is, that the times demand unfaltering fidelity to every distinctive Christian doctrine. And in order to this, Christians, and especially Christian ministers, must master the situation by making themselves thoroughly intelligent upon all these and kindred subjects. Superficiality will not do. Nothing but solid masonry will serve as a mighty breakwater to roll back the sweeping tendencies of the times to a baptised and clericalized infidelity. Our picture is not overdrawn. We understand something of what we write—and much that we do not write. The true men and women of God must "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints."—Wesleyan.

"NOTHING BUT LEAVES"

Matt. 21: 19.

Nothing but Leaves! When the Master shall come
To visit his vineyard below;
No fruit of the Spirit? no life work of love!
Can it be that our life shall be so?

Nothing but Leaves! And the Master will come
For fruitage when autumn is here,
But the bough of Life's tree will yield nothing but leaves,
And these will be yellow and sere.

Nothing but Leaves! All the summer showers,
And the warm genial sunshine in vain;
The bright buds; the blossoms of hope
Are gone, and they come not again.

Nothing but Leaves! Opportunities gone,
Aspirations all quenched at their birth,
The higher, the nobler, the holier life
Buried up 'neath the rubbish of earth.

Nothing but Leaves! The glad summer's gone,
And the autumn is coming even now,
Alas! for the tree—it shall wither away,
God looketh for fruit from each bough.

Nothing but Leaves! A life lived in vain,
And, oh, how the good Master grieves
To find that for all he has suffered for us,
We come laden with nothing but leaves.

Nothing but Leaves! Oh, God, shall it be,
That this life shall so fruitless be found?
No, graft us anew, with thy Spirit of love,
For without it, we cumber the ground.

INWARD VICTORY

Smite on! It doth not hurt me now
The spear hath lost its edge of pain;
And piercing thorns, that bound my brow,
No longer leave their bleeding stain.

What once was wo is changed to bliss;
What once was loss is now my gain;
My sorrow is my happiness;
My life doth live by being slain

The birth pangs of those dreadful years
Are like the midnight changed to morn,
And daylight shines upon my tears,
Because the soul's great life is born.

The piercing thorns have changed to flowers;
The spears have grown to sceptres bright;
And sorrow's dark and sunless hours
Become eternal days of light.

Comments on Revelation. No. 2.

I have noticed the transfer of the dragon power seat and authority to Zeno, the [illegible] Emperor. Permit me now to notice the extent of this power; as foreshadowed in [illegible], and concerning the time and its limitation, and his making "war with the saints." In Dan. 7: 6 you will find the symbol of a leopard, with four wings and "four heads," signifying the disrupted condition of Alexander's monarchy: the "wings" the divisions, the "heads" the four rulers that succeeded the imperial Macedonian.

The leopard of Rev. 13 is seen with simply "seven heads." It would be interesting, so far as my own feelings are concerned, to present those seven imperial "heads," or powers, that succeed each other in this chain of consecutive prophecy; but this is not a decidedly necessary part of our argument. The magnitude of his powers; the extent of his military prowess, and his war-making proclivities are graphically drawn by the revelator in v. 7. Look at it: "and it was given unto him to MAKE WAR WITH THE SAINTS, and to overcome them: AND POWER was given him OVER ALL KINDREDS, AND TONGUES AND NATIONS." As no such power was given unto the Pope, as we have clearly shown in the previous article, we must apply the prediction to the proper antitype, in order to ascertain its fulfillment. And to none other is it applicable in view of plain historic testimony, than he to whom we have applied it. Truth should be sought and preserved at the sacrifice of all favorite theory.

An important question now arises. By whom was the war upon the saints commenced, after the transfer of dragonic power? By ascertaining this important fact, we positively identify the proper power.

I find that Justin, in the sixth year of his reign, did issue an edict against the Manichees, whom he abhorred and detested. But it was not until the Justinians wore the imperial diadem that the war upon the saints was made in the fulfillment of the prediction. In consulting Bower's Lives of the Popes, vol. 1. 3[illegible]1, we find, doubtless, the fulfillment of what the Revelator prophesied. To this important fact we now invite your candid attention.

For, by an edict, which he [Justinian] issued to unite all men in one faith, whether Jews, Gentiles or Christians, such as did not, in the term of three months, embrace [illegible] profess the Catholic Faith, were [illegible] to be infamous, and, as such, excluded from all employment, both civil and military, rendered incapable of leaving anything by will, and their estates confiscated, whether real or personal. These were convincing arguments of the truth of the Catholic faith. But many, however, withstood them; and against such as did, the imperial edict was executed with the utmost rigor. Great numbers were driven from their homes, with their wives and children, stripped and naked. Others betook themselves to flight, carrying with them what they could conceal, for their support and maintenance; but they were plundered of what little they had, and many of them inhumanly massacred by the Catholic peasants and soldiery who guarded the passes.

Please observe; the war was instituted by the emperor, not the Pope. This is a valid argument that the leopard beast is the symbol of the Greek imperial power. In no sense can it be applied to the Popedom. Gibbon testifies concerning this imperial cruelty in this war "In the creed of Justinian, the guilt of murder could not be applied to the slaughter of unbelievers; and he piously labored to establish, with FIRE and SWORD, the unity of the Christian faith." (Vol. 3, p. 531.)

Can any one fail to perceive that the war was executed by the emperor for the Papacy, not by the Pope for himself? The same historian says (p. 528): "The reign of Justinian was a uniform yet various scene of persecution." This line of monarchs ceased to be the favorite protectors of the Popedom in A. D. 800, when Charlemagne formed a new empire in the west, and became the first "head" of the [illegible] testimony certifies:

It was after the Nicene Synod, and under the reign of the pious Irene, that the Popes consulted the separation of Rome and Italy by the translation of the empire to the less orthodox Charlemagne. By this decisive measure they would finally eradicate the claims of the Greeks. The majesty of Rome would be restored; the Latin churches of Christians would be united under a SUPREME HEAD in their ancient metropolis; and the conquerors of the West would receive their crown from the successors of St. Peter. The Roman Church would acquire a zealous and respectable advocate. Under the shadow of the Carlovingian power, THE BISHOP MIGHT EXERCISE WITH HONOR AND SAFETY THE GOVERNMENT OF THE CITY. (Gibbon, vol. 5, p. 40)

Thus, as the above certifies, Charlemagne became the "SUPREME HEAD" of the leopard beast. Eventually he repaired to Rome, in order to permit the hands of the mitered blasphemer to place the crown upon his brow, reeking with the blood of helpless and innocent victims:

On the festival of Christmas, the last year of the eighth century, Charlemagne appeared in the church of St. Peter, and to gratify the vanity of Rome, he had exchanged the simple dress of his country for the habit of a patrician. After the celebration of the holy mysteries Leo suddenly placed a precious crown on his head, and the dome resounded with the acclamations of the people, "Long life and victory to Charles, the most pious Augustus, CROWNED BY GOD, the great and pacific EMPEROR OF THE ROMANS!" The head and body of Charlemagne were consecrated by the royal unction, after the examples of the Cæsars; he was saluted or adored by the Pontiff; coronation represents a promise to maintain the faith and the privilege of the Church. Gibbon vol. 5 p. 43.

REWERRS.

Infidel Objections.

In THE TIMES of Jan. 3, a series of objections raised by infidels against the statements of Moses, is presented to have some one refute them; which is done by the editor in such a manner as ought to remove the doubts from the mind of any honest skeptic and sincere seeker after truth; but a few words in addition to what is there briefly stated, may not be out of place.

"Objection 1." is this: "How could Pharaoh's magicians turn water into blood, since Moses had already done the same thing to all the waters?" He seems to allow that Aaron, in obeying the command to "stretch out his hand upon the waters of Egypt, upon their streams, upon their rivers and upon their ponds, and upon all their pools of water" (Ex. 7: 19) did actually cause the waters throughout the entire kingdom to be turned into blood. It further seems to be allowed that the magicians did really do the same, and through their enchantments caused waters to be turned to blood as really as did Aaron. Without disputing the correctness of these conclusions, I submit the following as appearing, in my mind at least, to more fully remove the cavils of those who are disposed to find fault with Scripture statements, concerning Moses in particular, and all others in general.

First, then, I do not think it necessary to understand Moses' work in an absolute sense, as implying that the effect of his miracles was extended throughout the entire kingdom

That such terms are often used and yet to be understood in a limited sense, will be admitted by all who are acquainted with Scripture language and phrases.

Matthew says (ch. 3: 5.) that "Jerusalem and all Judea and all the regions round about Jordan" went out to meet John, and were baptized by him, but I never heard of any that believed Matthew to mean that every individual in those countries absented himself from his home, but that he meant that vast multitudes from those regions went out. I have not yet seen any that understand Paul in an absolute sense, when he says (Col. 1: 23,) that he had preached the gospel "to every creature which is under heaven." In this instance there in no dispute as to the idea intended to be conveyed, and there is no good reason why we may not understand [illegible] word in a similar manner.

That this is the true interpretation, I think is further evident from the following considerations: If the affliction had extended throughout Egypt, it would have been felt in as grievous a manner by the Israelites, whom God intended to save, as it would have been by the Egyptians whom he alone desired to punish. Again, in Ex. 7: 24 we are told that "all the Egyptians digged round about the river for water to drink; for they could not drink of the water of the river," which would seem to imply that the river alone was affected, as it was those who were dependent upon it for their supply of water, that digged about it, and not those that lived miles in the interior. And, further, as the miracle was for the purpose of convincing Pharaoh and his court that God had commissioned Moses in his undertaking, it would be a needless and uncalled for exhibition of power to have the curse extended throughout their entire lands where the inhabitants would be utterly unable to comprehend its meaning; and instead of seeing the power of the Israelites' God, would only see a strange and unaccountable pollution of the water.

These considerations lead me to think that instead of all the streams and ponds and pools of water throughout the entire land being polluted, we are to understand it as referring solely to the waters of the river, for although the command in v. 19 extended to all these, yet when we read of what was actually done (v. 20), we find that the river alone was affected.

Second, concerning the feat performed by the magicians. If the foregoing reasoning is sound, the infidel objection falls to the ground without going farther, as we see that they were not totally deprived of water and hence had an opportunity to extend the power of their enchantments. But here is an interesting question: Did they perform any miraculous deeds? Was there an exhibition of super-human power in their efforts, as well as in those of Aaron? Or was it on their part merely a feat of legerdemain, in imitation of the genuine miracles of Aaron?

I know that many are inclined to think that they did really work miracles with their enchantments, but that such a conclusion is not warranted by the narrations I think can be easily shown. First, it must be evident, that whether true or false, their deeds must have been done on a much smaller scale than those of Aaron, for he had caused the great body of water to be turned into blood, it is possible that a smaller quantity was brought to them in vessels of some kind that they might show the king that the gods of Egypt could also turn water into blood. That this point may be more clearly seen, I would refer to the other miracles and examine them. In ch. 8, we learn that Aaron in obedience to the Divine command "stretched out his hand over the waters of Egypt; and the frogs came up, and covered the land of Egypt." And the next verse says: "The magicians did so with their enchantments, and brought frogs upon the land of Egypt." But as Aaron had already caused the frogs to abound throughout the place, it is evident that the magicians must merely have had a space cleared of them, and then, upon this spot, have caused their production of frogs to appear, in imitation of the greater work of Aaron. And so, also, in the next instance, the production of lice; as Aaron had already caused lice to abound as abundantly as the dust of the earth, it must be evident that all the magicians could do possibly, was to try their power upon a space cleared especially for them, which when they tried, they were unable to do, and said, "This is the finger of God!"

Thus, I think, this is established, that their works, whether of super-human power or merely feats of jugglery, were done on a much smaller scale than these of Aaron. But did they really perform miracles? To one who has seen feats of magic by modern sleight-of-hand performers, or who is acquainted with the wonderful doings of the jugglers of the East to-day, it will not seem incredible to hear it urged that the Egyptian magicians, probably by their acquaintance with and skill in the arts of magic, were enabled to imitate on a small scale the wonderful miracles of Aaron and Moses. Su[illegible] would not be an impossible thi[illegible] them to change their rod, by [illegible] very dexterous movement, for a se[illegible] which they probably had about their person, and to thus cast it upon the ground; for similar things, and more wonderful, are done by Eastern magicians to-day. And so in regard to their imitation of Aaron's act, in turning the water into blood. [illegible] conceive of their casting some substance, which would change the appearance of the water, into it by a quick and dextrous movement of the hand; especially when we have seen that it was upon merely a small quantity of water they were to operate.

But perhaps some are ready to say, "Does not the narrative say that they did so with their enchantments? and are not we therefore justified in thinking that they really did perform miracles?" Not necessarily, for in ch. 8: 18 we read that "the magicians did so with their enchantments to bring forth lice, but they could not." Here we learn that they "did so" "but could not," i. e. they made the attempt, but failed to succeed. And so I understand it in those other instances; they "did so" i. e. made the attempt and succeeded by their arts in imitating the greater works of Aaron.

Let me, in concluding this article, as Wesley says, "draw some inferences." These miracles were wrought that the Israelites, too, might be convinced of the Divine commission of Moses; and they had their designed effect, for their faith in him as a teacher inspired of God is strong even to this day. But if those miracles which God wrought through him confirmed them [and us also] in that belief, how strong ought that faith to be which has for its basis a mightier miracle than was ever wrought by the hand of Moses, namely, the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. This is the basis of our hope and on it we rest and will rest; for if Jesus rose from the dead, he is the Son of God, and as such he endorsed "Moses and the prophets" by quoting them often. If then, infidels want to overthrow our religion, let them not go about the tree cutting off a twig here and a leaf there, but let them lay the ax to the root of the tree, and prove to us that the resurrection of Jesus is a myth; and when that is done, it will stand and bid defiance to all the attacks that infidelity can bring to bear upon it.

Ye are the Light of the World.

If God's children were ever the light of the world, ought they not to be so in this day, when men are inclined to take darkness for light and light for darkness; when so little heed is taken of the pure principles of the Gospel of God's dear Son? We read that "God is light, and in him is no darkness, at all." And, he "dwells in the light; whom no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen nor can see." And when Jesus came, he came a light into the world. "In him was life, and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not. He was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." "A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of his people Israel. "He was the light and they that follow him should not walk in darkness, but should have the light of life. No man cometh unto the Father but by him, and life and immortality are brought to light through his blessed Gospel.

In his memorable sermon on the mount, he said to his disciples—"Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." And as he sent them out as lambs in the midst of wolves, and told them to be wise as serpents and harmless as doves, he also said: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations." "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth, cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God. And if we say we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth. But if we walk in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." "And hereby we do know that we know him. If we keep his commandments. He that saith he abideth in him ought himself, also, so to walk, even as he walked." And Paul says God's children are all children of light, and of the day. We are not of night nor of darkness: and let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober," putting on the whole armor of light, and letting our light so shine before men that they, by seeing our good works, may be led to glorify our Father who is in heaven.

The night is far spent, and the day of final deliverance is at hand. Let us therefore cast off the work of darkness, walk honestly as in the day, putting on the Lord Jesus, and make no provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof. Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world: for if any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him. And may we ever remember, that the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eye and the pride of life are not of the Father, but of the world. Let us not be deceived, for God will not be mocked. What a man sows that shall he reap. If he sows to the flesh, he shall of the flesh reap corruption; but if to the Spirit he shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." J. W. FINN.

"NOTHING BUT LEAVES."

Matt. 21 : 19.

Nothing but Leaves! When the Master shall come
To visit his vineyard below;
No fruit of the Spirit? no life work of love!
Can it be that our life shall be so?

Nothing but Leaves! And the Master will come
For fruitage when autumn is here,
But the bough of Life's tree will yield nothing but leaves,
And these will be yellow and sere.

Nothing but Leaves! All the summer showers,
And the warm genial sunshine in vain;
The bright buds; the blossoms of hope
Are gone, and they come not again.

Nothing but Leaves! Opportunities gone,
Aspirations all quenched at their birth,
The higher, the nobler, the holier life
Buried up 'neath the rubbish of earth.

Nothing but Leaves! The glad summer's gone,
And the autumn is coming e'en now.
Alas! for the tree—it shall wither away,
God looketh for fruit from each bough.

Nothing but Leaves! A life lived in vain,
And, oh, how the good Master grieves
To find that for all he has suffered for us,
We come laden with nothing but leaves.

Nothing but Leaves! Oh, God, shall it be,
That this life shall so fruitless be found?
No, graft us anew, with thy Spirit of love,
For without it, we cumber the ground.

INWARD VICTORY

Smite on! It doth not hurt me now
The spear hath lost its edge of pain;
And piercing thorns, that bound my brow,
No longer leave their bleeding stain.

What once was woe is changed to bliss;
What once was loss is now my gain;
My sorrow is my happiness;
My life doth live by being slain.

The birth pangs of those dreadful years
Are like the midnight changed to morn,
And daylight shines upon my tears,
Because the soul's great life is born.

The piercing thorns have changed to flowers;
The spears have grown to sceptres bright;
And sorrow's dark and sunless hours
Become eternal days of light.

Comments on Revelation. No. 2.

I have noticed the transfer of the dra[illegible] power [illegible] and authority to Zeno, the [illegible] emperor. Permit me now to notice the extent of this power, as foreshadowed [illegible] vision, and concerning the time and its limitation, and his making "war with the saints." In Dan. 7: 6 you will find the symbol of a leopard, with four wings and "four heads," signifying the disrupted condition of Alexander's monarchy: the "wings" the divisions, the "heads" the four rulers that succeeded the imperial Macedonian.

The leopard of Rev. 13 is seen with simply "seven heads." It would be interesting, so far as my own feelings are concerned, to present those seven imperial "heads," or powers, that succeed each other in this chain of consecutive prophecy; but this is not a decidedly necessary part of our argument. The magnitude of his powers; the extent of his military prowess, and his war-making proclivities are graphically drawn by the revelator in v. 7. Look at it: "and it was given unto him to MAKE WAR WITH THE SAINTS, and to overcome them: AND POWER was given him OVER ALL KINDREDS, AND TONGUES AND NATIONS." As no such power was given unto the Pope, as we have clearly shown in the previous article, we must apply the prediction to the proper antitype, in order to ascertain its fulfillment. And to none other is it applicable in view of plain historic testimony, than he to whom we have applied it. Truth should be sought and preserved at the sacrifice of all favorite theory.

An important question now arises. By whom was the war upon the saints commenced, after the transfer of dragonic power? By ascertaining this important fact, we positively identify the proper power.

I find that Justin, in the sixth year of his reign, did issue an edict against the Manichees, whom he abhorred and detested. But it was not until the Justinians wore the imperial diadem that the war upon the saints was made in the fulfillment of the prediction. In consulting Bower's Lives of the Popes, vol. 1, 334, we find, doubtless, the fulfillment of what the Revelator prophesied. To this important fact we now invite your candid attention.

For, by an edict, which he [Justinian] issued to unite all men in one faith, whether Jews, Gentiles or Christians, such as did not, in the term of three months, embrace [illegible] profess the Catholic Faith, were [illegible]red to be infamous, and, as such, excluded from all employment, both civil and military, rendered incapable of leaving anything by will, and their estates confiscated, whether real or personal. These were convincing arguments of the truth of the Catholic faith. But many, however, withstood them; and against such as did, the imperial edict was executed with the utmost rigor. Great numbers were driven from their homes, with th[illegible] wives and children, stripped and nak[illegible] Others betook themselves to flight, [illegible]rrying with them what they could conceal, for their support and maintenance; but they were plundered of what little they had, and many of them inhumanly massacred by the Catholic peasants and soldiery who guarded the passes.

Please observe; the war was instituted by the emperor, not the Pope. This is a valid argument that the leopard beast is the symbol of the Greek imperial power. In no sense can it be applied to the Popedom. Gibbon testifies concerning this imperial cruelty in this war "In the creed of Justinian, the guilt of murder could not be applied to the slaughter of unbelievers; and he piously labored to establish, with FIRE and SWORD, the unity of the Christian faith." (Vol. 3, p. 531.)

Can any one fail to perceive that the war was executed by the emperor for the Papacy, not by the Pope for himself? The same historian says (p. 528): "The reign of Justinian was a uniform yet various scene of persecution." This line of monarchs ceased to be the favorite protectors of the Popedom in A. D. 800, when Charlemagne formed a new empire in the [illegible]st, and became the first "head" of the [illegible] testimony certifies:

It was after the Nicene Synod, and under the reign of the pious Irene, that the Popes consulted the separation of Rome and Italy by the translation of the empire to the less orthodox Charlemagne. By this decisive measure they would finally eradicate the claims of the Greeks. The majesty of Rome would be restored; the Latin churches of Christians would be united under a SUPREME HEAD in their ancient metropolis; and the conquerors of the West would receive their crown from the successors of St. Peter. The Roman Church would acquire a zealous and respectable advocate. Under the shadow of the Carlovingian power, THE BISHOP MIGHT EXERCISE WITH HONOR AND SAFETY THE GOVERNMENT OF THE CITY. (Gibbon, vol. 5, p. 40)

Thus, as the above certifies, Charlemagne became the "SUPREME HEAD" of the leopard beast. Eventually he repaired to Rome, in order to permit the hands of the mitered blasphemer to place the crown upon his brow, reeking with the blood of helpless and innocent victims:

On the festival of Christmas, the last year of the eighth century, Charlemagne appeared in the church of St. Peter, and to gratify the vanity of Rome, he had exchanged the simple dress of his country for the habit of a patrician. After the celebration of the holy mysteries Leo suddenly placed a precious crown on his head, and the dome resounded with the acclamations of the people, "long life and victory to Charles, the most pious Augustus, CROWNED BY GOD, the great and pacific EMPEROR OF THE ROMANS!" The head and body of Charlemagne were consecrated by the royal unction, after the examples of the Cæsars; he was saluted or adored by the Pontiff; coronation represents a promise to maintain the faith and the privilege of the Church. Gibbon vol. 5 p. 43.

REWBERS.

Infidel Objections.

In THE TIMES of Jan. 3, a series of objections raised by infidels against the statements of Moses, is presented to have some one refute them; which is done by the editor in such a manner as ought to remove the doubts from the mind of any honest skeptic and sincere seeker after truth; but a few words in addition to what is there briefly stated, may not be out of place.

"Objection 1." is this: "How could Pharaoh's magicians turn water into blood, since Moses had already done the same thing to all the waters?" He seems to allow that Aaron, in obeying the command to "stretch out his hand upon the waters of Egypt, upon their streams, upon their rivers and upon their ponds, and upon all their pools of water" (Ex. 7: 19) did actually cause the waters throughout the entire kingdom to be turned into blood. It further seems to be allowed that the magicians did really do the same, and through their enchantments caused waters to be turned to blood as really as did Aaron. Without disputing the correctness of these conclusions, I submit the following as appearing, in my mind at least, to more fully remove the cavils of those who are disposed to find fault with Scripture statements, concerning Moses in particular, and all others in general.

First, then, I do not think it necessary to understand Moses' work in an absolute sense, as implying that the effect of his miracles was extended throughout the entire kingdom

That such terms are often used and yet to be understood in a limited sense, will be admitted by all who are acquainted with Scripture language and phrases.

Matthew says (ch. 3: 5.) that "Jerusalem and all Judea and all the regions round about Jordan" went out to meet John, and were baptized by him, but I never heard of any that believed Matthew to mean that every individual in those countries absented himself from his home, but that he meant that vast mutitudes from those regions went out. I have not yet seen any that understand Paul in an absolute sense, when he says (Col. 1:23,) that he had preached the gospel "to every creature which is under heaven." In this instance there in no dispute as to the idea intended to be conveyed, and there is no good reason why we may not under[illegible] manner. [illegible] word in a similar

That this is the true interpretation, I think is further evident from the following considerations: If the affliction had extended throughout Egypt, it would have been felt in as grievous a manner by the Israelites, whom God intended to save, as it would have been by the Egyptians whom he alone desired to punish. Again, in Ex. 7: 24 we are told that "all the Egyptians digged round about the river for water to drink; for they could not drink of the water of the river," which would seem to imply that the river alone was affected, as it was those who were dependent upon it for their supply of water, that digged about it, and not those that lived miles in the interior. And, further, as the miracle was for the purpose of convincing Pharaoh and his court that God had commissioned Moses in his undertaking, it would be a needless and uncalled for exhibition of power to have the curse extended throughout their entire lands where the inhabitants would be utterly unable to comprehend its meaning; and instead of seeing the power of the Israelites' God, would only see a strange and unaccountable pollution of the water.

These considerations lead me to think that instead of all the streams and ponds and pools of water throughout the entire land being polluted, we are to understand it as referring solely to the waters of the river, for although the command in v. 19 extended to all these, yet when we read of what was actually done (v. 20), we find that the river alone was affected.

Second, concerning the feat performed by the magicians. If the foregoing reasoning is sound, the infidel objection falls to the ground without going farther, as we see that they were not totally deprived of water and hence had an opportunity to extend the power of their enchantments. But here is an interesting question: Did they perform any miraculous deeds? Was there an exhibition of super-human power in their efforts, as well as in those of Aaron? Or was it on their part merely a feat of legerdemain, in imitation of the genuine miracles of Aaron?

I know that many are inclined to think that they did really work miracles with their enchantments, but that such a conclusion is not warranted by the narrations I think can be easily shown. First, it must be evident, that whether true or false, their deeds must have been done on a much smaller scale than those of Aaron, for he had caused the great body of water to be turned into blood, it is possible that a smaller quantity was brought to them in vessels of some kind that they might show the king that the gods of Egypt could also turn water into blood. That this point may be more clearly seen, I would refer to the other miracles and examine them. In ch. 8, we learn that Aaron in obedience to the Divine command "stretched out his hand over the waters of Egypt; and the frogs came up, and covered the land of Egypt." And the next verse says: "The magicians did so with their enchantments, and brought frogs upon the land of Egypt." But as Aaron had already caused the frogs to abound throughout the place, it is evident that the magicians must merely have had a space cleared of them, and then, upon this spot, have caused their production of frogs to appear, in imitation of the greater work of Aaron. And so, also, in the next instance, the production of lice; as Aaron had already caused lice to abound as abundantly as the dust of the earth, it must be evident that all the magicians could do possibly, was to try their power upon a space cleared especially for them, which when they tried, they were unable to do, and said, "This is the finger of God!"

Thus, I think, this is established, that their works, whether of super-human power or merely feats of jugglery, were done on a much smaller scale than those of Aaron. But did they really perform miracles? To one who has seen feats of magic by modern sleight-of-hand performers, or who is acquainted with the wonderful doings of the jugglers of the East to-day, it will not seem incredible to hear it urged that the Egyptian magicians, probably by their acquaintance with and skill in the arts of magic, were enabled to imitate on a small scale the wonderful [illegible] of Aaron and Moses. Su[illegible] would not be an impossible thi[illegible] them to change their rod, by [illegible] very dexterous movement, for a se[illegible] at which they probably had about their person, and to thus cast it upon the ground; for similar things, and more wonderful, are done by Eastern magicians to-day. And so in regard to their imitation of Aaron's act, in turning the water into blood. [illegible] their casting some substance, which would change the appearance of the water, into it by a quick and dextrous movement of the hand; especially when we have seen that it was upon merely a small quantity of water they were to operate.

But perhaps some are ready to say, "Does not the narrative say that they did so with their enchantments? and are not we therefore justified in thinking that they really did perform miracles?" Not necessarily, for in ch. 8: 18 we read that "the magicians did so with their enchantments to bring forth lice, but they could not." Here we learn that they "did so" "but could not," i. e. they made the attempt, but failed to succeed. And so I understand it in those other instances; they "did so" i. e. made the attempt and succeeded by their arts in imitating the greater works of Aaron.

Let me, in concluding this article, as Wesley says, "draw some inferences." These miracles were wrought that the Israelites, too, might be convinced of the Divine commission of Moses; and they had their designed effect, for their faith in him as a teacher inspired of God is strong even to this day. But if those miracles which God wrought through him confirmed them [and us also] in that belief, how strong ought that faith to be which has for its basis a mightier miracle than was ever wrought by the hand of Moses, namely, the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. This is the basis of our hope and on it we rest and will rest; for if Jesus rose from the dead, he is the Son of God, and as such he endorsed "Moses and the prophets" by quoting them often. If then, infidels want to overthrow our religion, let them not go about the tree cutting off a twig here and a leaf there, but let them lay the ax to the root of the tree, and prove to us that the resurrection of Jesus is a myth; and when that is done, it will stand and bid defiance to all the attacks that infidelity can bring to bear upon it.

Words.

Words! What are they? Little things; and yet how much joy or sorrow may be wrought, even in the utterance of a few little words. Let us classify them. First, there are good words, which are made up of kind words, loving words, tender words, gentle words, endearing words, pleasant words, cheering words, hopeful words, encouraging words, words of sympathy, faithful words, prayerful words, trustful words, blessed words, cherishing words.

What a contrast! Yet how few, comparatively, realize the influence exerted from the use of these two classes of words. The first, ever bringing joy and gladness to the human heart; the second filling it with sadness and grief. Dear reader, are you ever indulging in those baneful words, which cloud even the moral atmosphere that surrounds you? If so let me entreat you, indulge them no longer; but on the contrary, speak those kind loving words, that will not only illuminate your own pathway with the sunshine of happiness, but will also shed a halo of peace and joy over all with whom you may associate. Jesus says, "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Hence the necessity of using those good words, that shall finally result in our justification in that great reckoning day, which is soon to dawn upon a world prone to use bad words.

Our Duty as Soldiers.

Making profession as followers of Christ, is very much like enlisting in an army for active service; and he who serves the duration of the war will be crowned. There is no guarantee to individuals that they will not be slain: but there is a guarantee that if we keep sentries well posted, are constantly vigilant, and always keep our front to the enemy, we will not be slain. Do we find ourselves short of sentries? What is more simple than to obey the command of our Captain, speaking through one of his officers—"If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all liberally, and upbraideth not." Yea, the direct command of our Captain himself, more concise. "Ask and it shall be given you." The conditions of life as stated above may, to some, seem contradictory; but note the character of the guarantee. That we will not be slain, depends on our own vigilance. In this is involved also the inference, amounting to a certainty, that according to our vigilance, so will our sustenance be in time of necessity. Keep sentries well and thickly posted; keep communications well open, and we will be certain to overcome: because our Leader is infinite in wisdom, in power, in resources. Keeping our communications open, means that we pray regularly and frequently. Keeping our sentries well and thickly posted means, that we watch and resist the slightest temptation to evil in any shape. Our Leader and Captain is well known, dearly loved by all his followers; and those who know him best are ready to do and dare, anything in his service. The duration of the war is for this natural life; our being slain, is when we surrender to the encroachments of sin and iniquity.

Now what is plainer than our duty, our proper course in the matter of following Christ? Is it not clear that we must be watchful against the first insidious attack, yea even friendly advances or overtures to peace on the part of our enemy? This latter is his strongest mode of operating against the professing Christian; to post sentinels therefore is our duty—it is our duty, and privilege, to send communications frequently to Headquarters, that we may thereby know that our line is open, if nothing else. Besides this is our life, our courage, our all, to know that we can have this communication: and unless we keep the road o[illegible] attended, we shall soon find ourselves short of supplies: and being in the enemy's country, are very likely to find ourselves compelled to sign a bill of capitulation; of which there is not the slightest necessity, if we but obey our commander's instruction. Let us, then, communicate freely and frequently.

A FRIEND.

Startling Facts.

When secular papers begin to cry out in alarm against those churches whose doors seem closed against the poor it is high time such churches should begin to inquire after the cause of the accusation, whether it be true or false. For myself, I was startled at an article in the Cincinnati Weekly Times, from which I will make an extract, that those who wish, may more fully know the advance in holiness made by many fashionable churches of the present day.

FASHIONABLE SOUL-SAVING.

When our blessed Lord delivered that matchless address on the mount, we cannot conceive of the possibility of there being any charge. Those precious utterances—"Blessed are the poor in spirit; Blessed are they that mourn; etc. flowed from those Divine lips free as the bounteous air, lavish as as the all pervading light. And so, we imagine, the proto-martyr Stephen proclaiming, not only before the Sanhedrim, but to all the people of Jerusalem, without money and without price. "Howbeit the most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands." There would be something shocking to our ideas of the loftiness and elevation maintained by the early missionaries of the cross to associate with their preaching such a thing as "reserved seats" or a "dress circle." And yet we have these things in our modern churches. There are particular churches which are recognized as "fashionable." There is no need there to apprehend any thing that will shock the most thoroughly well bred persons. People are expected to be well and elegantly dressed; the latest bonnets, the most dazzling silks, select them as the most fitting theater for their exhibition.

Of course these privileges have to be paid for. The "best people" are to be found in a certain portion of the church. People who have large families and small incomes get pews near the door, and to the right and left of the side aisles. People who have no income—they sit in the gallery, or, most likely, stay at home. It is positively an expensive thing to hear the Gospel in our towns. It is a matter of some surprise to us that some of the more attractive city churches do not set the example of charging an admission fee—say a dollar a head. People who have money are, we take it, just as willing to spend it at church as at the theater, for the same entertainment. It would, at all events, be a good idea to combine the two features of rented pews and the sale of tickets for single performances. Strangers (with money of course) often want to go to church, and do not wish to intrude into a private box, and such are perfectly willing to pay seventy-five cents or one dollar, to hear good music and see the elite of the city.

Perhaps I have copied enough of this sad but truthful article to show how much our city churches are doing for the salvation of the perishing. I will add another short extract from the Baptist Standard, of Chicago, which, I think, sustains the accusations of the above quotation.

THE "MICHIGAN AVENUE BAPTIST CHURCH."

According to the Standard this building, a thing of beauty, scarcely surpassed and rarely equalled. Its cost is said to be one hundred and eighty thousand dollars. The tower, in which is the principal entrance, is two hundred feet in hight. There are many commodious rooms in it, including "a 'ladies' parlor." That apartment is particulary significant, and suggestive of the ease and elegance to be found in the house of God, of modern times. The audience room is in Gothic style throughout, the visitor being especially sure to admire the beautiful grained ceiling, ornamented with frescoes. The organ is itself an ornament, in size admirably proportioned to the room itself, and finished in colors to match the tinting of the walls, and the painted glass in the windows. And the writer adds: Altogether we know of no place of worship which combines so many conveniences with so many attractions. Its arrangement and structure seems well nigh faultless. And to complete its grandeur, a chime of seventeen bells has been placed in the tower, the only complete chime we believe, in the West, and the only chime in a Baptist church in the whole world! Something to boast of this! The Catholics are noted for their chimes of bells, in addition to all other follies and ceremonies peculiar to themselves. But who ever supposed fifty years ago that the Baptist church would ever become willing to imitate in any degree such vanities, such departures from the plain teachings of the word of God.

I am still a member of the Baptist church and love its honor, and its prosperity in any way that will promote an increase of holiness; but when I read the article in the Standard from which I have made the above extract, I felt something, I am sure like the great Apostle "while he waited at Athens," when he saw the city "wholly given to idolatry." I think such needless expense and pride in churches, to be a sin similar to that which Paul so grievously lamented, and would receive from him the same rebuke given to the Athenians.

Since I have believed in the personal coming of the blessed Savior, the setting up of his glorious kingdom here upon the purified earth, the final restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began, and other kindred truths, I am accused of embracing "heresy," "new doctrine," etc. In view of this I will pledge myself to all who will take the trouble to talk with me on the subject, to give up every point of doctrine which I cannot read in so many words in the Bible. Will they in turn, I would kindly ask, give up the prosecution of such fine churches, with their fashionable ornaments, if they cannot find them endorsed in the New Testament, by Jesus and his apostles? I regard this to be only fair, and hope my Baptist brethren who still love "the good old paths of Jeremiah," will come out in protest against such churches, and suggest the building of those where the poor can have a free gospel preached to them.

Our Young Folks.

A Question.

"May Morton" wishes to ask a question for some of the young folks to answer: "What was the name of David's mother, and where in the Bible is it mentioned?" We prefer to use our space for questions concerning the sense, rather than the curiosities [illegible] exception in the case of very curious or difficult questions.

You will sometimes meet persons, who, when they find out that you are an Adventist, will ask you what they suppose to be puzzling questions upon the Scriptures, or your faith. You should "search the Scriptures," that you may be able to reply. A child that understands the word of God, can defend the faith against the most learned professor, whose system is based on tradition, or philosophy. I well remember, when a little boy, being asked by a man who had found out I was an Adventist, how any could know anything about the Lord's coming, when Jesus, "Of that day and hour knoweth no man?" I asked him if the Bible did not, also say—"Ye are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." Although an old man, and a church member, he had never thought what that meant. But in all your replies to such opposers, even when they scoff at your faith, as they generally will do, always be civil and kind. And now I want to give you a story illustrating the fact that death is a punishment: for our opposers often say—death is no punishment." But let an[illegible] read this story, and then say death no punishment, and life no reward, if they can:

THE REPRIEVE.

I had long wished to be the bearer of life to some condemned cell. My wish was granted me. It was on Tuesday that a poor sentenced criminal was to be hanged. He was within one day of the fatal drop. But on Monday, all unexpectedly, I was summoned to take him his life! I had obtained a reprieve for that man—a forfeited life. This, as I have said, is what I had long wished for. So wonderful a privilege was it to be in a position to give life!

My first thought was, Where is the train that can bear me swiftly enough to the cell? I dreamt not of delay. Delay appeared cruel; until, at the very threshold of the prison, I bethought me thus—How can I tell him? The news will kill him. The man will die if I tell him, so great will be the revulsion. He has died, so to speak. He is dead in law. And he is already in the bitterness of death. So with life in my hand I stand before the victim in his cell. His face is wan: his knees feeble. His vacant eyes have no tears, but are red; and look as if with dry, hot grief, they had burned down into their sockets. Melancholy picture! She who owned him as her husband had just been carried out from the last separation—still, and seemingly a corpse, unconscious of the strange, last kiss which a murderer had impressed on her lips. The expectant orphans, after their wretched farewell, were crying over the yet motionless form of their mother.

"My poor man, can you read?"

"Yes," was the reply.

But fearing to break the royal pardon to him too suddenly, I added:

"Would you like your life?"

"Sir," he responds, "do not trifle with me."

"But life is sweet—is it not?"

"Sir, I rather you would not speak to me."

"But would you not like me to procure your life?"

"It is of no use, sir; I'm justly condemned. I'm a dead man."

"But the Queen could give you your life."

He looks inquiringly at me, but is silent.

"Can you read this?"

And now those hot eyes are directed down upon the paper. As he intently reads, putting my arms around his shoulders, I say:

"There, my poor fellow; there is your life!"

No sooner had I uttered the words than, as I expected, he dropped down at my feet. There he lay, as it were, dead! It was more than he could bear.

What! when a man to whom a reprieve is announced, granting him a few more short years of natural life, falls down as dead, may not a sinner, who finds he is not to be lost, but that on believing he is saved—he has Christ, and heaven, and everlasting life—I say, may not he weep? Yea, cry? Cry for joy!—J. Denham Smith.

In accordance with the motion of adjournment at the last Annual Meeting in Amboy, Ill., Sept. '70, there will be a meeting of the Western A. C. Publishing Association, at Amboy, Ill., in connection with the General Conference, commencing Thursday, March 23, at 9 a. m. As this will perhaps be one of the most important meetings the Association has yet held, it is desired that there should be a full attendance, especially of the original members. Let us have a rally of our business men and the ministry in behalf of the business of the cause of truth. Come, and come early.

WM. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

W. A. C. P. ASSOCIATION NOTICE.

At the next meeting of the Association the following amendments to the Constitution will be offered for consideration and action:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. The Board of Trustees (of the Association,) shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to ART. III., Sec. 2. But the person filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of ART. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the [illegible] publication of such books and tracts as may be [illegible] the Association for that purpose; and shall also [illegible] Committee for the organ of the Association.

That ART. IV. be amended to read:

ART. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith, and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

SEC. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

SEC. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

SEC. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate; and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty-five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

ART. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to ART. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make ART. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

The precise date of the meeting at which these amendments will be considered, has not yet been fixed. It will probably be in March; and may be held in Buchanan.

At the Ohio State Conference, Br. C. D. Jefferson proposed to furnish a Mission Tent for the State, provided the Conference furnish two preachers to go with the tent. The following brethren were appointed to solicit pledges for the above purpose, and report to the president of the Conference, on or before the first of Jan., the amount pledged; and if sufficient is pledged, Br. Jefferson will proceed to furnish the tent, and we shall endeavor to put two good and faithful laborers in the field to labor for the cause of truth: A. B. Benedict, Nevada, O.; J. M. Treadwell, Fairfield; Martin Agner, Rockbridge; S. F. Rodgers, Norwalk; A. Mackey, Seal; Martin Bacon Bucyrus; T. Light, Plymouth; Dr. H. Kester, New London; Br. Beadly, White House, Lucas Co.; Thos. Kaufman, Shiloh; Henry Rust, Stryker; Wm. McDonald, Pincer; Geo. English, Montpelier; N. J. Cheadle, Delta; Geo. B. Terwelligar, Antwerp. Dear brethren, now is the time for action. Will you take hold of this matter at once, and report your success, so that we may know what to do? and the Lord will bless you.

Advent Christian Times.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 7, 1871.

AS WE allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

WE notice in many of our exchanges a department devoted to "Sunday Reading." Would it not be well to publish nothing unfit for "Sunday reading." That which is unfit to be perused on the Lord's day, is not fit reading for any day of the week.

A BROTHER who has just procured and read the translation of the Syriac version of the New Testament, says: "I think it a delightfully clear and pure expositor of our common version. It is, indeed, water to a thirsty soul." A good way to use new or various translations of the Scriptures is to read from them at family worship. It gives new interest to both the word and the occasion. And the Syriac version deserves all the commendation it has received, as an aid to the correct understanding of the Scriptures.

THE Methodist urges that:

> Good men must be made to feel that they should come together, in heart and in common Christian work, more intimately, till they can be prepared to lay aside their unessential theological discriminations, and thus at last solve the problem of a better ecclesiastical unity. The nonchalance with which the problem is now treated must give way to a more earnest and more generous sense of its importance.

—We wish some one would define which are the "unessential" points in theology. We hear a great deal about these "non-essentials." Which and what are they?

WE last week expressed the opinion that "figures, [even 'millennium figures'] will lie." We are sustained by a correspondent of the Interior. He says: "That figures cannot lie seems to be accepted as true. But they can. Put them in certain relations, and they are the biggest liars in the world. Arithmetic can not estimate moral forces; and when it undertakes to do so, it must lead astray." Which is all true. Will not our temporal millennium friends endeavor to display as much zeal in [illegible] their own incorrect figuring, as they do anxiety about some of our mistakes?

OUR attention has, of late, been several times directed to reports of sermons of Mr. H. W. Beecher, emanating from the New York Herald. It should be understood that the reports of Mr. Beecher's sermons in the Herald and some other New York journals are the veriest carricatures. If Mr. Beecher spoke of Paul as "an insignificant blear-eyed Jew," we may be sure that the terms were not used offensively, but in the same sense as Paul speaks of his presence as being "contemptible: that is, his enemies urged that it was so. Mr. Beecher might have used the words as coming from Paul's enemies, and his reporters would not scruple to misrepresent them, as Beecher's own sentiment. What he did really say, we do not know: we were not present: [illegible] But that the Herald report was a caricature is certain.

ZION'S Herald asserts that "death is a boundary which only separates one state of being from another." Hence we conclude that we may read in Ezk. 18. "The soul that sinneth it shall" 'pass the boundary which separates it from another state of being.' Oh! says the immaterialist; but we must infer that it passes into a worse condition of being. Is there anything about immaterialism that is not dependent upon an inference? If so, we would be glad to learn what it is. "Inferentialism" would be an appropriate title for the system. God says, "Thou shalt surely die." Immaterialism infers that God meant "death temporal, spiritual, and eternal." God says: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Hence death is not the boundary between two states of being, but the boundary between being and not being. Let us have done with unjustifiable inferences.

WE confess to a trial of our patience when new translations of the Holy Scriptures by able men are deprecated. Some leading men and journals of several denominations would fain have their hearers and readers think that King James' version is the next thing to an inspired translation, and cannot possibly be bettered. One man tells us that "it was the result of one hundred years of careful study and research." Very likely. But have we not had nearly three hundred years of "research and study?" And have not the common people the right to the best results of that growth in Biblical knowledge? We think so. The opposition to a new version comes from bodies who do not want certain words to read differently to the common people from what they now do—as baptise, church, bishop, presbyter, Easter. Let us have the best version that can possibly be procured. And in variety of versions there is often found an excellent commentary.

RABBI Vidaver of New York city has been, recently, interviewed by a Herald reporter. He is pastor of an orthodox synagogue. During the interview many interesting facts concerning Jewish opinion were brought out. Among other things, the Rabbi said that in a case where the law forbade their lighting fires, he had no compunctions of conscience about letting a Gentile do this for him. Being asked if all Christians will be doomed to eternal misery? he replied: "Certainly not; the Rabbinical doctrine is very, very different from that. All our wisest teachers in Israel have held that a man will be judged by his deeds, not by his speculative opinions; and that the good men of all religions—even good idolaters—will be saved. And I would rather not discuss the question of the eternity of punishment. The Bible simply says that we shall be righteously judged, and that is all I know or care to ask about the subject."

—Jewish Rabbies are not the only ministers who wish to let this subject alone.

HENRY Ward Beecher has been getting off some more Beecherisms. We get almost provoked sometimes to see him come so near to truth as he often does, and then miss it. But read this, from a report of his Sunday-week sermon, in the New York Times:

> In order, therefore, to fully understand the dealing of God with humanity we must entirely abandon the heathen idea of pain, and the idea that until lately found utterance from Christian pulpits, that God had the right to impose pain for his own pleasure. Now, you cannot, by calling a being by another name, make him love suffering without representing him as malignant. No being, be he subject or sovereign, can produce misery for its own sake without being himself infernal. Many a man has offered prayers to the devil when he thought he was kneeling at the throne of God. The Christian idea of suffering is, that it is a means to an end; that the end is so desirable as to justify the means used to bring it about. The conception of God sitting, enjoying the suffering of the damned, is infernal, and enough to make men renounce their faith in eternal goodness. It is an atrocious slander upon the grandeur and love of the Ruler of the universe. But, say some, is there not Scripture for it? There is Scripture for anything that man wants. There is Scripture for it just as there are assassins' knives in the ore in the mountain. Scripture is like a great forest into which you may enter and select good wood which you may pervert to the basest purposes on earth. Scripture is the most malleable thing in the universe. It is [illegible] the right use of it.

—Ah! When that question came—"Is there not Scripture for it?" Mr. Beecher, being committed to the dogma of the eternity of sin, and therefore of misery, in some form, to evade the point, seems to assert as a fact the infidel's scoff—"The Bible is a fiddle, upon which any tune can be played." We protest. But after all, we may misunderstand him, and Mr. Beecher may have meant to utter a negation, indirectly. His illustration admits of that construction. But in that case we do not see how he can hold to the eternal duration of evil. Oh! the mazes of immaterialism!

DESTRUCTION.

The Scripture doctrine of future punishment is, that wicked men will be literally destroyed, or put to death in gehenna. The word used oftener than any other to define the future punishment is apollumi. It occurs about forty times in the New Testament. "Its proper meaning," says a late writer, "as a verb in the active voice is to destroy, kill, slay, demolish: in the middle and passive, to perish, or to be destroyed; and if the object o the active verb be the life of man, ALWAYS TO DESTROY THAT LIFE. Throughout all Greek literature it is never once found to mean to keep alive forever in misery. It has the secondary idiomatic meaning of losing, as in Matt. 10: 42, Lk. 15: 4, but there is no other secondary meaning known to scholars; and even this is derived from the primary meaning of destroy. It is used in this idiomatic sense of losing six times in the New Testament, and thirty-five times in its proper sense of destruction, in the active or passive voices."

Now this is the verb used in the active infinitive in Matt. 10: 28. "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul, but rather fear him who is able, both soul and body to destroy in gehenna.

Dr. Mortimer, late Head Master of the city of London School, in a communication to Dr. Minton, of Eaton Chapel, said: I hesitate not to bear my testimony to the correctness of your statement, in your work called The Way Everlasting, as to two matters of much importance,—first that apollumi whenever and wherever it occurs in a Greek author, has but one meaning—the destruction of the object to which it is the active verb; secondly, that an immortality inherent in man is an unscriptural figment. Our future life and our future immortal life, are everywhere in Scripture represented to be the gift of God in Jesus Christ. And Dr. Weymouth, Head Master of Mill Hill School, on the same question, said to Dr. Minton, "My mind fails to conceive a grosser misrepresentation of language, than when the five or six strongest words which the Greek tongue possesses, signifying 'destroy,' or 'destruction,' are explained to mean maintaining an everlasting but wretched existence. To translate BLACK AS WHITE IS NOTHING TO THIS."

When will men come to understand the plain Word of God on the destiny of the wicked?

INSTINCT.

The mail, last week, brought us the following letter:

> Br. Himes: In discussing the nature of man with an intelligent physician of our town, he said that what we claim as reason, hate, love, etc., in the brute, is instinct; while in man it is not instinct; and that which reasons, loves, and hates in man is positive proof of an immortal soul or mind.
>
> I asked him if his theory did not raise the beast above the man. As, for instance, the little child at a week old had neither instinct nor intelligence; while the little pig at a week old had enough of one or the other to keep from eating anything not compatible with its nature, while a child would swallow poison, or anything else held to its mouth. The doctor answered that the difference was that an intelligent entity was breathed into the child, but not so with the pig. "Now," said I, "Doctor, you know that the child has no intelligence whatever. So whatever there is breathed into the child is [illegible] be an intelligent thing or entity."
> Now will you explain through THE TIMES, where the theory of instinct came from. We learn that fire will burn us from coming into contact with it; while the animal does not reason thus, but seems to have a knowledge and keep out of the fire the first time even. Or is it not true that animals keep out of danger by instinct.
> Hogs never reason or desire to eat or chew tobacco. Is it not an instinct that keeps them from it? For there is no one to learn them to keep from it; the opposite with some classes of bipeds is true, who when quite small have some one to learn them to chew or otherwise use that narcotic. Please favor with some remarks on this subject
> Your obedient subscriber,
> JOHN S. LAWYER.

—We cannot tell the origin of the theory of instinct, any more than we can describe in what it consists. The fact of the existence of such a faculty in connection with animal life was probably noticed early, and a name given to it. The English word instinct is derived from the Latin, instinctus. Webster thus describes it:

"It is the natural unreasoning impulse in an animal, by which it is guided to the performance of any action, without thought of improvement in the method." Says Sir Wm. Hamilton: "Instinct is an agent which performs blindly and ignorantly a work of intelligence and knowledge." A great deal of error concerning this faculty ought to vanish in the light of the above clear definitions. When any action on the part of an animal indicates intelligence and knowledge, that action is not the result of instinct, and the habit of ascribing displays of reasoning power in animals to instinct, is going out of fashion among intelligent persons.

It is said that instinct teaches animals to choose proper, and reject unsuitable food. But this is only in ordinary conditions of its life, or where it is left to choose its own food from nature's supplies. Mix strychnine with the little pig's food, and it will swallow it none the less greedily because its death is certain if it eats. Instinct teaches it to eat, but does not warn it of the poison. The reason why it refuses tobacco and other poisons in their natural conditions, is not because they are poison and dangerous to its life, but simply because they are disagreeable or at least not tempting to its taste. It has no appetite for them, or in other words does not like them. But the pig can be learned to use tobacco, as well as boys; and will take any poison, if it be compounded with a tempting morsel. From these and other premises we conclude that instinct is an attribute of the sensual nature, and is operated by the natural demands of the physical organization in any case.

The unconscious infant draws its nourishment from its mother's breast by instinct. Its physical nature develops a want, and when the means of fulfilling that want are offered through the medium nature provides, the muscles provided for this purpose are excited, commence to perform their functions, and we say the child imbibes its food by instinct. But gradually, as experience is gained and its organism perfected, instinct gives way to the exercise of will-power and intelligence; and who can draw the line where instinct ends and reason begins?

And many manifestations of what is called instinct in animals are properly actions excited by the demands of the reasons; or the working of the organs of their physical structure, according to the law of their being. But when all manifestations of intelligence in animals are referred to instinct, and the same things in man called the results of reason, we have an arbitrary distinction asserted, when there is no proof of any difference except in degree. The pig requires as many lessons as the child, before it will learn that hot food burns the mouth; and it only learns it by experience, never by instinct. As to the action of fire, or any other danger to which animal life may be exposed, we know of no reason for believing that, other things being equal, animals display any more of instinct in avoiding harm than children do. Both learn by experience. And before experience is acquired, both act, to a greater or less extent, upon impulses which we call instinctive, because, as they appear to us, that word describes them.

But animals reason. No race of animals has reasoning powers equal to those man possesses. But many animals have displayed greater intellect than is possessed by some men. The dullest dog displays higher intellectual powers than the idiot. Dogs, horses and elephants, have displayed stronger evidences of the possession of reason, than appears in certain races of savages. Animals remember, put facts and experiences together, and act wisely (or unwisely, as men do sometimes) evidently in view of deductions from those facts. This appears in the case of our house-cat, concerning whose intelligence we made some remarks in a December number of THE TIMES. If "Crazy" is in the kitchen, and wants to get out of doors, she will come to the sitting room door and mew piteously. One will go to the door, and open it, when she will instantly run to the outside door, mewing, and looking up beseechingly, saying as plainly as cat can speak—"please let me out of doors." The first time she did this, she was nearly five years old. She had learned previously that mewing would attract attention, and that if she mewed at any particular door, we would open it to let her out or in. But before this, she had never called us to open one door, in order that she might explain her wish to have a second door opened; but had waited until some one entered the room she wished to leave, to make her wants known. Did she not learn out this process by which to obtain her desire?

Much more remarkable displays of reasoning powers in animals might be referred to, but they are familiar to all, and are not essential to our purpose. We have said enough, we think, to show that if the fact that man reasons proves his mind to be [illegible] then animals have also immortal souls; for it can be demonstrated that they, also, do "deduce inferences justly from premises." But as some animals are more highly endowed with intelligence than others, so man, at his best, or even his average estate, stands high above all the animal creation in the scale of being. But if he degrades himself by persistence in sin, and withdrawal from God, he will at least perish, alike with the meanest of reptiles, and be no more.

THE MILLENNIUM DELAYED.

Last week we quoted a Wisconsin minister's mathematical demonstration that the millennium must come by A. D. 2,000. Since then we find some facts and figures in the Methodist, which are decidedly against this preacher's predictions. "Striking figures," the Methodist calls them. In 1816 the Methodists of this country had 695 ministers, 214,235 members; and the increase during the preceding decade 83,665 members—over one third of the body. The average increase was 120 members to each minister. In 1870 there were 9,193 ministers. 1,367,134 members, 335,000 additions—a proportion of one tenth, instead of more than a third, as in 1816. While the average increase was thirty-six members to each minister, instead of one hundred and twenty, as in the former case. Will Dr. Brunson please revise his calculations, and give these new factors their due position in working out the problem?

WHAT IS THE MATTER?

Says the Methodist:

> At a recent meeting of the Brooklyn Methodist Union (composed of the pastors and official brethren of the city,) principal speaker stated that the Methodist Church, though by no means lifeless, was not relatively as strong and aggressive as it should be. Various explanations of this state of affairs were offerred. Most of these attempted explanations are merely restatements, in another form, of the same general fact as to the lukewarmness of the Church. We can gain the respect of our fellow-Christians, and, what is better yet, acquire and retain a hold upon the masses, only by living up to our principles. The mission of the Church is not only to preserve Christians from pollution, but to save sinners from perdition. But in too many cases the highest ambition of an "official board" is satisfied when a costly church is erected and paid for, its comfortable seats well hired, and the rent is punctually paid. Then, in order to compete with their neighbors, the aid of "artistic" music is invoked. Now, we are no opponents of refinement and culture, but it does seem to us that we are entirely too generous to art and artists when we give them the cream of our religious exercises.....The French have (or used to have) a saying that "nothing succeeds like success," so it may be said, "nothing will revive us like a revival." And the way to secure this is for our official men to return to the old paths; to stop their ears to the protests of Mrs. Grundy; live so consistently as not to feel awkward and embarrassed in a Methodist prayer-meeting; going to the class-room as gladly as to a director's parlor; bestowing alms not grudgingly, but cheerfully; acknowledging that sin is worse than fanaticism, and enthusiasm better than stagnation; being as patient amid the fervor of a prayer-meeting as in the din of a stock-board; being less shocked by excessive earnestness in the work of saving men than carrying a primary; being not high-minded, but condescending to men of low estate; living simply and giving freely; praying in secret and serving God openly, even as our father did. There may be better ways in other churches, but this has been, and we hope may long continue to be, the Methodist way.

—No, not "the Methodist way" but the Bible way. Let the church but come to this standard, and the world will be shaken from center to circumference. But shall we indulge idle dreams that such a condition of things will supervene by and by? Let none be deluded; but awake to the stern facts, that the church and world are fast filling up their cup, and that the judgment, not the millennium, impends.

THE "SHADES"

"The shades tremble, beneath the waters and their inhabitants." (Job 26:5.)

In his notes on this text, in the Bible Union Version, Dr. Conant insists that rphah-eem should not be rendered the dead, as it always is in the common version, but the shades, i. e. spirits, ghosts, or disembodied souls; because, he says, "the term means that part of man that survives death." And he complains that the rendering of King James' translators conceals "from the English reader the evidence it furnishes, that the Hebrews had the conception of a form of existence after death." But let us see if the inspired usage will sustain this celebrated Hebraist's assertion.

Ps. 88:10. "Wilt thou do wonders to the dead?
Or will the shades arise and praise thee?"

Why should they not rise up to praise the Lord, if in a conscious condition? But the Psalmist's question implies a negative answer; that they will not praise God because they cannot.

"The dead praise not the Lord:
Neither any that go down into silence."
(Ps. 115:17.)

The two next stanzas confirm our understanding of v. 10.

"Will thy loving kindness be told in the grave?
Thy faithfulness in destruction?
Will thy wonders be made known in darkness?
And thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?"

This Psalm is the grievous complaint" of one who is in sore affliction, because his life has "drawn near to sheol," which is the place of the shades. Death is represented as a state of "darkness," "without strength," without consciousness—"the land of forgetfulness." If shades here means "disembodied spirits," they are in "the land of forgetfulness," for to speak of the unconscious body as passing into a condition of forgetfulness, is irrational.

Prov. 2:18. "Her house inclineth unto death,
And her paths unto the shades."

A parallelism, asserting that the harlot's ways lead to untimely death. Thus we read elsewhere:

"Her feet go down to death;
"Her steps take hold on sheol," (ch. 5:5.)
"Her house is the way to sheol.
"Going down to the chambers of death." (ch. 7:27.)
He [her victim] knoweth not that the shades are there,
That her guests are in the depths of sheol" (ch. 9:18.)

Whether this last passage does or does not refer to the Antediluvian giants,[1] who corrupted themselves by fornication, certainly no one will contend that the simple are warned from the lewd woman's house on the ground that it is haunted by ghosts of her victims. The stanza simply sets forth the certain doom of those who turn aside to the strange woman untimely, unnatural death. To be brought down to the shades is the same thing as to be brought down to sheol, or the grave. They are parallel expressions. Says Prof. Stuart: "I concede....it is possible to interpret Prov. 5:5; 9:18; 23:14, as designating a deathviolent and premature, inflicted by the hand of heaven." And his impression that somehow the future punishment is, also, involved in this doom, is doubtless correct. But while the Professor's faith in the Egyptian theory of a future life, forced him to believe, in spite of "the meaning that lies upon the face of the sacred record,"[2] that sheol is a place of conscious misery, on the other hand, those who accept the Bible theory of future punishment are not thus compelled to do violence to Scripture usage: death in sin involves the second death after judgment, and the loss of eternal life. This, and not eternal wo, is the future punishment.

Prov. 21:16. "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding.
Shall remain in the congregation of the shades.'

Dr. Clark remarks: "This passage intimates that those called rephaim are in a state of conscious existence. It is difficult to assign the true meaning of the word [rephaim, shades.] in several places where it occurs; but it seems to mean the state of separate spirits ....awaiting the judgment of the great day." But we question whether one not already an immaterialist would ever think of deriving an intimation of conscious existence from this passage. The word remain is "noo-agh," and is the same used by Job in ch. 3:13, 17, in speaking of death. "I had been at rest." "There the weary are at rest." It occurs in Dan. 12:13: "Thou shalt rest." Is. 57:2—"They shall rest in their beds." It is only a reiteration in a new form of the sentence of those who wander from or forget God: they shall die. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "The wicked shall turn back to sheol"—"perish forever."

In Is. 14:9, we again read of the shades; but no proof of their conscious existence may be drawn from the sublime imagery of this parable; for in it the trees talk and are conscious as well as the shades; and there are spectral thrones, as well as shadowy kings and rulers. The true condition of the rephaim appears in Is. 26 14, 29.

"They are dead, they shall not live:
They are shades, they shall not rise."

The context explains, that they have been visited, destroyed, and have perished. And in v. 29, we read "The earth shall cast out the shades!" Here again we have located the Doctor's spirit-world. The shades, they affirm are disembodied, conscious spirits; and the Scriptures declare that the earth shall cast them out at the resurrection. That dead men return to the earth is the unvarying testimony of the Word of God; and if there be a shade of man that "survives death," it, too, is in the earth, awaiting the resurrection, to be "cast out." Again we ask—Has our globe chambers of bliss and we within its crust?[1]

[1] Bp. Patrick, Clarke, Scott, Mede and others take this view.

[2] Future Punishment, p. 152.

[1] The word shades occurs in another form eighteen times and is rendered giants, Rephaims, or Rephaites.

A CANDID LETTER.

We commend the following as a model of candor in dealing with new views. We seldom receive letters from those differing with us in faith written in so excellent spirit. It is from one to whom THE TIMES was sent by a friend, on trial. One who does not condemn Adventism for the reason "he knows too little about it," is a singular being indeed. In general we are denounced most bitterly by those who know least about us.

Br. Himes: Allow me privilege of asking a few questions for information and comfort. I am not a believer in Adventism, "soul-sleeping," and the destruction of the wicked, as your paper teaches, I do not condemn it; for I know too little concerning it. In fact I knew nothing about it a year ago, only what little I had gathered from religious papers, perhaps imperfectly representing it. Since that time, I have met with several, and I am not so ready to say it is false as I was before.

I heard Br. N. Field of Jeffersonville, Ind. preach three or four sermons, and I was somewhat pleased with them, and I have been searching the Bible. In one of his discourses he placed heaven on earth, which was a new idea to me. He did not say "I believe it is," but quoted Scripture to prove it. Whether he construed it to suit the occasion I am not competent to say.

The influence of prejudice is very potent. We behold this in Catholicism and other instances, where we can hardly see how persons would cling to and support such doctrines as they do. If it is only prejudice in me, I want it removed; and the only thing to removed it will be patience and truth. The only thing that will produce faith is testimony. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." If I hear the Word of God and understand it, I believe it.

Your paper has been coming to me four or five weeks. I read it with pleasure and interest.

VANCE PORTER.

If our brother will take his Concordance, and trace out the subject of the inheritance of the earth by the saints, he will, we think, not fail to receive Dr. Field's testimony, that "heaven is to be on earth." See Rev. 5:9, 10, for instance.

MEMPHIS TENN.

It has caused us no little grief that the missionary work among the Freedmen, of which Memphis was the center, should have been abandoned by the Advent body. But we have had the satisfaction of knowing that we have done our duty in the premises, and, also, an assurance that what has been done will not be lost. The following letter from Br. Wadsworth will interest all the friends of the Freedmen, as it gives a reliable report of the condition of things there. I hope to visit this people ere long, and will then make a further report. Meanwhile let Br. and Sr. Wadsworth be aided in their labors. They are efficient and worthy. Br. Wadsworth says:

Br. Himes: THE TIMES comes regularly. Thank you for it. Also please accept my thanks for your kind remarks in your Journal about my pamphlet. It is true any help sent me by the purchase of the book will be appreciated. I wish to do good with the means put into my hands, and I need help, so that I may be able to help others.

We are struggling to maintain our Mission interest here. When the Board of Missions gave it up, it was thought that our colored Advent church would die. But they could not give up their faith. This people are trying to live, and with a little help they will do well. I do want them to have a good place of worship of their own. I do not want to see the cause go down here in Memphis. It would hurt the Advent cause. This people are to poor too build within themselves. Let us help them, and the Lord will bless us. He "loves a cheerful giver."

There has been a great work done here through the Mission Society. I see the fruits of it all through the city. Many of the white people have become interested in our views of the Bible through hearing the colored people, and reading our tracts. A white man here said that he would give $20 towards building them a house for worship, and several others will give smaller sums. I think with what little help we can raise here and a little from the readers of THE TIMES, this people will yet have a house of their own.

Brethren if you cannot send us anything pray for us.

IN ENGLAND.

In a private note Rev. Wm. Leask, editor of the Rainbow says:

The truth is spreading in England. We are everywhere spoken against as heretics and troubles of Israel. But for all that, the dogma of natural immortality, with its frightful logic of eternal evil has received a blow under which it staggers to its fall. We only want to get the ear of men who are at once devout and thoughtful: the work is then half done. The majority have never thought upon the subject. Everlasting torment is taken for granted as a very dismal thing—too dismal to think about, and there the matter ends. But, blessed be God, the light has begun to shine, and priestcraft, whether papal or otherwise, must have this engine of falsehood wrenched from its hands.

—To which we heartily respond, Amen.

AN IMPORTANT PROPOSITION.

The book entitled The Doctrine of Immortality, by Eld. James H. Whitmore, has been before the public long enough to establish its character as one of the very best works, if indeed it be not the best, yet written upon that subject. Its merits and efficacy are acknowledged wherever it is read.

It deals with one of the most important theological questions of the age. And our hearts have of late been stirred within us while we have beheld the church, and the world, too, almost wholly given to immaterialism. The children imbibe it, not only at Sunday School, but in the common schools. It is sung, prayed, talked, preached, written, so incessantly, that people generally take it for granted that it is true: but it is not true.

In every community there are some who will candidly consider the testimony against immaterialism, if they have the opportunity. We shall never gain all in any place; but there are few places where we may not convince some. Ministers cannot do all the work, though they are doing nobly and doing much. Our proposition is, in addition to our ordinary tract work, to print some thousands, as many as possible, of and send them out preaching the truth upon the nature and destiny of man. It is time for us to work, and work in earnest.

Our proposition is this. We will get out an edition of this work in cheap, yet good and durable shape, so that it will be likely to be preserved, and will bear handling; for we wish them to be circulated and read. This edition will be published especially for distribution, and the price be such that every Adventist can afford to give away at least one copy.

PROPOSED PRICES.

FIVE COPIES	$ 1.00
THIRTY COPIES	5.00
ONE HUNDRED COPIES	16.00

☞ NO MONEY TO BE PAID UNTIL THE BOOKS ARE READY FOR DELIVERY.

We will commence printing the edition as soon as subscriptions for one thousand copies are received. As soon as it is ready, subscribers will be notified, and the books will be forwarded to their order, on receipt of their subscriptions. But send no money until it is announced that the edition is ready.

Friends of the truth of God, one and all, will you engage in this timely work? Will you respond to this call immediately, and shall our press, soon be set at work throwing off the sheets laden with this great truth? we await your reply. Send us word by the returning mail, how many copies you will take, from five upwards. Look about you. think of any who may be open to conviction, but are not interested enough to pay 50c, or $1.00 for the book in its present form, but who would read it if given to them. Make up your mind to supply as many of them with it as you can.

Brethren in neighborhoods and churches. When you assemble in your meetings, unite your subscription, and send them all in one name, and so get them cheaper, and more of them for your various fields. What results we should see if ten thousand copies could be scattered within a few months. Yet that number would be only two copies and a half to each of our subscribers.

Send in your subscriptions.

THE TIMES.

We mean THE ADVENT TIMES. Have you done anything for its circulation? If not, will you not commence to work for it? Will you not commence now? If you can't get a subscriber for a year, will you not send it to some one for three months, at an expense to yourself of only thirty-five cents? A considerable number have taken advantage of this offer, and we anticipate good results, in an increase of our circle of readers. We think it will prove even more useful than the circulation of tracts to the same value It is time we were all at work. Let everyone help in some way.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

Br. Grant writes from San Francisco concerning his labors there, to the Crisis: People who have lived in San Francisco for twenty years are amazed and astonished at what the Lord is doing. They never expected to see what they are now beholding. Ten were baptized last Friday, Feb. 10th. It was one of the most interesting baptismal scenes we ever enjoyed. The Spirit of God rested upon us with power. Saints rejoiced and sinners wept. Six more have handed in their names for baptism, and we expect quite an addition to the number by the time of the next immersion. The prospect now indicates that there will soon be one of the largest and best churches in San Francisco that can be found in the United States looking for the coming of Jesus. Keep on praying for us. ——We learn that one John S. Speights is again in Connecticut. Brethren everywhere should be warned against him. Put no confidence in him whatever.——Brn. Huyke and P. Hitchcock have met with success in Wingville, Wis. Over fourteen made profession of Christ.——Br. W. McCullock has received a unanimous call to become pastor of the church at New Rutland, Ill., and has accepted the charge.——Br. Sheldon writes to the Crisis from Brunswick, Ga.: In this place the colored people have no place in the white meeting-houses; so they have not been out, except a few who have crept in contrary to the general custom, and a few servants who, after bringing the whites to meeting, have sat in their carriages outside, and listened there; this, in connection with the constant conversation of the whites about the preaching, has awakened a great excitement among them, and they are talking about the new preacher as "the greatest preacher that ever came to Brunswick;" and they are all determined to "hear Dr. Sheldon preach." as they call me. To-day (Feb. 14), I was waited on by a colored deacon of the colored Baptist church, as a delegate from their church, "to invite Dr. Sheldon to preach in their meeting-house." They have a large and beautiful church edifice here. The deacon said they were "all powerful anxious to hear Dr. Sheldon preach." I did not give a decided answer, wishing firstly to feel of the pulse of the white people, to determine whether it would tend to forestall my usefulness among the whites. Before night I was waited on by another colored delegation, pressing the invitation: "The colored people are right fast to hear Dr. Sheldon preach about de comin' of de Lord." I gave them some encouragement, and now all hats are off when they meet "the Doctor;" and every colored child has heard, and is ready to repeat—"Dr. Sheldon is comin' to preach to us." But I must try to get at the whites first. ——The interest at Rochelle Ill. is rising somewhat. Br. Clark baptised one there on Sunday week.——Br. Bliven writes that the church at Flagg Springs, Mo., has had some ten or twelve additions within a short time. Four were baptised in Br. Billmire's neighborhood, Feb. 19.

"I never go to church," said one; "I spend my Sundays in settling accounts." "The day of judgment will be spent in the same way," was the reply.

THE

ADVENT CHRISTIAN

TIMES,

A large, neat, eight-page weekly paper, thoroughly devoted to the advancement of the cause of Christ by the faithful advocacy, defence and dissemination of what is called Advent doctrine,

EDITED BY

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

THE TIMES contains, weekly, matter expository, exegetical, illustrative, practical; including communications, selections and original matter, with letters from those of like precious faith in all parts of the country, the news of the body, and a faithful digest of the news of the world bearing upon the signs of the times; with news of the progress of our cause in different parts, and also news of what our opponents are saying and doing, with expositions and refutations of their arguments; articles on prophecy; notices of current and useful literature; short sermons; a column or more for the children; choice bits of poetry—in short matter enough in every number to make a good sized book, and all furnished for only FOUR CENTS A WEEK, or $2 a year. No paper of its class furnishes so much reading matter, even when a greater price is charged.

The paper has been very useful in the past, and can be made more so by extending its circulation. To our friends who are working faithfully for this end, we make the following offer: We will send

THE TIMES, POST PAID,

to any address in the United States or Canada, on trial,

FOR THREE MONTHS,

for 35c. For one dollar, we will send THE TIMES to any three persons, three months, post paid; and any larger number at the same rate.

Who will take advantage of this liberal offer, to introduce THE TIMES in a village, a neighborhood, a church. For

TEN DOLLARS

you can send a live Advent paper to

THIRTY PERSONS

or into thirty families, post-paid, for three months. Could it fail to do good? Five dollars will pay for fifteen copies; and one dollar for three.

We make this liberal offer solely to introduce the paper in new fields and localities.

Will the ministry please publish it to their congregations?

Will our friends please tell it to their friends.

Will you who love the cause and wish THE TIMES to prosper, pay for 3, 5, 10, 50, or 100 copies, on these liberal terms. We have now 300 names, of partially interested persons among whom we could obtain perhaps more, could we send them the paper free for three months.

FIFTY PERMANENT SUBSCRIBERS,

Who will send at once? Send in the names, with 33⅓ cents for each name, and (if you give the P. O. address plainly) we will guarantee the delivery of thirteen numbers of THE TIMES, free of postage, to each one of them.

Three thousand three months subscribers, on this plan, will give us a large and permanent addition to our list.

Correspondence.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

SHELBYVILLE, ILL.

Monday, Feb. 19. Had a conversation with some German Jews, who were out to hear me yesterday. I told them that Jesus of Nazareth had fulfilled the prophecies as fully and literally, as any one that might yet come could do, and I did not see why they should not receive him. They said their difficulty was with the witnesses. They did not believe that the New Testament witnesses were reliable, and so rejected their testimony.

In speaking of their Sabbath, one said it could not be fully kept out of Palestine. The strict German Jews did not build fires, or cook, or light lamps, or do "any work" on the Sabbath day. But, said he, our servants, who are not Jews, did those things for us. But they do not tell them to do them, for that would involve them in the guilt of breaking the Sabbath. But the servants understand what is wanted, and do it, and receive their pay. He remarked that it was just as bad as though they did the work themselves; and it was not possible to keep the Sabbath, out of the Holy Land, after the strict letter of the law.

At night I spoke on the principles of prophetic interpretation, showing that a day stood for a year in symbolical prophecy. One teacher said, then Nebuchadnezzar was still out in the field eating grass; for "seven times" must pass over him, or 2520 days of years, which are not yet ended. But dream of the monarch related to himself, so interpreted, and so fulfilled in the seven specified years, is a very different case from that of symbolic prophecy, where the world's history is sketched in symbols. Days are used for years in the weeks of Dan. 9: 24, 25, and in the "times" of ch. 7: 25, and have been fulfilled. A large and appreciative audience so received it to-night.

Tuesday, Feb. 20. Explained the image of Dan. 2: 31–34. This vision gives the outlines of the history of the world from the days of Nebuchadnezzar down to the establishment of the eternal kingdom, at the second advent. At the close the Disciple minister objected to my exposition of the "days of these kings." He said it did not mean the ten kings, but the four great kingdoms. I asked him how the stone could smite the feet, which symbolized "these kingdoms," five centuries before such kings existed, and I am still waiting for his answer. A theory sometimes blinds a man's mind, so that he may not see the truth.

Wednesday, Feb. 22. This is the birth-day of Washington. It is celebrated by some in Europe, as well as in this country, with a view to exalt republican institutions, which some statesmen believe are yet to fill the earth. This is a dream and a delusion, as the next form of universal government is to be a kingdom that shall fill the whole earth. (Dan. 2: 24.)

I spoke at night, of the signs of this time, as indicating the near approach of the kingdom of God. Some have objected to this, on the ground that all the prophecies of Daniel were fulfilled at the first advent. Also, that the little horn, Dan. 7: 25 was Antiochus Epiphanes. In this view they follow Prof. Stuart, in his Hints on Prophecy. This learned man taught that Antiochus, who was the eighth king in the dynasty of Syria, the king of the North (Dan. 11), in the third kingdom of brass (Dan. 2: 30), was "the little horn" that rose up among the ten kings on the fall of the fourth iron kingdom. (Dan. 7: 23–26.) Men are driven to great absurdities, in their attempts to get rid of the evidence of the Lord's speedy coming.

Thursday, Feb. 23. It being the night of prayer for all the churches, I had no meeting, and commended all to go with their own churches for prayer.

I find that there is quite an excitement in the town on "soul sleeping," of which I have said nothing. A traveling lecturer on history and other topics, by the name of R. B. Bement, of the Baptist order, is here. He told me that some of the ministers wanted him to reply to my lectures on the annihilation and soul-sleeping doctrine. He told them that he could do it, and would if they would pay him for it! To-day Mr. B. wrote me, to know if I would discuss "the points of difference between [myself] and the most of the people of this city." I replied yes, if the people, and ministers would recognize him as their representative.

Friday, Feb. 24. I spoke to-night on the mortality of man, and showed that the resurrection was the only hope of a future life: and that this was the "blessed hope."

At the close three of the clergymen of the place, with others, propounded questions. One wished to know, if, when he addressed the sinner, in order to his conversion, he should address his breath! If the soul was his breath, he did not see why not. I replied that the soul was the person and the person lived by the breath of life; and we should address the person, who possessed intelligence, will, and conscience as the result of organization. It is the living, organized rational being that we address, who is constituted of body soul and spirit. Another asked, if the same body was raised from the dead, whether the deformed would be raised as they died. I replied, that when the "vile body" was changed in the resurrection it would be "like Christ's glorious body," perfect. A multitude of questions came up, all of which were disposed of in a Scriptural way, and to the apparent satisfaction of the audience.

We are almost to the end of the second month of the new year. How rapidly the time flies? Time is motion. The planetary system, in its revolutions keeps the time. We are guided by them, in its regulation.

When in Chicago a short time ago, I called upon Maj. Whittle, at the office of the National Watch Company, on Clark St. Their manufactory is in Elgin, Ill. He handed me a pamphlet published by the company which I find contains a great deal of information on the ancient and modern manufacture of time pieces. "Watch" is from a Saxon word signifying "to wake." At first the watch was as large as a saucer. It had weights, and was called "the pocket clock." The earliest known use of the modern name occurs in a record of 1542, which mentions that Edward VI. had "onne larum, or watch of iron, the case being likewise iron-gilt, with two plumettes of lead." The first great improvement, the substitution of the spring for weights, was made about 1550. The earliest springs were not coiled, but only straight pieces of steel. Early watches had only one hand, and required winding twice a day. The dials were of silver, or of brass; the cases had no crystals, but opened at the back and front, and were four or five inches in diameter A plain watch cost about $1,500, and it took a year to make one.

It is said there is a watch in a Swiss Museum, only three sixteenths of an inch in diameter, inserted in the top of a pencil case. Its dial indicates not only the hours, minutes and seconds, but also the days of the month. It is a relic of the old time when watches were inserted in saddles, snuff boxes, shirt studs, breast-pins bracelets and finger rings.

But in our times, we have practical time-pieces, which are placed within the reach of all. And among the watches manufactured in this country, the National Watch Company at Elgin, Ill. give us the best.

The great thing with us all, is to improve the time, for soon the end will come and all will be sealed up for eternity. Everything depends on the proper improvement of our probation. Eternal life or eternal death hangs upon the right improvement of the time allotted to us.

From O. G. W[illegible], La Crosse Co. Wis.

The Tim[illegible] ery welcome visitor at our ho[illegible] generally is the first paper to [illegible] when it arrives. It brings chee[illegible] from distant ones. I have to confess to neglect of duty. I failed in neglecting to attend the prayer meeting. I thought enough would attend without me. But let me warn all who may see this, if you value your eternal welfare, do not neglect duty in any form. Verily by one man's attendance to duty, a whole realm was affected. (Daniel.) Who knows how much good may spring out of a prayer meeting?

Last winter I was somewhat unsettled when seventh day was preached in the Valley. But I did not become entangled in the meshes of the law. And I praise the Lord my people have seen the folly of trying to keep a dead law, and have returned to their first love. And if in the providence of God, I can regain my first love, I will by his grace go on, in the hope that I may regain that which is lost, and have an interest in the Kingdom of God when he comes whose right it is to reign.

From Lemuel Record, Lancaster, Co. Ind.

We read in the word of God that we should "Render to all their dues,.... Owe no man any thing." (Rom. 13: 7, 8.) And seeing on the label, attached to my paper that my time for which I have paid is, or soon will be out, and and wishing to still continue taking The Times, and not knowing how to live according to the directions given in the word of God and not owe any man, but by rendering my due to you for the paper in advance, I therefore send you the money.

Again we are directed in the word of God, to "search the Scriptures." (John 5: 39.) It therefore being my duty to do so, and to search them for the very purpose of understanding them, and knowing, as I do, that I can more successfully search, and more readily understand them by also reading The Times in connection, where I can have the benefit of the expositions of other Bible-readers, so that by comparing those expositions with the Scriptures it enables me more readily to get an understanding of the Word of God; consequently I take it to be my duty to do so. And, again, in reading The Times we are enabled to learn how our brethren and sisters are getting along in the Divine life; and it is a source of comfort and satisfaction, and often serves to strengthen our faith, and help us to be patient under trials and persecution, and to be more watchful and prayerful; and then we are enabled better to do as the apostle exhorts, when he says—"But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith; praying in the Holy Spirit, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." (Jude. 20: 21.) Now how can we better accomplish this than by searching the Scriptures, and by speaking often to one another, both verbally and by writing for, and reading The Times? As for myself, I am happy in the Lord, and feel thankful to God for all these blessed privileges; and pray that I may rightly improve them until Jesus comes, if I live that long; for I think it will not be long before he comes, I feel like saying with one of old, "Come Lord Jesus!"

From A. W. McArthur, Huron Co. Mich.

We have had such good times up here "in the woods," as we call it, I wish every Christian knew it. I can say I feel stronger in the Spirit of God than ever before. Early in January Br. Durand came into these woods and began to hold evening meetings. They were the best meetings I ever attended. It seemed as though God had directed him for this work. On Sunday the 22d he baptised four, and organized a church of twenty-three members. There are others that will come in at a future day. Br. Durand seemed to gain the confidence of the people. His words were full of kindness and love towards God and man, sympathising with those that had trouble.

I used to often wish Christ would come soon, but dare not pray for his coming, because I was taught it would be wrong: I ought to be contented with God's own way, and when he thought best he would send his Son again; but I can say to-day, thanks be to God, I have a right to pray for his coming. I think I never was so happy in the Lord since my conversion (and that was ten years ago this month) as I am to-day. Our brother has gone to preach in another neighborhood, and has the prayers of the people as he goes.

From Wm. L. Hall, Fort Howard, Wis.

While there is so much ignorantly taught and believed that it is not true; and our hope that has its foundation in God's Word is lost sight of and ignored by the pleasure-loving Church, I feel thankful that there is a people (though despised) that are not ashamed of Jesus, nor any of his words; and that we have a paper that gives me more light on the Bible than all the fashionable preaching I have heard for years; a paper that I am not ashamed to lend to my neighbors, nor afraid to have fall into the hands of the enemies of truth: so I lend it to all that will read it. Some say they don't believe its doctrine, without knowing what it teaches. Some ministers say they have no time to read it. At the same time they can go to sociables, and talk nonsense, and have plenty of time for other amusements. But some are interested in the Bible hope that we hold so dear, and say it teaches the old fashioned Bible religion. They see now that the Bible teaches, instead of going to heaven at death, we wait for the coming of Christ, and the judgment, and that evil will not continue eternally, but that all the wicked will God destroy. If people will read and think for themselves, and prayerfully study the Bible, the result need not be feared.

From Albert Francis, Sangamon Co. Ill.

Before I heard any of the Adventists preach, I was of the opinion that there would not be any one saved, at all, for as much preaching as I had heard in my life, it was all a mystery to me, and those that preached it, also. I have often heard preachers pronounce the Bible a book that could not be solved; and it sounded very odd to me, to think that God would ordain a book to save men, and still make it a secret. I am thankful that we have the Bible in our hand, for a guide to life in the future. But I must acknowledge that it was a new Book for me after I heard Br. Calkins preach from it a few times, I think it sounds better every day; and I hope I may ever be faithful to its teachings. I know I am but a mortal man, and cannot do any thing unless I have God to help me. I long for the day when this mortal shall have the blessed opportunity of putting on immortality. I do hope I may not have to meet with that great and sorrowful calamity that awaits those that will not hearken unto the voice of God. It does seem to me that if sinners would only apprehend their salvation, they would come and give themselves to Christ, and not go down to perdition. We have so many that say that all will be saved, any way, whether we believed on God or not: but that is only man's opinion, and not God's; for unless we reform, and do the works of God, we shall perish in our corruption. This is Bible doctrine.

The devil said we should not die; but that is no proof; for we see that many have already gone down to their graves, and not one to Heaven. I am happy to say that we have some in this vicinity who believe in the Lord, and that his second advent is in the future, as yet, not so far away as some apprehend it to be, but close at hand, even at the door.

From F. S. Morgan, Lapeer Co. Mich.

I am thankful that I ever heard an Adventist preach; for it seemed that it was like coals of fire in shape of burning truths, that I heard from Br. Seymour last winter. At that time I was a bitter enemy to the Adventists, and it was by others daring me that I went to hear him at all. I was trying to live a Christian life at the time; and, like a great many others, believed that I had an immortal soul, not knowing the plain, simple teaching of my Bible. But what I heard from him that night, was too much for me. I could not find any immortal soul in the Bible, or any thing that I could build any such hope on; so I concluded to "let God be true and every man a liar." And it gives me joy to think that I can depend on God, through Christ, for eternal life. My prayer to God is, that he will send more laborers into the harvest. We are, as a little Church, waiting, watching and praying, for some one to come and hold a series of meetings. We are doing what we can by praying and talking and being faithful, but we want some one to come to preach to the people.

From Frank Pelton, Green Point, N. Y.

How few are willing to take heed to the sure word of prophecy. I feel that we are living in perilous times, and I do rejoice that the Lord has given me a mind willing to be guided by his Word, rather than by man's wisdom. How few of the philosophers of the present day are willing to be called "babblers." "Jesus" is spoken of for his goodness, but the resurrection is seldom mentioned. In all the sermons reported in last Monday's Herald, including New York, Brooklyn, Washington, etc., the word resurrection can be found but once. How different was Paul's teaching! "For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." (Rom. 5: 10.) "For if the dead rise not, then is Christ not raised; then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." (1 Cor. 15: 16–18.)

I am weak, but my trust is in him who is both able to save and raise me up at the last day; and I trust that I may be enabled to so keep the Word of his patience that I may be kept from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth. Oh! that we may all be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless when that day comes. And not unto us O Lord, but unto thee we will give the praise from everlasting to everlasting.

From T. J. Bishop, Izard Co. Ark.

Dear brothers and sisters: I feel that you should know that the blessed Bible truths are fast spreading over this part of the land. There are quite a number in this immediate settlement that are not ashamed to speak boldly in defense of these God-given truths. Thanks be to our God, the seed first sown by Fletcher is now taking root, and bringing forth its fruit. I need not say that by and by these things will be; for the time is now. Some are to all appearance lukewarm, but many stand firm. Brothers and sisters, be strong in the faith, and patient in your waiting, for our Lord will come. Let us act the part of faithful soldiers, and always be found at our post. Let us remember each other in our prayers, though we shall never all meet to greet each other until we meet in the kingdom.

From W. P. Talley, Macoupin Co. Ill.

I have received The Times regularly, for over two months. Thanks to the kind friends who had it sent to me. I assure you that it is indeed a welcome visitor to me, afflicted as I am. I have been confined to my bed, not even able to turn myself over, for more than five long years. My hips and lower limbs are perfectly paralyzed, so I cannot move them a particle, and I never expect to be any better. It was caused by an accident to the spine. The suffering is almost unendurable: but I try to bear it without a murmur, knowing that it is the will of him who holds our destinies in his hands. It is, no doubt, all for the best. God is too wise to err, and too good to do wrong. I love to read The Times, although the Advent doctrine is new to me. But the more I read about it, the better I understand it. I find that it is in harmony with the word of God, and, also, consistent with common reason. I study the Bible more, and I think I understand it much better than I did before I received the paper. I am not a member of any church, but hope to gain life everlasting beyond the scenes of pain and affliction of the present life.

From E. P. Daniels, Jackson, Mich.

The first of this year we commenced holding prayer meetings, and although we are but a few, yet the Lord has been with us. To-night we have had one at our house, and I can't go to rest until I tell how God has blest us. We had no laggards, but all seemed anxious to tell the love they had in their hearts. We are a little waiting band, looking for our coming Lord, and we feel to cry, Lord hasten thy coming and take thy children home!

We take The Times and find it a great comfort to us. I love to read the letters from the brothers and sisters. They strengthen me for greater exertions. May God keep them all till he comes.

We have the Word spoken every two weeks by Br. Snook, and it is a feast to our souls. Two weeks ago, I sat for the first time and partook of the Lord's Supper. Every one in the house partook, and we felt God's presence indeed. And as we gather with Christ in his kingdom may not one be left out.

From W. H. Reese, La Crosse, Co. Wis.

I am still looking for the return of our Savior and that blessed hope which if a man hath in him he purifieth himself even as he is pure. Oh! what a blessed hope this is, to know that our Savior is coming to this earth, again, and that soon, too. And we that are faithful to the end will be admitted into the New Jerusalem, and reign with him for ever. "We shall reign on the earth." What a glorious thought! We are to have a real home, a material one. Solomon says those that love wisdom will inherit substance. I believe that. And Christ says the meek will inherit the earth. Now what is the use of people trying to spiritualize that plain statement? Yet they will do it. I will just say here, to my Christian friends of like precious faith, how I heard the text—"The meek shall inherit the earth," explained. It was at one of the churches in this city. On the word meek showing what class of persons they were, it was all very well; but to inherit the earth, that was what I wanted to hear. I thought he was going to pass over it; but he finally said, that it was a common expression, and it meant that the meek should prosper here in the earth, and then at death go to Heaven!! Oh! what a doctrine! I have attended meetings of three different orders during the past week, and I must say that I came away as hungry as I went. I received a little food from the Baptist order yesterday. While at Sunday School, I had a very pressing invitation to join the Bible Class. I did not accept then, but told him I thought I would. Now my Christian friends I want your prayers, that I may stand up for the truth, and not shrink from any duty that may present itself; but may have the wisdom to enable me to discharge all duties in the fear of God, that I may help others to see the plain truth as it is in the Bible, and that the Bible teaches that man has not "a never dying soul to save."

I feel as if there must be a people here in this city that will be waiting for their Lord. I fear it might be now as it was in Sodom.

From Anson Brown Richland Co. Wis.

In weakness I write a few lines to let the dear brethren and sisters know that I am holding fast to the blessed truths that we find revealed in God's Word. The little church here is prospering. It is alive to its task. We keep up our prayer-meetings Sunday and Thursday evenings. THE TIMES is the only preacher we have now, except Br. Judson, occasionally. I have been trying to get subscribers for THE TIMES. We had a good meeting last evening. I improved the moments, and obtained two subscribers of the right sort. One was a young man who lately started in the good cause at one of our prayer-meetings. May the Lord help him to be faithful and useful. Volunteers are coming in. The truth is moving the minds of the people here. I think we may look for good results. Pray for us that we may earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, in the spirit of the true disciples of Christ.

From A. F Hales, Louisville, Ky.

My expulsion from my old church here has been an advantage to the cause of truth. During the trial at the church meeting I told the church I was ready to answer any question they might ask me on the Scriptures. The Moderator replied, "We are aware of that. We don't want to ask any." I then asked him if there was a line or more within the lids of the Bible or Baptist discipline authorizing any church to withhold a letter from a member without a charge against him. His answer was—"The church has a perfect right to withhold a letter from any brother." Those questions and answers have caused persons to inquire of me what I believed, and I have taken pains to explain my belief, and at the same time give the Scriptures to prove the position. Consequently I have five that have come squarely out on the Advent doctrine. I am thereby encouraged, and still wish to put in the hands of all I can such works as will enable them to see the light of the Scriptures.

Ordination.

> "I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality. Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins: keep thyself pure." (1 Tim. 5: 21, 22.)

Ordain, is to establish in a particular office or order; to set apart for an office; to appoint. "Jesus ordained twelve that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach." Adam Clarke in commenting on this verse says: "Here is nothing of what we call ordaining. Christ simply appointed them to be with him and that he might send them occasionally to preach." These were all men. It was essential they should be. It was more usual to see men act in this capacity than woman; it would excite less prejudice. It was a peculiar epoch of time; the time of the transition from the Mosaic to the Gospel dispensation; the time when Jesus, who sent forth these twelve Jewish men, commending them, "Go not in the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." The middle wall of partition had not yet been broken down between Jew and Greek, any more than between male and female. Christ had not yet died, nor the Holy Spirit been given. The great, significant ordaining had not yet taken place: the Holy Spirit was not yet given.

When the promise of the Father was given, then should be shown to the waiting multitude whom the Father would be pleased to ordain to preach the Gospel, whether male or female, or both alike.

What said Jesus to his disciples after his resurrection and prior to his ascension? "Thus it is written and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And ye are witnesses of these things. And behold I send the promise of my Father upon you. But tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." (Lk. 24: 46-49; Acts 1: 8.) When might they reasonably expect this promise of the Father, this wonderful descent of the Holy Spirit? The important time for the descent of the Holy Spirit, the inauguration of the Gospel dispensation, agreeable to the type, was upon the day of Pentecost. Then and there it was the waiting Marys, and other women, in company with the male disciples, received the true ordination.

As the law given from Mount Sinai amid its thunderings and quakings and fire consecrated the Aaronic priesthood, so now in the fulfilment of the type on the day of Pentecost, amid the mighty rushing wind that filled the house, the cloven tongues of flame proclaimed the true ministers of God, and showed to all succeeding generations, that henceforth God would ordain both men and women to preach the everlasting Gospel.

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come." (Acts 2: 1) The promise of the Father must come on that day, in fulfillment of the type contained in the law. The whole Mosaic dispensation was one complete system of types and shadows (Heb. 10; Col. 2: 17), reaching on to their great antitypes. We have nothing to do with the law in its typical fulfillment, now that we have reached the Gospel age; Christ being the end of the law for righteousness in every one that believeth. But we have to do with its antitypes until heaven and earth pass away, and the redeemed from among men enter into possession of the purchased inheritance. The dispensation of the law was a dispensation of types and shadows. Not only its kingdom, its capital, its laws, its subjects, its territory, and its king were typical of good things to come, but its three great annual feasts, when all Israel was to be represented before God—the Passover, Pentecost, and the feast of Tabernacles, were all typical, pointing to, and shadowing forth a great antitype to be reached by the church. The type must reach the antitype. The feast of the Passover reached to the true Paschal Lamb, "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." The feast of Tabernacles, or of ingathering, will be eventually fulfilled in the ingathering of wheat into the garner of God. The feast of Pentecost, called also the feast of harvest, and the feast of weeks (Ex. 34: 22), was celebrated fifty days after the Passover, to commemorate the giving of the law on Mount Sinai; which law was given fifty days after the Paschal lamb was slain in Egypt; whereby the first-born of the Hebrews were saved: hence called by the Greeks Pentecost.

On the fiftieth day from the celebration of the Passover, the glory of God appeared on Mount Sinai, and the law was given to Moses. Then and there was inaugurated the Mosaic system of types and shadows. Then and there a change was was made in the priesthood. Prior to this, the father and head of the family officiated as priest. Thus Noah, Abraham, Melchisedec, Job, Isaac and Jacob offered their own sacrifices.

And as if to make a complete break between the Patriarchal and Aaronic priesthood, as the law was about to be promulgated from the Mount, Moses builds an altar under the hill, and sends young men of the children of Israel to sacrifice to God, causing the recommencement and rearrangement of the priesthood under Divine authority to be made palpably distinct. Aaron is summoned to the Mount, and amid the thunderings, lightnings, and terrible fire that met and mingled on that quaking mountain, the law was given, and its priesthood ordained. The Aaronic priesthood continued in force until Christ came and expiated our sins in his own body on the tree, and became not only the sacrifice, but the priest who offered that sacrifice.

Now there is a disannulling, or changing of the priesthood; Aaron and his sons are left behind in the ministration of holy things. A priest has arisen after the order of Melchisedec, and not after the order of Aaron. (Heb. 7: 19.) For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Juda, of which tribe Moses spake nothing as to priesthood. Our great High Priest has made the sacrifice, and passed on high, where he is now set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, and minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle which God pitched and not men.

While Christ our great High Priest ministers in the holy sanctuary, the courts above, who shall minister for him among the sons and daughters of men?—not officiate as priests; that office is abrogated. The type has reached the antitype; the sacrificial system has become complete in the one great sacrifice; while the Aaronic high priest, the lesser priests and Levites all have faded away before our one great High Priest. The proper office of a priest is to offer sacrifices for sin. (Heb. 5: 1.) As the one great sacrifice is made, Christ, our High Priest, has passed into the most holy place, even heaven itself, there to appear in the presence of God for us. Consequently there is no more sacrifice to offer, nor blood to sprinkle. Christ has no priests on earth under the Gospel dispensation. (Unless we spiritualize the term, and bring it to view in the light of 1 Pet. 2: 9—"Ye are a royal priesthood.")

But though there are no priests under the present dispensation answering to the Levitical, whose office was to offer the blood of goats upon the altar, yet there must be servants in Christ's house, to minister in holy things. As Moses was faithful in his house and there were ordinances of God to be observed under the Mosaic dispensation, "So Christ is faithful in his house." (Heb. 3: 5, 6.) And there are ordinances to be observed in his church. God has not left himself without a witness, but has raised up those of our own likeness, whose terrors do not make us afraid, to minister to us in holy things. (2 Cor. 5: 19, 20): "God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself; not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead be ye reconciled to God." "Wherefore when he [Jesus] ascended up on high, he gave some apostles and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ. (Eph. 4: 11, 12.) As this house was to be arranged under the Gospel dispensation, and these different servants were brought out to take their place in the ranks in the great war that is to be waged against error and sin, will there be any visible manifestation of the power of God to designate what class or tribe or people or sex shall be allowed to enter the ministry in this new order of things? Yes. Christ, a Son over his own house, has promised this. "Tarry ye at Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high," said Christ.

POWER.

"Ye shall be endued with power." (Lu. 24: 49.) "Ye shall receive power after that." (Acts 1: 8.) Power: force, authority, energy. By power we understand authority. Hence when Christ told them power should be given them, he meant authority. He conveyed to their minds as plainly as words can convey ideas, that they should go forth from the time and place specified to receive this consecration, empowered as witnesses set apart, separated, authorized, or ordained (whichever term you may please to use to convey the idea of the power invested) to the great work before them.

"Witnesses of me." By me we understand Christ. Hence by "witnesses of me," we understand witnesses of Christ. What can a public witness of Christ be, but a minister of the gospel? The word translated power here is from the Greek word dunamis. It is the same word as that used in the Lord's prayer—"Thine is the kingdom, and the power." Whose is the power? The power is our Heavenly Father's. As we read in the commencement of that prayer, Christ taught his disciples to pray—"Our Father who art in heaven," closing with, "Thine is the kingdom and the power." Then the power is the Father's. Yes. If the power is the Father's, he has a right to bestow that power on whom he will. Has he not? Yes. Well he has promised to bestow power on the servants of his Son, to be witnesses of him, or ministers in his house. (Acts 1: 8.) If he bestows that power, will not those who receive the power be authorized, set-apart, ordained? Dare any say, No? Must not every candid mind admit the premises and say, Yes?

Is there to be a special place for the bestowment of that power? Yes. As under the old dispensation God selected Mount Sinai for the place of the manifestation of his glory, and giving the law, and setting apart the Aaronic priesthood; so he has a set place for the manifestation of his power under the new dispensation. What place is it? Rome, Egypt, Samaria? No. The place was Jerusalem; the city of all cities for the glorious manifestation of God's power in ordaining by fire men and women to preach the word. In this city, so sacred in ancient lore, God was to meet with and ordain this waiting, praying band of servants. "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem." (Lk. 24: 49.) Hence we find when Christ had ascended, they at once returned from Mount Olivet to Jerusalem, and there waited for the promise.

Will this power be bestowed on a particular time? Yes. What time then must this be. To the law and to the testimony. God's word must decide all of those questions. It must be on the proper time for the great antitype. What time is that? It is Pentecost. Pentecost was instituted in commemoration of the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, and must necessarily reach on through the centuries, until it finds its great antitype in that law of love, of light, and of life, that in that upper room issued from the mouth of those whom God had ordained to minister in holy things in the gospel dispensation. Hence it must be on the day of Pentecost, and no other. As Christ the true Paschal lamb must be slain on the time of the Passover to fulfill the type, so the Gospel dispensation, the new law of love, written upon the heart and not upon tables of stone, must be on Pentecost. How careful the Spirit is to inform us that "when the day of Pentecost was fully come," this power was given. Not as that great feast drew near, nor as it was passing away. Neither before nor behind the time, but at the exact time, essential to fulfill the type. In the Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, - - - - - - MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 7, 1871.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: { Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" His personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil; the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. F. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,

To whom all communications should be addressed.

Business Agent's Department.

BR. C. H. WILLIAMS' P. O. Address is West Martinsburg, Lewis Co., N. Y.

IT is said that the capitalists of Chicago have expended nearly one million of dollars in bringing the Elgin Watch Factory to its present state of perfection. They now have the finest and most completely equipped factory in the world, and are receiving profitable returns from their investment. Great credit is certainly due to the men who have stood by it for the past six years, until it has been made a success.

New Subscribers List.

WANTED AND REALLY NEEDED

Many friends have urged us to issue a call for ONE THOUSAND new subscribers the present year. Last fall we asked for five hundred within three months, and received about three hundred. Surely, a united earnest effort would easily give us one thousand new names in the ten months that remain of 1871. Shall we have them? Who will contribute to this fund. We had rather have a present of a permanent new subscriber, than a cash gift, any time. For every new subscriber secures new readers and new students of the truth. And our aim is to get the light we have before as many people as possible. Let us all work for this desirable object.

The following are the contributions to this fund the past week:

Job Brown, 1; L H Ferrell, 2; M Newberry, 1; S B Smith, 1; A S Calkins, 7.

Illinois Central Rail Road.

While passing over this road last week I was struck with the improvement of things under the excellent management of the present Superintendent, Mr. Martin Hughitt. Travellers over this great thoroughfare will find every convenience and comfort. Its trains run from Chicago to Sioux City, Iowa, west, and to Cairo in the south.

Friends seeking homes in the West, and not wishing to go to the frontier, amid the wild lands, will do well to take a look at Illinois; especially those who wish to cultivate fruit. The Southern part of Illinois is a garden for fruits. The climate is mild and salubrious, and the soil is rich, yielding an abundance.

What remains of the Illinois Central Railway lands is chiefly in the Southern part of the State. Much of it is heavily wooded. They now have some 460,000 acres for sale. Further information can be obtained by sending to "Land Department, Illinois Central R. R. Co., Chicago, Ill.," for a Guide to Illinois Central Lands.

To Correspondents.

J. D. W. CHURCHILL. Jas. Murdock is dead. His decease occurred last year, if we remember right.... V. PORTER. We send you tracts that will answer most of your questions, if not all of them. When you have read, please let us hear from you again.... E. V. AVERY. We receive members into our churches by vote. There are no forms enjoined, although it is customary for an Elder to give "the right hand of fellowship." The "terms of membership" are satisfactory evidence of faith in Christ and obedience to his word.... J. WOOD. You are mistaken. We never argued that "Christian is not a right name." We have, however, proved that it was not imposed by the Lord as a name for his followers.... J. McCLELLAN. THE TIMES has gone regularly to J. A. We have about 100 subs. in Canada.... H. WILLETT. We will read your article, carefully, if sent to us. Cannot promise to publish anything before we see it.... C. W. S. We never publish anonymous communications. We do not always give names in the paper, but the editor must have the names of his correspondents.... N. VAN DECAR. Br. and Sr. Mansfield reside in this village; have charge of the church here, and are well.... M. L. TURNER. The price for the LAWS one year is now 15c. You can send the 15c. sometime when writing us.... MARY L. HUNT. The offer of THE TIMES and Banner one year for $1.40 was a typographical error. Subscribers to THE TIMES can have the Banner for 75c. a year. E. C. ANDRUS. Glad of the news in your brief note.... L. A. WAIT. Pictures rec'd. Many thanks.... J. A. LIBBY. It was sent, but we send again.... S. E. MABEY. Don't think you gave that name. It is not on our list.

Book Notices, Etc.

I HAVE read The Doctrine of Immortality, by Whitmore, and pronounce it an excellent work, and wish that every one who believes that mankind are by nature possessed of Immortality would read it candidly. I think they would be convinced that immortality can be obtained only through Christ.—J. P. Powell. Ware, Mass.

THE Beekeepers' Journal for March is at hand, and a live journal it is. The spirit of the Bee Hive is in it; it shows energy, thrift, industry. We send it to subscribers to THE TIMES for 50c. additional a year

GOOD Health for March is at hand, interesting and full of useful information as ever. Boston, 11 Bromfield St. $2 a year.

HOWE'S Musical Monthly is rightly named; for it is all music, mostly designed for the piano, or the voice with piano accompaniment. As it is published at $2 a year, full sheet music size, it seems to be one of the cheapest ways of obtaining music for the piano forte Elias Howe, 103 Court St., Boston.

Obituary.

LOTHROP. Near New Rutland, Ill., Feb. 26, 1871, Elmer A., son of Frank and Belle Lothrop; aged 5 years.

He was a great sufferer, but his sickness was of only a few day's duration. His parents are stricken with grief, but the promises of the gospel are their support. Services by the writer. Sermon from 1 Cor. 15:26.

WM. MCCULLOCK.

HILLYARD. In Woodbridge, Mich. Feb 16th, 1871, Sr Abbie Hillyard; aged 25 years, 10 months, and 7 days.

Another of the "little flock" has fallen asleep, to wait until Jesus shall come and awake the sleeping ones, and raise them from their dusty beds. Sr. Hillyard leaves a large circle of friends who deeply mourn her loss, and a husband who mourns a loving companion.

She was converted in December, '69, and embraced the blessed hope of eternal life through Christ at the resurrection, which hope sustained her in the trying hour of death. When near her end, being asked by her husband if her hope was "still bright in Christ," she answered—"Oh, yes! I am sure that I shall rise in the first resurrection, and have eternal life. It will be so sweet to sleep in Jesus."

When she was buried by baptism, as she arose from the liquid grave, her face beaming with joy, she exclaimed, "O blessed Jesus!" So as she fell sweetly asleep, sweet peace and trust resting upon her countenance, the last words breathed from her lips were, "O Jesus!"

Services by Eld. Abbott, assisted by the writer. Text—Rev. 2:4, 5, which was found doubly marked in her Bible, and chosen by her husband for the occasion.

The Times.

ABROAD.

The preliminaries of peace arranged by Bismarck and the other plenipotentiaries with Thiers and Favre, are as follows:

Article 1 specifies the line of demarcation. Article 2 provides that France will pay Germany five milliards francs—one milliard at least in 1871, and all the rest in the space of three years from the ratification. Article 3 provides that evacuation is to commence on the ratification of the treaty by the Assembly; that the German troops will then immediately quit Paris and the left bank of the Seine, and also the Departments of Indre, Loire, and the Seine-Inferieure. The French troops will remain behind the Loire until the signing of the definitive treaty of peace, except those in Paris, where the Government is not to have exceeding 40,000 troops. The Germans will evacuate the right bank of the Seine gradually after the signing of the definite treaty and the payment of half a milliard francs. After the payment of two milliards, the Germans will only hold the Departments of Marne, Ardennes, Meuse, Vosges, Meurthe, and the town of Belfort. After the payment of three milliards, the Germans will only keep [illegible]0,000 troops in France; but if a sufficient money guarantee be given, the Germans will evacuate completely at once; otherwise, three milliards will carry interest at five per cent. from the ratification of the treaty. Article 4 provides that the German troops make no further requisitions; that the French Government will find food for the army in occupation of the ceded departments, that favorable arrangements will be made with the inhabitants, and time given to move if they please; and that no obstacle will be placed in the way of emigration. Article 6 provides that the prisoners will be immediately liberated on the ratification of the treaty, and that the French railways will lend their carriages and engines at the same prices as to the French Government. Article 7 provides that the treaty will be definitely signed at Brussels immediately after the ratification. Article 8 provides that after the ratification the management of all the departments occupied will be handed over to the French officials, subject to German commanders, in the interest of German troops. Article 9 provides that it be well understood that the Germans have no authority over the departments not occupied by them.—The following correspondence has passed between the Emperor of Germany and the Czar Alexander: The Emperor in his letter to the Czar, after stating the terms upon which peace has been concluded, says: "We have arrived at the end of a glorious and bloody war which was precipitated by the frivolity of the French. Prussia remembers that you prevented the spread of the war. God bless you!" The Czar replied that he shared the joy which was felt by his illustrious brother, and hoped for durable peace. He had proved a devoted friend, and the happiness and glory of Russia and Prussia were now insured. This friendship between Russia and Prussia is one of the reasons why England is entering upon a series of military works and army changes that will cost her some three hundred millions of dollars. That is one [illegible] war has had upon England.—A por[illegible] German army entered Paris, an[illegible] viewed by the Emperor—some 30,0[illegible] all. The Parisians generally closed the[illegible] and shops. Only a few witnessed the triumphal march of their conquerors. There were some trifling displays of violence attempted; but in the main the city was perfectly quiet. There will be a great triumphal display at Berlin, in which each German army will be represented.—It appears that not more than 170,000 soldiers were captured with Paris. During the siege the garrison used to be rated at from 300,000 to 450,000, and people wondered how they could be shut in by the smaller German army. Now the fact appears, that here, as elsewhere the Germans managed to outnumber their foes at the proper time.—One remarkable feature of the siege of Paris, was the diminution of the number of suicides. This is attributed to the excellent care taken of the poor.—England has had two more of the fearful colliery explosions, peculiar to her mines. The one cost about 50 lives; the other some 30.—A young Calabrian brigand recently executed in Italy, confessed 38 murders. He went to death laughing and smoking a cigarrette, and cursed the priests who offered consolation.—Latest reports from France are that the Germans have evacuated Paris; that there is rioting in Paris; that the Reds are endeavoring to bring about a revolution; that people feel very sore over the cession of Alsace and Lorraine, but that the general feeling is that there is no help for the case, and submission is the only alternative, while the duty of revenge will be left as a legacy to the next generation. German soldiers are going home, and French prisoners returning to France. Paris already begins to assume her usual appearance of gayety.

THE POPE.

The report that the Pope is to leave the Vatican is not true, if personal violence is not imminent. The question was discussed with the Pope by Antonelli at the instigation of the Jesuits, but the Pope has decided to remain, and cheerfully, because if he leaves the Vatican, the Italian Government will confiscate it. The Pope is suffering and in weak health, and fears that if he departed the people would say the Papacy was discomfited.

Louis Napoleon.

In these days of wonders it is not an impossible event that Louis Napoleon should once more ascend the throne of France; but we can scarcely conceive of an event more improbable. Those who imagine he is almost worshipped in France are greatly mistaken. In the Assembly last week the action of the Republic in voting the decheance was enthusiastically and unanimously confirmed. The fall of the Empire was decreed, and Napoleon stigmatized as the author of the misfortunes of France. His former private Secretary attempted a justification of the Emperor's course, which raised a storm of indignation and called out the above mentioned vote. We wish the absurd applications of prophecy to him could be suspended, at least until there are some signs of a resurrection from his present condition of political death. Of his late proclamation the London Times says: "He who wantonly brought upon France the war under which it suffers, he whose corrupt and corrupting administration struck at the roots of public virtue, debauched public life, and even ate away the strength of the army on which it relied, he whose chosen diplomatists were as blundering and inefficient as his chosen Marshals, ventures to tell France that he has been "betrayed by fortune." Nay, he takes credit for the condition in which he left the country at the time when he himself surrendered at Sedan, and attributes all the disasters that have befallen the nation to the victory of violence over right in setting up the Government of Defense. While, too, thus freely censuring what is past, the captive in Cassel has no word of advice on the direction of the future. He will wait to see what time will bring forth. Other men may undertake the labors of the hour, and if they fail he will come in with tardy wisdom to expose their errors, and to ask the people of France to put them aside and make way for his tried and approved judgment.

Enosh,—Mortal Man.

The following testimonies as to the meaning of the Hebrew word enosh (which occurs over 100 times in the O. T., and is translated "mortal man" in Job 4:17), may be interesting.

On Ps. 8:4, Dr. John Gill, an English Baptist, who "in rabbinical literature has no equal," says: "What is man" (enosh) frail, weak, sickly, MORTAL man."

On Ps. 90:3, Dr. Adam Clarke, Wesleyan, writes: "Thou turnest man to destruction'—literally, Thou shalt turn DYING MAN (enosh) to the small dust." T. Mudge, English Church, translates "Thou bringest poor MORTALS down to dust."

On Job 7:1, Ingram Cobbin, M. A. London, says: "Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth?" "Man." The Hebrew word here chosen (enosh) is peculiarly expressive. It is descriptive of man AS A MORTAL, and is equivalent to "is there not a short and limited season for such fallen, frail, and sickly MORTALS upon earth;" to the same purport Junius, Tremellius Piscator, and Michaelis."—German translators and commentators.

Job 21:33 "Every man—every mortal."—Mason Good M. D. and Dr. Boothroyd, Independent. Job 10:5, "The days of man (enosh) wretched miserable man."—Clarke.

Job 34:6 "Incurable—the word (enosh) which we translate "incurable" may be translated "man." So Clarke.

Cruden, in his Concordence says: "The Hebrew word for man is enosh; that is sorry, wretched, and INCURABLY SICK."

Is this not direct and plain testimony on the nature of man—enosh?

A. ARMOUR.

Dr. John Hall well asks, "Who ever heard of a man being disciplined for covetousness? For other sins," he says, "men are cast out of the church; but in this sin, which the Bible calls idolatry, they live and die without one honest rebuke."

BUCHANAN, ... MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 14, 1871.

NOT long since a Roman Archbishop in Chili, gave the following counsel to his flock:

"When any Protestant," said he to the faithful, "offers you a book of devotion and exalts the Bible to the stars, at the same time opposing the true Faith and Christian practices, on the ground that they are without Scripture warrant, tell him to point out in his Bible where Infant Baptism is enjoined, either by precept or example A THING WHICH THEY PRACTICE AS WELL AS WE."

—And he might have added—Tell them to point out the passage which speaks of immortal souls. We remember how lame Dr. Cumming was in his discussion with Mr. French on Romanism on these points. They were almost the only points in which his adversary had the advantage of him. Shall we who accept the Bible for our rule of faith, believe and teach what we fail to find in it? If we may, the Romanist may do the same, and the Pope be right after all.

Suffering is Finite.

If sin and suffering and death exist in harmony with infinite goodness and benevolence in this world, it is impossible to show that they cannot continue to exist in harmony with the same Divine attributes, forever, in the world to come.

—So says the Christian Observer in an article declaring the eternity of evil a mystery, but a dogma the morality of which man has no right to judge. But is it true that if God permits temporary evil and suffering he must upon the same principle allow them eternally? Let this be proved not asserted. We affirm that it is neither true nor reasonable. Temporary evil is a necessary contingency upon the creation of beings possessing free will. Having freedom of choice, the possibility of sin remains. Out of the notion that God has created the free agents who inhabit earth in the possession of inalienable immortality, has grown the horrible doctrine of the eternity of sin and suffering. When once the simple statement that the wages of sin is simply, literally death, is accepted, the idea that sin is of an immortal quality is dissipated.

We might possibly conceive of and reconcile to our moral sense the idea of the continual existence of sin, suffering and death in a succession of individuals, each appearing for a season only upon the stage of action, enjoying some compensation for their woes, and then sinking back into oblivion: but when the mind is called upon to receive the thought that every individual who goes to make up the ranks of the company styled "the lost," must be the immortal exponent of ETERNAL SUFFERING, the bounds of reason are exceeded. And as the "orthodox" Butler has said: "It would blanch the intellect, reduce the mind to a state of idiocy, deprive one of life, were he but adequately to conceive it." It is not above reason alone, like many mysteries in nature, but it is against reason, against our moral sense. The Scriptures do not require us to believe it. Let it take its place with the heresies of the past.

MR. HEPWORTH, the popular Unitarian preacher of New York has been preaching on eternal punishment. He thinks probation will be continued throughout eternity, though the redemption of the lost in the future life will be only by "hard work" on the part of the sinner, aided by "the utmost endeavors of God, Christ and the saints. "He thinks that as men die they (i. e. their souls) "gravitate to their respective places in the spirit world. Some go to hells—not however of fire, for these, he says, have been done away, and have no place in the theology of any one whose opinion is worthy of attention. The hells of the future life (which he compares to the jails and prisons of this world) are purely spiritual; and that there is hope for those who "gravitate" to them, he is sure because he reads in the Bible—"Though I make my bed in hell, thou art there"—"God will be with me even there, a sad, sorrowing presence more ready to give help than I can be to ask it."

Will the church never be freed from the misconceptions of the future punishment arising from the mistranslation of sheol in the Old Testament? And is any minister excusable, in the light of the present day, for intimating that sheol will bear the popular sense of the world "hell?" It is not a place at all: it is simply the state of the dead, and of all the dead, good and bad alike. As Parkhurst says, it is "the universal grave."

The Ol' is Best.

WE never realize the force of the Savior's remark—No man after drinking old wine straightway desireth new: for he saith the old is better, more than when examining the interpretations of the futurist school of the prophets. Those who delight in new and strange ideas will be fully fed by them: to us "the old paths" are the more desirable; "the old ways" more natural; the old wine is better.

Among the mistakes of futurism is the idea of a personal antichrist yet to arise, and fulfill many of the prophecies heretofore applied to the Papacy and Rome. Many ingenious devices, calculated to capture the minds of those not posted in the study of prophecy, are resorted to in support of this notion. One of these is effectually disposed of in the following brief extract from the Western Recorder:

One admits in the February number of the "Key" that "the title of 'false prophet' is applied to the antichrist." To this we heartily agree, and it is one of the arguments we urge in proof of the generally received opinion that the Papacy is the Man of Sin. He is evidently one who pretends to be a Christian, and is not the antichrist in the sense of being openly opposed to Christ, but as claiming to act as his vicegerent, or as God on earth. Colgrove, in the same number, says: "Antichrist is civil, politically imperial, masculine; exactly as the Papacy is ecclesiastic, spiritually imperial, and feminine." Taking the feminine out, each of these brethren is right, for all the other characteristics that they mention meet in the Papacy, and it is even reported that once on a time there was a female Pope? However that may be, the Popes, though unmarried, are as masculine as the future antichrist of these brethren dare to be. It will not avail them anything to make the Papacy "feminine," and hence not the antichrist, because the Italian church is symbolized by a woman; for then they would also make Christ "feminine," because his church is symbolized by a woman. The Pope stands related to the drunken harlot in the same way that Christ stands related to the virtuous woman; and if one is "feminine in symbolic language, so must the other be. It seems to me an effeminate argument to make the husband "feminine" because his wife is!

Gambling.

In Southern Germany men have been known to stake their all upon the turn of a single card, who one month previously had been worth not less than half a million florins. Not less reckless have been men in Hamburg and Lombardy. In Mexico ventures from twenty-five to 100,000 doubloons have been lost at only three different sittings at the same table. In France, the game of courting the smiles of fortune has often cost the player 5,000 francs an hour—a risk of $950 American, or £200 English in sixty seconds. In Rome, that most ancient of all cities, men have ventured and lost, during one or two nights, not less than 10,000 ten scudi gold pieces—a sum equal to about $100,000 American, or £20,000 English. In Spain, from the days of Columbus to the present time, many a don is recorded to have lost within twenty-four hours 800,000 doubloons—that is, £2,400,000 English, or $12,000,000 of our American gold coin. In England, where the spirit of gambling is not so conspicuous as in more southern countries, £10,000 is sometimes considered low play with certain aristocrats, but then it ranges upward occasionally to the round number of £50,000. In the United States, in one city alone, it is estimated from $30,000 to 500,000 will change hands through gambling means during one day and night. But, then, even these enumerations only apply to a certain class denominated the "bon ton, or aristocracy," of the world—hence do not take into consideration the class of gamblers lower down in the scale of life—yet, making a rough estimate from instances cited, we can honestly assert that the average gambling exchange of money throughout Christendom during but twenty-four hours may exceed, though it is not less than, $90,000,000, or somewhere about $123,100,000,000 worth of specie in a year of 365 days.—The Globe.

The above extract has been prepared with care from authentic sources, and deserves the consideration of all friends of good order and public morals. That gambling is on the increase in our cities and throughout the country, facts like the above will testify. Our club houses are the nurseries of this vice. There is more iniquity daily practiced in these dens of sin than the uninitiated dream of. It is time that the Christian sentiment of the country was brought to bear upon it, and that effective measures were taken for its suppression.—Christian Intelligencer.

SOME public journals seem to entertain an idea that reconstructed France, will immediately proceed to restore to the Papacy its temporal dominion. France is not reconstructed yet, and in view of the symptoms of internal discord, it is safe to say she will for some time be more occupied in her own affairs than in those of her neighbors. The Italians will not give up Rome, now that they have it in their possession, without war; and France is not in a condition to engage in another conflict, even with a second rate power. No doubt political parties in France would be glad to secure the support of the ignorant Romanist peasantry by catering to the Pope; but there are some things that parties cannot do. Moreover, we doubt if there is so very much sympathy with the temporal power among the masses in Europe. Italy, Austria and Spain have each been forced to repudiate the claims of the Papacy, and have gained strength in doing so. In each case they were forced to act by war or revolution. France's turn has come, and the revolution will not go backward. The Papacy has the form and name of a temporal sovereign, and a few acres of territory. The next act in the great drama of history will be its destruction. So we trust.

The Three Great Deceptions of Satan.

He is deceiving all mankind with regard to their apostate condition before God—hence their rejection of the reconciliation provided by God at the sacrifice of his own Son.

Second. He deceived the Jews with regard to their apostate condition. ("We be Abraham's seed."...."We be not born of fornication."...."Ye are of your father, the devil."—Jno. 8, 33-47)—hence their rejection of the prophets, but more particularly of him "of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets did write."

Third. He is deceiving Christendom (or the mass of professors, by whatever sectarian tie they may be bound) as regards THE APOSTATE CONDITION OF THE CHURCH—hence their rejection of prophecy, of the church's position, of the coming glory of Jesus as the King over the whole earth, etc., and their efforts to restore all things.

In these it is "the whole need not a physician," and in the last most prominently, "I am rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing." What can the apostate church indeed need when she already anticipates the bringing in of the latter-day glory, through her instrumentality? How appropriate the apostolic caution given on this subject: "Be not high-minded, but fear!"—Rainbow.

Ecclesiastical Civilization.

Some of the Northern papers have announced another innovation which is to be hailed as a great improvement in ecclesiastical architecture or civilization. A new church edifice is rising in Newark, N. J., which the papers say is to be supplied with unusual conveniences and luxuries, and in fact, all the modern improvements. Adjoining the vestry is to be built a church parlor, which is to be furnished like a modern drawing-room, with piano and elegant furniture. Beneath this room will be situated the church kitchen, with a hotel range, and all the conveniences for "big dinners." "An ecclesiastical saloon is certainly a novelty, unknown in the dark ages, when the refectories of convents and monasteries were kept scrupulously free from all connection with the kitchen. But the world moves."—Ch. Observer.

THAT Romanism is the State religion of New York has been understood by public men for some time past. Under the pretence of charity large sums of the public money are annually poured into the Papal treasury, besides valuable donations of real estate. In order to close the mouths of Protestants, if possible, by inveigling them into a recognition of the principle of State aid for denominational enterprises, a free lease of city lands has been offered to, and accepted by a Baptist Society in New York. That this Society should have accepted the gift is a grief to all friends of Protestantism. The Protestant press throughout the country, including most Baptist journals, has deprecated the acceptance of the gift. This much, at least, is gained. Our religious press is committed against all expenditure of Government funds for the patronage of religious denominations. New York is irrecoverably in the hands of the Papists. We trust they may not be able to attain control of any other great community. Meanwhile, the Baptist Benevolent society that was blinded to principle by the glitter of the rich prize placed within their grasp, has incurred the open or secret contempt of all classes. But has it done worse than those societies that pay their debts by gambling?

He alone is a man who can resist the genius of the age, the tone of fashion, with vigorous simplicity and modest courage.

GATHERED FRAGMENTS.

To cure us of our immoderate love of gain, we should seriously consider how many goods there are that money will not purchase, and these the best; and how many evils there are that money will not remedy, and these the worst.—Colton.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to ART. III., Sec. 2. But the persons filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of ART. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That ART. IV. be amended to read:

ART. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith, and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

SEC. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

SEC. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

The real trouble, then, about religious conversation is the want of a definite, sharp-lined consciousness in one's self of having a religious experience. What do these men more than others? In what does an ordinary Christian differ from a man that is not pious? If it is a mysterious something which none but a trained theologian can explain, of course the laity had better not try to talk about it. But if conversion be a positive revolution in one's tastes and affections; a change in one's aims and industries, like that of Peter and John when they forsook their boats and nets and followed the Master, then there is something to speak about—something to all men.—T. K. Beecher.

JOHN'S BAPTISM.—Strange scene—to which no revival on this or the other side the Atlantic has ever seen the like—Jordan's banks and Jordan itself full of eager multitudes—all the Holy Land there, and crowds from outside it. What an era it must have in the "religious world" of that land! How old conservative Scribes and Pharisees must have shaken their heads, and called out upon the times! How many decorums must have been violated, when wise old graybeards submitted to be taught by this wild rustic, and dainty daughters of Israel passed through the waters under his hands weeping tears of penitence!—Dean Alford.

The aspect of the years that approach us is as solemn as it is full of mystery; and the weight of evil against which we have to contend is increasing like the letting out of water. It is no time for the idleness of metaphysics, or the entertainment of the arts. The blasphemies of the earth are sounding louder, and its miseries heaped heavier every day; and if in the midst of the exertion which every good man is called upon to put forth for their repression or relief, it is lawful to ask for a thought, for a moment, for a lifting of the finger, in any direction but that of the immediate and overwhelming need, it is at least incumbent upon us to approach the questions in which we would engage him, in the spirit which has become the habit of his mind, and in the hope that neither his zeal nor his usefulness may be checked by the withdrawal of an hour, which has shown him how even those things which seemed mechanical, indifferent, or contemptible, depend for their perfection upon the acknowledgment of the sacred principles of faith, truth, and obedience, for which it has become the occupation of his life to contend. —Ruskin.

Select Poetry.

L. TAST POPULAR FREEDMEN'S SONG.

In the judgment day you will hear Jesus say,
Gabriel, go and wake my people
From every grave-yard!
Rise ye nations, rise ye nations,
Rise ye nations, from every grave-yard.

Go, Gabriel, go! "How loud shall I blow?"
Loud as seven peals of thunder,
To every grave yard.
Come to judgment, &c.

Tell the angel in the sun, tell the angel in the moon,
Pour our vials on the wicked
In every grave-yard.
Oh! what a mourning, &c.

What will the sinner do in that awful judgment-day,
To lose his soul and Jesus too,
From every grave-yard.
Must come to judgment, &c.

How happy are they whose God is the Lord,
They have secured a hiding-place
From every grave-yard.
Safe in Jesus, &c.

stitutes baptism, who are fit subjects, e mode of its administration, its essentiality, etc. Some hold to what is called Spirit baptism only, and reject water baptism entirely. Others reject the necessity of Spirit baptism in this life, claiming it only for immortal life. These generally cling strongly to the necessity of water baptism. Some claim water baptism to be a prerequisite to forgiveness of sins, and others that forgiveness of sins is a prerequisite to baptism. Some think that none can be saved without baptism, and others that none are saved by it.

These are but a few of the conflicting opinions concerning baptism, all claiming to be Bible views. All cannot be right, for then wrong would be the same as right, and error as good as truth. A few remarks may tend to throw light upon the subject.

There are three kinds of baptism mentioned in the New Testament, viz., with water, with the Holy Spirit, and with fire. There is also the baptism of suffering mentioned by our Lord which might be considered a fourth, but all, I think, are agreed upon this latter expression. The three elements of water, spirit, and fire, are distinct and different, hence their baptism must be also distinct and different.

Water baptism is first mentioned in the New Testament in Mat. ch. 3, where John is said to baptise "with water unto repentance." This signifies the introduction of a new, dispensation, in which personal repentance is a marked characteristic in connection with faith in God. John said, "repent ye." Jesus preached the same. Paul says that God "commandeth all men everywhere to repent." Peter says God is "not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance." The Christian's whole life is one of "repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ." (Acts 19: 21.) John taught repentance, and also said that they "should believe on him who should come after him." Faith and repentance are the great themes of all Gospel preaching and cover all dispensational truth from John the Baptist down to the end.

During Christ's tarry upon the earth this was the baptism which his disciples carried out as recorded in John 4: 2. But when Jesus was about to leave them and ascend to the Father, he added to the commission the name of the Holy Spirit. Thus the power of the three was combined; God, the Father—Christ the Lord—and the Spirit, the power of God and Christ in the hearts of all believers. It was not a change of John's baptism, but an addition to it. Now the commission was full and comple e. Christ gave it to his disciples. He commanded them to do it. It was not Christ's work. It was the disciples' work. And they obeyed, Peter, Philip, Paul, and the rest obeyed. They could not baptise with the Holy Spirit. That was Christ's prerogative. "He shall baptise you with the Holy Spirit," not ye shall baptise one another with it. Peter did not baptise with the Holy Spirit. Neither did Paul or any other man. Where do we read men baptised each other with the Holy Spirit? Was not the Pentecostal shower wholly the work of God? Did Peter do the work of baptising Cornelius and his company with the Holy Spirit, and then was he astonished at his own work?

It is said the apostles laid hands on the converts and they received the Holy Spirit. But this is never called the baptism of the Spirit. It is questionable whether the apostles laid hands in a special manner on all the converts. It is more than probable, from the narratives of the work, that this special work was confined to such as were so constituted and experienced as to be fitted for a peculiar position, and were thus set apart. But the commission to baptise was general; "teaching all nations, baptising them," etc.

The passage in 1 Cor. 12: 13, in which the disciples were said to be "all baptised by one Spirit into one body," is easly understood in harmony with all the Bible teaches on baptism, and also in perfect harmony with the laws of language, to refer to the one Spirit which they all possessed when they were baptised, and thus made a public profession of membership in Christ's body. Besides, the preposition "on" in the Greek, here translated "by," but elsewhere translated in a variety of ways, is too changeable in its force or meaning, to bear the weight of every other passage on baptism, and, in spite of them all, to prove the baptism of the Holy Spirit to be the only baptism. Yet it all turns upon the meaning given to this one word.

The expression in Eph. 4: 5, of "one baptism" is very evidently like the expression "one body," with many members, and "one faith," with many points of doctrine. So, the "one baptism" may have divers operations, and yet be united in one object.

I now come to consider the essential baptism, if there be any such. I think the word essential, so often made a theological corner around which to dodge an argument, is seldom properly applied. That which under any circumstances may be omitted is considered non-essential. But some persons will be saved without water baptism. Therefore water baptism is said to be non-essential. But the same argument makes Spirit baptism non-essential also; for some will be saved who have never received Spirit baptism, as the infants or little children whom Christ set forth as samples of converted men, and doubtless many others who never were wholly immersed in the Holy Spirit. Therefore Spirit baptism is non-essential.

But this cry of essential and non-essential is but a corner dodge. Everything which comes to our knowledge as a commandment of God, if possible on our part to perform is essential to us. The idea that a person may, with perfect impunity, exercise his own judgment contrary to the expressed commands of God is a fatal error, and should be strongly condemned. God has commanded his ministers to baptise, and has said to believers "be baptised" and to those who know it, obedience is essential unless impossible. This work is for man to do, and therefore cannot be baptism of the Holy Spirit, as that is Christ's work. And let it ever be remembered that the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, or being led by the Spirit, is not the baptism of the Holy Spirit, therefore, is no more essential in the experience of the saved than is water baptism, and perhaps not so much so; for while the first is the privilege of Christ to give as he pleases, the last is a command for man to obey under every possible circumstance.

Baptism is a figure of death and an immortal resurrection. Hence it is written, "so many of us as were baptised into Jesus Christ were baptised into his death. Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." (Rom. 6: 3, 4.) "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God who hath raised him from the dead." (Col. 2: 12.) This language clearly expresses the form of administering the ordinance, and needs no explanation. Who can say that sprinkling or pouring answers these expressions? Nothing but immersion will fill the bill. There must be a figure of burial and resurrection. Thus we "fulfill all righteousness" by showing our faith in the resurrection of Christ to die no more, and the resurrection of the righteous dead to immortality, who will thus be made perfectly righteous outwardly as well as inwardly. Thus we are "baptised for," or on account of "remission of sins," by prefiguring that change or "new birth" that will remit or put away forever all sins both outward as well as inward, and we shall be glorified. Thus we are "baptised for the dead," which we would not "if the dead rise not at all." (1 Cor. 15: 29.) Thus baptism is in its form an outward sign of an outward work, to be wrought at the coming of Jesus. It is not a sign of an inward work, else it would need to be oft repeated, which is not the case, for then who would know when it was sufficiently performed?

It is not a substitute for the ancient rite of circumcision, for "circumcision is of the heart," or affections, while baptism is of the body.

It is not the seal of our adoption as is sometimes said, and that it is no matter if the seal be great or small providing it seals. We are "sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise." (Eph. 1: 13.) Thus baptism has its appropriate and distinctive place in the economy of God, and aptly and beautifully shows forth the believer's faith in an immortality yet to be given at the coming of Jesus Christ in glory. The lover of Jesus will seek to obey.

Concerning the baptism of fire but little need be said. The expression is found only once in the Scriptures, and that is in Mat. ch. 3. And right there it is said, he will "burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." This is unquestionably the fiery destruction of the ungodly during the judgment day. But, as the righteous are to be unharmed during this "fiery trial," and are to be "saved so as by (through) fire," and as baptism might be considered a term significant of deliverance from danger, the baptism of fire may apply to the deliverance of the righteous from that fiery ordeal. One thing is evident, and that is, that the baptism of fire is to take place at the judgment. All the ungodly will then be consumed, while the people of God will be in that condition recorded in Rev. 15, in which is mentioned a "sea of glass mingled with fire," and the victorious ones standing upon it singing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

Comments on Revelation. No. 3.

Having presented our reasons for Franks under Charlemagne to have believing the beast like a leopard to symbolize the Greek empire, and the been the first "HEAD," I now proceed to notice the magnitude of dominion under this "head," in confirmation of the following prediction: "And power was given unto him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.

The subjoined testimony will I believe, corroborate my idea of its fulfillment. After speaking of the wars of Charlemagne from A. D. 770 to 804, the historian says:

> "The brave Saxons were, however, no match for one whose triumphs procured him the splendid title of Emperor of the West, and who gathered his daring hosts from dominions which comprised the whole of France, Germany, Hungary, Bohemia, Poland and Prussia, and were only bounded on the East by the Carpathian mountains, and on the West by the Ebro and the Ocean. Year after year he wasted their country by fire and sword, overthrew their idols, leveled their temples to the ground, erected fortresses amid the ruins of their villages, and carried away vast numbers of captives to the interior of Gaul. To this forced emigration succeeded unwelcome thousands of reluctant Saxons, who were compelled to subscribe to the ceremony of baptism."

I have patiently investigated this subject, and after a candid examination failed to see light thereon with any other than the above view of this highly interesting, and, at this time, very important prophecy.

Having noticed two of the symbols, the dragon and the beast like unto a leopard." I now invite your attention to some remarks upon the third symbolic monster predicted in v. 11: "And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and spake as a dragon." There are some distinctive features pertaining to this symbolic monster, in his prophetic history, that seem to me to be of so clear and convincing a nature that we need not entertain a doubt in applying the fulfillment to the character intended in the prophecy. The leopard beast arises out of "the sea," like the prophet Daniel's four monsters—the "sea" peoples. This two-horned, numeral beast, is seen coming up out of "THE EARTH." This I believe to be the "Roman territory." In this view of the subject I fully argue with many writers on prophecy; and upon that testimony, I shall endeavor to show, this prediction hath had its accomplishment in all the particulars designated by the Revelator.

It is evident that these beasts are contemporaneous, and the period assigned the leopard beast to exercise power, is limited. Mark, how definitely it is determined. "And power was given unto him to continue forty and two months. It is declared of the two-horned beast (v. 12): He exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him," or in his sight, his presence: for this is doubtless the sense of the original, as the following critical renderings most positively prove:

> And before him he exercised all the authority of the first beast of prey—Syriac.
> It was given him to do in the presence of the beast.—Amer. Bible Union.
> And he exerciseth all the authority of the first beast in his presence. S. P. Tregelles, LL. D.
> And he exerciseth all the power of the former beast in his sight. Douay.
> And all the authority of the first beast he executes in his presence. Emphatic Diaglott.
> And he exercised all the power of the first beast in his presence. Sawyer.
> And he exerciseth all the power of the first wild beast, in his sight. Whiting.
> And he exerciseth all the power of the first, before it. Penn.
> And he seduceth the inhabitants of the earth by these miracles, which he was allowed to show in the presence of the beast. Wakefield.
>
> And it leadeth astray the dwellers on the earth by the signs which it had power to do in the presence of the beast. Thompson.
> And he deceived them that dwell on the earth by the meanes of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast —Macknight.

Candid reader; suppose you had a case pending and you had summoned ten reliable witnesses to testify, and they were all as well agreed as are the above, and there was not one negative testimony. Should the Jury not give you your case, would you not conclude that judgment had been perverted, and truth was vainly sought for? Apply the above instance, and decide accordingly.

I invite your special notice to another fact. It is that the period during which the leopard beast could exercise power was forty-two months. When that period expired, they were both bereft of power; and when the leopard beast ceased to make war on the saints, the two-horned monster ceased to impose his mark under penalty of death. Both now are effete relics of bloody, dark and barbarous ages.

Rewerrs.

The 1335 Days.

WHEN WILL THEY END?

It is evident if we can ascertain the year during which the 1335 days commenced, that we can easily determine the year in which they will end. And although I do not purpose to take the position that I know my understanding of the matter is correct, yet I will present my views of the subject for your consideration.

I will quote the language of our Savior found in Mat. 24: 15, 16; and of Daniel the prophet, found in ch. 12: 11, 12. "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place,. . . then let them which be in Judea flee to the mountains! And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days."

There are four propositions contained in the above quotations, which I shall briefly take up and examine in the following order. (1) the daily sacrifice; What is it? (2) the abomination of desolation; What is meant by it? (3) the holy place; What is it? (4) when did the abomination stand in the holy place?

The daily sacrifice. The word sacrifice signifies religious worship; or that which may be consecrated to religious worship. It may be Jewish, Christian, or Pagan. The daily sacrifice then, signifies daily worship; or as it may be expressed in other words, the free toleration of religious worship, no matter what the sect or denomination the worshipers may be, or whether the worship is bestowed upon the true God, or heathen gods. That the above view isscriptural, is evident, from Dan. 11: 30-36, where we learn that the war which is waged, to accomplish the setting up of the abomination, is a religious war, and that only the true worshipers, in the name of their God, are in the midst of persecution, to make head against the power that sets up, and maintains that iniquitous system, called the abomination of desolation. In Rev. 13: 8 it is said: "And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him (the leopard beast,) whose names are not written in the book of life." By examining the passages which stand in connection with the above quotations, it will be seen, that the most powerful civil government of the time, was to compel all classes who held religious views, contrary to its own, to renounce them, and adopt those which it might dictate, on pain of persecution and death "by the sword, and by flame, by captivity and by spoil."

I need not stop at this point to quote history, to prove that the position I have taken in relation to my first proposition is true; for every reader of the history of the government symbolized by the leopard beast, is aware that from the first moment of its adoption of the faith of the Roman church, it commenced the issue of edicts against all sects of religionists, whether Jewish, Christian, or Pagan, compelling them to submit to the faith of the Catholic Councils of Nice and Chalcedon. Hence the taking away of the daily sacrifice, must signify the taking away of the free toleration of religious worship. If it is objected, that the word sacrifice is supplied, I have only to remark, that inasmuch as that which is demanded of those from whom the daily is taken away, is "worship," that that which is taken away must be worship, also. And as worship implies a creed or groundwork of faith, it is evident that the taking away of the daily, and the setting up of the abomination, signifies the taking away of the free belief in, and exercise of one or more religious creeds, or forms of worship, and substituting another in its, or their room.

2. The abomination of desolation. The position is almost always that the words "abomination of desolation," are the name of the thing to be set up. But if we look at another Scripture, we find the passage recorded in the following terms: "The abomination that maketh desolate." Hence we understand, the abomination is the name of the thing set up; and the work of desolation is the result of its being set up. Therefore if my position in relation to my first proposition is correct, that is, that the daily sacrifice, signifies the free toleration of religious worship, then the abomination which is to be set up, or established in its room, must signify that another certain creed or profession of faith, is to be universally enforced upon those from whom the free exercise of religious belief has been taken away.

But to be a little more definite, I will briefly notice a few facts of history in relation to the matter. As in the times in which we live, so for a long period prior to the setting up of the abomination, there existed many different sects of religionists (more than thirty in A. D. 200.) each of which held their peculiar tenets or doctrines. Perhaps the most popular among the religious denominations of that period, were the Arians, the Eutychians, and the Romanists. The prominent point of dispute between the Arians and the Eutychians on one part, and the Roman Catholics on the other, was the doctrine of the two natures of Christ. The former held to the doctrine of the two natures of Christ, yet they believed the two natures were so blended, that if one nature died, the other died also; hence they were denominated Unitarians. The latter, also, held the same doctrine of the two natures of Christ, but they believed the two natures were entirely separate and distinct, so that one nature might die, and the other still live. This class, which constituted the Roman Catholic church were called Trinitarians. This doctrine of the two natures of Christ was the bone of contention between these two religious parties for many years prior to the time when Justin, a rigid Romanist, mounted the imperial throne, in A. D. 518; when he commenced a religious war in favor of the Roman party, and against some of those religious sects, the Arians and Eutychians among the rest. In process of time, Justinian, the nephew of Justin, assumed the reins of the imperial government, and he having adopted the faith of the two natures of Christ, as held by the Roman church, and at the appointed time, set up, or established by authority of law, and by force of his military arm, the above faith as the religious creed of the whole empire. Hence if my premises are correct, the abomination which was set up, by authority of imperial law, as the only groundwork of faith and worship to be permitted within the wide domain of imperial rule, the result of which was such terrible desolation throughout the long dark night of the ecclesiastical supremacy of the Popes of Rome consists of the doctrine of the two natures of Christ, as defined and promulgated by the Catholic Councils of Nice and Chalcedon.

3. "The holy place." That our Savior did not have reference to Rome (as some think,) when he uttered this language, is evident from the fact that Rome is not, neither has it ever been called, "the holy place." And, again, if he had had reference to Rome, would he not have notified the inhabitants, or his disciples in Italy, to flee to the mountains, rather than those of Judea? So it seems to my mind. Neither could he have meant the place of worship of the true church (as some have argued); for if he had, then the language would have applied universally: for Jesus said, "where two or three are gathered together in my name there I am in the midst of them." No matter in what nation, or under what circumstances the gathering may take place. But the language implies a particular locality—"the holy place." And as the inhabitants of Judea are the people who are exhorted to flee to the mountains, it is evident that the holy place must be connected with that locality. I need not stop here to prove that Jerusalem, in the land of Judea, from its earliest history, has been called the holy place, the holy mountain, the goodly land, the mountain of delight, or holiness, and receives other titles of like import, for this will be admitted without argument. And we all agree that the same title is applied to Jerusalem all through this dispensation, from the fact that we admit that it is referred to, in the following passage, which we understand is yet to be fulfilled: "And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the sea in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him." (Dan. 11; 45.) We therefore take the position, that without doubt the holy place referred to by our Savior in Matt. 24, is the same as the holy mount in the passage quoted above. I know the position is taken, that the above language of our Savior had its fulfillment a little prior to the destruction of Jerusalem, from the fact that the same exhortation was given for the benefit of the people of the same locality at that time. But when we remember that the resurrection is to take place 1335 years from the time the abomination was set up, and that we are now living 1800 years this side the overthrow of that city by the Roman army, we say with all courtesy, we have no confidence that that position can be correct. It is evident there was not only a necessity that the believers in Judea should flee just prior to that overthrow, but that there would be a necessity for another flight, nearly 500 years later, when another catastrophe was about to befall that people. (To be continued)

WM. F. COLLIER.

The Morning Sun-beam.

As I turned to shut my closet door my eyes fell upon the first rays of the morning sun that were shining upon it through an east window. It instantly reminded me of a better and brighter sun, even the "Sun of righteousness," and I had power to pray in faith that he would lighten and cheer me all day long. Instantly I forgot everything else and laid hold on him as my sheet-anchor for the day, and I came down strong in the Lord and in the power of his might.

Bless his name! Everything was so cheerful! The little folks all seemed to have caught the same sunbeam, and their sweet voices were heard like the larks in the morning as they ran here and there greeting the morning breezes and the morning birds. And then as the notes of the welcome bell called them with ruby faces to the morning meal, each one volunteered his verse of holy writ while a sunny smile beamed from each face.

There as we assembled at the place of the family altar to pay our vows to the Most High, each vied with the other to be in his place, and let his voice be heard in the sweet morning hymn, and in the reading of the blessed Bible. Our lesson was an account of the sun-beam left in the house of Jairus in the raising of his only daughter to life again, and the sun-beam of peace and healing in the soul of her who said—If I may but touch the hem of his garment I shall be made whole.

Jesus is the sun-beam of the Christian's heart. Let us go to him and be cheered and strengthened day by day. "For the Lord God is a sun and shield; the Lord will give grace and glory: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly." "O Lord of hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee." (Ps. 84: 11, 12.)

Our Young Folks.

The Bible.

Study it carefully,
Think of it prayerfully,
Deep in thy heart let its pure precepts dwell.
Slight not its history,
Ponder its mystery
None can e'er prize it too fondly or well.
Accept the glad tidings,
Its warnings and chidings,
Found in this volume of heavenly lore:
With faith that's unfailing,
And love all-prevailing,
Trust in its promise of life evermore:
With fervent devotion,
And thankful emotion,
Hear the blest welcome, respond to its call:
Life's purest oblation,
The heart's adoration,
Give to the Savior, who died for us all.
May this messenger of love,
From the Father above,
To all nations and kindreds be given,
Then the ransomed shall raise
Joyous anthems of praise,
Hallelujah! on earth and in heaven.

—Yes, when the Scriptures shall have borne their testimony to every tongue, kindred and nation of earth, for a witness to them, "then shall the end come." May it be soon.

I fear some of my young friends are open to the rebuke contained in the following illustration and its application, but I hope they will accept the reproof, and hereafter receive kindly any words spoken for their good:

THE LOST JEWELS.

If a king were to give you a necklace of diamonds, and on a day, when walking abroad, the cord that held them together became loose, and one by one the precious gems fell to the ground, and were lost—would you not grieve over your misfortune, and seek to recover the jewels? And how unkind it would be if any person were to see these diamonds dropping away, and not to tell you of the loss?

Every day of your life is a rich jewel, more precious than any gem that was ever worn by king or queen. But is every day spent for your own and others' good and the glory of God, or is it lost? One by one those days are slipping away.

Would you turn away, with a frown on your face and anger in your heart, if a friend were to tell you that you were losing the jewels of a costly necklace? Why, then, are you displeased if you are told that you are losing the precious days of youth?

And which is the greatest loss? Fine jewels may be replaced: or you may be quite as happy without them. But the days of youth will not return again; and to lose your days is the way to lose the soul.

And does this story about the "three sieves" hit you? Oh! how easy it is to talk. James said all kind of animals had been tamed, but the tongue was untameable. But let us all try to strain the stories we tell of others through

THE THREE SIEVES.

"Oh, mamma!" cried little Blanche Philpott, "I heard such a tale about Edith Howard! I did not think she could be so very naughty, One—"

"My dear," interrupted Mrs. Philpott, "before you continue, we will see if your story will pass the three sieves."

"What does that mean, mamma?" inquired Blanche.

"I will explain it. In the first place, Is it true?"

"I suppose so; I got it from Miss White, and she is a great friend of Edith."

"And does she show her friendship by telling tales of her? In the next place, though you can prove it to be true, Is it kind?"

"I did not mean to be unkind, mamma, but I am afraid it was. I should not like Edith to speak of me as I have spoken of her."

"And, Is it necessary?"

"No, of course, mamma; there was no need for me to mention it at all."

"Then put a bridle on your tongue, dear Blanche, and don't speak of it. If we cannot speak well of our friends, let us not speak of them at all."

Here are two verses which I found in a paper that prides itself upon its orthodoxy. Orthodox means in accordance with, or like the Bible. But much of what is called orthodox in these days is directly opposed to the teachings of the Bible, as for instances the two verses spoken of, which are these:

"My spirit pants, like a caged bird,
For space to breathe and grow;
I have the wings of faith and hope,
But I cannot rise and go.

"For the body bars my upward flight,
As the cage the imprisoned bird;
And I must wait for my release
Till God shall speak the word."

—These verses present a false hope of a future life. Now I want our "Young Folks" to try their hand at verse making. And the one who sends us the best two original verses in answer to the above, and setting forth the truly orthodox, or Bible hope of a future life, shall have a present of a book. There must be only two verses.

W. A. C. P. ASSOCIATION NOTICE.

At the next meeting of the Association the following amendments to the Constitution will be offered for consideration and action:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III. Sec. 9, as follows:

Sec. 9. The Board of Trustees (or the Association,) shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to ART. III., Sec. 2. But the person filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of ART. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association;" and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publication Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That ART IV. be amended to read:

ART. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith, and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

Sec. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

Sec. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate; and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

ART. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to ART. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make ART. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least —— months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, that it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

The precise date of the meeting at which these amendments will be considered, has not yet been fixed. It will probably be in March; and may be held in Buchanan.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 14, 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude in the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

IT is asserted that a member of the British Parliament purposes the introduction of a bill to legalize marriages for a limited period. We may be sure that it will never get further than its introduction. But it is one of the signs of the wonderful "progress" of this age that such an event could occur in such a place? Or that a book has been published in London by one who claims, and by many is allowed a place in the very front ranks of the progressionists of the times (we mean M. D. Conway) arguing that marriages should be terminable at any time? Marriage, according to this gentleman, is a relic of our hereditary monastic morality, "and also a grim idol about whom nearly all our social superstitions are entrenched with his blood-reeking altar." These notable positions are taken by individuals. But how many thousands practically endorse them, let these records of the divorce courts testify. Certainly, the world is progressing, but where to?

THE Life Boat revives Holmes' lines, directing when to order an "ascension robe"—which he says is when everybody shall do just right, and everything be just right. We refer to the matter simply to make a note of the fact that the church has so deceived the world in regard to the time of Christ's coming that the opinion prevails almost universally, that righteousness must first prevail throughout the earth, before our King may be expected to appear. Hence in abounding evils of any kind, they see, not a sign of our Lord's return, but of his delay—getting an idea exactly the reverse of what Jesus himself taught. It is easy to scoff and indulge sneers: but these who have put off the day of Jesus' coming, and derided those who have patiently waited for it, will find at last that theirs has been a fatal mistake.

—By the way Holmes says:

"When the first locomotive wheel Rolls through the Hoosac tunnel's bore," then we may expect the end. What if the jest should prove a prophecy? When he wrote, the completion of the Hoosac tunnel, was an exceedingly unlikely event. Now it is in a fair way to be finished in a few years. Most of the people in the world esteem the personal advent of Christ to be an exceedingly improbable event. This opinion, however, will not prevent its occurrence at the time appointed.

THE New York Herald has lately set itself up as a religious paper—especially its Sunday edition. It is not, by a great deal, our ideal of what a religious family journal should be, but it does certainly sometimes tell great truths. For an instance, read the following extracts from a late editorial:

> According to theologians the Christian Church has passed through different periods or epochs in which doctrines, organization, dogmatic assertion and other phases have been more or less prominent. We are now in the secular period of its history, and as one of the results, which must be apparent to the most casual observer, there is far less reverence for the house of God and for the ordinances of the Gospel than existed in other epochs. It is no uncommon thing now to find receptacles for tobacco juice in the pulpits and in the pews of churches of every denomination in the land, or, if not so provided, those places smeared with the filthy compound. Ministers and people enter upon the worship of the great Jehovah with their mouths stuffed with the weed, which they may or may not remove if one or the other is engaged orally in the service of the sanctuary. Those very men would not dare to enter the presence chamber of an earthly sovereign to ask a petition at his hands or to press a claim in any such manner; but this common courtesy is denied to the King of kings in the temples dedicated to his worship. This want of reverence may be the natural and necessary counterpart of the almost adoration which was offered in other ages of the Christian Church and its institutions; but far better would it have been for the Church and for the world, spiritually, had the former continued until now. And in this regard we believe "the former days were better than these."

THE CONFERENCE.

We would remind the friends of the cause in the West, that there is to be an important meeting at Amboy, Ill., commencing Wednesday, March 22. And that there may be no misunderstanding in the matter, we would say beforehand that we wish the friends would come prepared to spend a good portion of the time in the consideration of the condition and wants of the Western field, and prepared to attend to business. There are some who are impatient of the time devoted to business at Conferences. But we think it of importance that our Publishing Association should be placed upon the best possible basis, as regards its relations to the churches, and have the best constitution and by-laws that can possibly be devised in order that it may prosper in its work. The evenings will be devoted to religious worship; and some of the afternoons. The remainder of the time will be occupied in the consideration of measures for the wider and more effective diffusion of the message we proclaim.

Let our brethren who have the cause at heart, arrange to be present, at least as early as Thursday morning. We will look to the Lord for counsel and pray that his Spirit may direct in all things.

BAPTISM.

In a recently published sermon we find the following forcible remarks:

> Visit with me a battle field. All around us—right, left, before, behind—the red sea of battle heaves and roars. But look! By yonder turn in the valley the billow swells highest and reddest. Here seems the mælstrom of the fury—the crucible spot of the fight. Here platoon blends with platoon, bayonet crosses bayonet, breast hurtles against breast. And now another awful shock, fiercest of all; and then above the groan of dying and boom of gun, swells a shout, long, clear, ecstatic: "It is ours!" What is "ours"? A smoke-blackened, shot-riddled, bayonet-rent bit of bunting—as a piece of cloth, nothing; as the national banner, everything. Into that banner are gathered country, and government, and liberty, and constitution, and glory, and fireside, and altar. As a piece of cloth it is nothing; as a SYMBOL it is the consecrated essence of the government it represents.
> Even so it is with baptism. As a mere act, it is nothing but a ceremony; as a mere ordinance, nothing but a command; as a symbol, it is the Gospel of the Nazarene crystalized into formula, or rather vitalized into a conscious, joyous incarnation. Substitute any other banner for it, and you substitute a human device for a Divine—a heresy for a gospel.

Elsewere in his discourse the preacher says:

> But is baptism only a Rite—a Ceremony—an Ordinance? It is more. It is a SYMBOL—a symbol for which there can be no substitution. It was conceived and commanded by Christ as the only thing that could set forth symbolically, 1, the fundamental facts in the gospel scheme of Redemption, viz., the death and resurrection of our Savior; and, 2, the fundamental facts in the spiritual history of the believer, viz., his death to sin and resurrection to a holy life. Change the rite and you abolish the symbolism. Abolish the symbolism, and you have nothing left to set forth and illustrate the grand and vital doctrines of the Christianity of the New Testament. We charge those who change the rite of baptism with trifling most seriously, not with a mere ceremony, but with the very DOCTRINE OF THE GOSPEL OF THE SON OF GOD.

—A fundamental idea of the good news of Jesus Christ, is its promise of life. Not life in any of its theological or mystical senses, but simply life—vital, conscious existence. "I am come that they might have life," said Jesus; and he referred to life in the every day acceptation of the term. The immaterialist cannot see this, because he believes the element of eternal existence is already conferred upon man, and he cannot conceive how even God can bestow that which one has already in possession. He cannot believe that Jesus came simply that so unessential a part of man as the body, should be restored to life; and hence is forced to the conclusion that when Jesus says, again and again, that he has appeared as the Life-giver, that he means giver of happiness, or a condition of life, rather than life itself. He cannot, or does not conceive the great truth, that God's nature will not allow him to bestow immortality upon a being concerning whose ultimate eternal happiness there could be any doubt.

In the case of man, the question was simply whether the whole race should be blotted from existence, or whether some of them should live forever. Their existence must first be secured; and if the gospel did not provide for this, we say it reverently, it would have been a failure. The possibility of a future and eternal life being secured, then the provisions of the gospel for forgiveness of sins, justification and sanctification come in play, and fit the individual for immortality.

When the preacher quoted above declared that in baptism as a symbol "the gospel is crystalized into a formula," he uttered a larger truth than he was himself aware; for baptism not only signifies the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, our own death to sin, and renewal to spiritual life, but it is equally a token of our own resurrection, as the means (the only means) of a future life. For, says Paul, "if the dead rise not, Christ is not raised; and if Christ is not raised, our hope is vain, and the dead in Christ are perished." Future life depends, therefore, upon the resurrection. If we are not to rise, Christ did not rise. If he still remains in the tomb, there is no future life for any one. This reasoning is not just, if the essential part of man lives independently of a resurrection of the dead, sometimes miscalled the resurrection of the body, a term not found in the Scriptures.

These considerations do not derogate or materialize (in a carnal sense) the work of the Savior. All that the immaterialist ascribes to his Lord, we ascribe with him: and beside this we praise him for our lives, also. He is emphatically our all. We can say with the poet:

"How fiercely in the soul of man
Rages this long, this bitter strife;
One party plots his endless death,
One yearns to bring him peace and life."

And it was not until the church began to lose sight of the importance, yea, the absolute necessity of the resurrection, that heretical forms and ideas of baptism began to prevail. The apostles preached Jesus and the resurrection, and burial in baptism. Immaterialism came in; the subject of the resurrection was clouded, and the true meaning of baptism being obscured, the proper form was soon perverted. If the church had not forgotton that "Christ is our life," we should doubtless literally have had but one baptism, and that a burial with Christ.

THE END NEAR.

A correspondent who says "I really think that the world would be better off if they all believed as the Advent Christian does," yet adds, "but I cannot believe that Christ is so soon to come upon earth....Convince me that the end is near, and I will come upon the field of action."

But why not enter the field of action at once? Will you not do your whole duty, unless you can be convinced that the advent is right at hand? It is in doing duty that you will be likely to receive light.

As to convincing one that the advent is near, the first point to be settled is that there will be such an event. There is convincing proof on this point. Jesus said—"I will come again." (Jno. 14: 3.) Paul said—"He will appear the second time." (Heb. 9: 27.) Angels declared this same Jesus should come again in like manner as he was seen to go away from the earth. (Acts ch. 1.)

In these passages nothing is said of the time of his coming. But there is quite clear proof upon this point. We find weighty testimony in Dan. ch. 2. It is contained in an outline sketch of this world's history, given in symbolic prophecy. Babylon is named, Its three great successors—Persia, Greece and Rome are unmistakably delineated. Then a condition of things which commenced in the fifth century, and continues to the present time—a state of the world in which the old Roman empire should be broken up, or divided, and there never again exist a universal earthly empire—is clearly predicted. And next in order, in the days of this division of the earth among constantly coalescing but never firmly uniting governments, the God of heaven was to set up a kingdom filling the whole earth, and destined to stand forever.

If there were no other prophecy, we should feel certain that the end is near, because no further great event is necessary to fill up this clear sketch of the world's history. We only await the appearing and kingdom of Christ, to write across this prophecy—fulfilled.

And when we turn to Daniel's seventh chapter, we find a confirmation of the impression which the story of the symbolic image has made upon our minds. The same four kingdoms are described, the division of the latter, and the rise among the divisions of a peculiar power, unlike all other governments. Its work is briefly sketched; its time measured off; its downfall predicted; its final end synchronized with the coming of the Son of man, and the deliverance of an eternal kingdom, "under the whole heavens," into his hands, and those of his people.

The Papal power has clearly fulfilled the conditions of this prophecy. Not one line in the Scripture negative, is missing in the finished historical picture—except the last item, relating to the end of this "little horn" power. It is now near that end. Therefore "the kingdom of God is nigh at hand."

In this nearly all Bible students are agreed. The main point of difference of opinion is not as to whether we live in "the latter days," but, as to what is the nature of the coming events? The spiritualizing school predict a temporal millennium, and a spiritual reign of Christ. The word of God in its literal, natural sense declares, that the setting up of his literal kingdom, on earth, composed of his redeemed, immortalized saints under the reign of his Son is the event now due. Study these two prophetic lessons candidly in the light of history, and avoid, if you can, the conclusion we have arrived at. Other prophecies mark our position upon the stream of time even more definitely; but we purposely omit allusion to them here, as they would require lengthy historical citations in their support. But every intelligent person knows enough of history to recognize the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy. Their testimony is unmistakable. Were there no other, we should know that we live near the end. And because the day and hour of the day are not revealed, we should one and all watch, lest it come as a thief, and find us sleeping, or in neglect of duty and unready.

ROME IS BABYLON.

In a late essay, Chr. Wordsworth, Bishop of Lincoln, the learned commentator says:

> It was foretold, in these prophecies, as has been already noticed, that some who have been tributaries and vassals of the mystical Babylon, will "tear her flesh, and make her desolate and naked, and burn her with fire." That prophecy has a spiritual meaning. The mystical Babylon is compared to a faithless woman, and her chastisement is likened to that which was inflicted on Hebrew women for harlotry. They who were once her votaries will tear the flesh of her who once enchanted them with her charms. It is added that they will "burn her with fire;" this is also a figurative phrase; and its meaning is that, as, among the Hebrews, unchaste women were burnt, so the mystical Babylon will be punished, and her glory will be consumed for her sins, as with fire. I do not venture to express a confident opinion, whether the present occupation of Rome by the arms of Victor Emmanuel, and the destruction of the Temporal Power of the Papacy by the people of Italy, including the Romans themselves, and by the sovereign of Italy at the invitation of the Romans themselves, is a fulfilment of the prophecy: but it seems to be an approach towards it. Time will show. The capture of the literal Babylon by Cyrus was not the total destruction of Babylon, it was the transfer of its sovereignty from the Babylonians to the Medes and Persians.

And then proceeds to note another face:

> The Papacy is now using its spiritual weapons against those who are taking possession of its temporalities. It wields against them the thunder of Excommunication; and it threatens to lay the Kingdom of Italy under an Interdict. But let the Papacy be reminded, that in former times for six centuries—it used its spiritual weapons in order to deprive others of their temporalities, Pope Gregory VII. used them to dethrone the Emperor of Germany, Henry IV.; Pope Innocent III. used them to dethrone the Emperor Otho and King John of England. Popes Honorius III., Gregory IX., and Innocent IV. used them to deprive Frederick II. of his dominions. Pope Paul III. used them to dethrone our Henry VIII. Pope Pius V. (canonized as a Saint) and Gregory XIII. used them to depose Queen Elizabeth. Urban VIII. used them against our King Charles I. And even at the present day, the Church of Rome eulogizes Pope Gregory VII. in her Breviary, whom she has canonized as a saint, because he "deprived the Emperor Henry IV. of his Kingdom, and released his subjects from their oaths of allegiance to him." We are no advocates of aggression, or apologists of spoliation, but we cannot fail to remark that it is written in the Apocalypse concerning the mystical Babylon. "Her sins have reached unto heaven" (did they not reach to heaven when the Pope proclaimed himself to be infallible? did they not then come to a head? and is it surprising that the cup of God's wrath should now overflow upon her?), "and God hath remembered her iniquities; reward her, even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works; in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double." And we cannot but observe the evidence which is now displayed to the world, that God is a righteous Judge, that he is the moral Governor of the world, and Arbiter of the destinies of nations, and that, after long forbearance, he punishes churches and empires in a manner proportioned to their sins; and that the prophecies of the Apocalypse are true.

TIME OF THE END.

This is a phrase used by Daniel, in a prophecy relating to the end of this world. The phrase conveys a definite idea to the mind, that of a period marked by some definite event or events, close by and reaching to the end itself. The events marking this period are the unsealing of the vision in which it is named and a notable and free search into related subjects, and a corresponding increase of knowledge. These items mark a period of toleration—not limited, but general. Where in the history of the past, if it has yet occurred, is this period of universal toleration, with its remarkable increase of knowledge, to be found. There can be but one answer—it is within the last one hundred years. Nation after nation has thrown off the yoke of bigotry, and recognized the rights of conscience, and the liberty of every man to worship, or not, according to its dictates. And just in proportion as the principle of toleration has spread, has general intelligence increased. In the freest lands the searching or "running to and fro" in every department of knowledge has been so wonderful as to cause universal remark. And while knowledge has increased in all its departments, it is true that there never shone such light from and upon the Scriptures as at the present time.

This, then, is the time of the end. What comes next? There is but one answer to this question. It is the end itself. Are you ready?

Marriage as a Typical C[illegible] ewish Life.

The conspic[illegible] ous [illegible] around which customs a[illegible] d [illegible] odes of being cluster, are for [illegible] ms five. Marriage, which is the [illegible] of social life; birth, which is the source of natural life; conversion, which is the fount of spiritual life; death, which is the negative of all life; and resurrection which is the center of eternal life. I put marriage first, because all births should come after it according to the Holy Scriptures. I do not intend to enter fully into all the particulars of the Jewish marriage, but as I have seen them in Damascus I shall mention a few of the more interesting parts of the ceremony, especially such as illustrate the references to it in the Holy Scripture.

1. As in the days of old the Jews betroth their children when very young, and marry them in the East from the age of twelve years. This betrothing is universal among the Jews, and it is adopted by the Germans and other Continental nations as a proper Scriptural custom (Ex. 21: 8; 22; 16; Deut. 20: 7; 22; 23.) It was consecrated by the Lord himself to show his relations to the holy nation (Hos. 2: 19; 20; or this may be future) and to typify the condition of the Christian church until the coming of the Lord, which is the marriage of the Lamb, which is the year of creation's jubilee, which is the resurrection of the just, which is the regeneration, which is the restitution of all things, which is the times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. (Acts 3: 20—22.

2. Among the Eastern Jews it is customary for the bridegroom to give presents, and not seldom to purchase the bride for a stipulated sum of money, so that even this strange custom, so contrary to our notions, but common to almost all nations in former times, it taken to illustrate the redeeming love of Christ, the heavenly Bridegroom, who has chosen his bride, the church, from among men and purchased her with the price of his precious blood.

3. The time between the betrothment and the marriage is a period of waiting and expectation, corresponding to the position of the church in the absence of the Lord, waiting, hoping, praying for and hasting unto the day of his appearing.

4. The love of children among the Jews, as indeed among all Orientals, is boundless and ineradicable. You cannot, if a physician, pass through the East without being frequently applied to for medicine, or recipes, or charms to procure children, which is certainly not so sinful as the practice in the enlightened West of destroying them. "Give me children, or I die; now will my husband love me, for I have born him two sons." The same feeling is expressed in Jephtha's daughter bewailing her virginity, and yet, strange to say, the orient is the place above all others where population is declining, and, as Baron Bunsen quaintly observed, "Turkey is perishing for the want of Turks." One reason of this I conceive to be early marriages, which necessarily debilitate the mothers and produce weak unhealthy children. Only think of the state of the families where girls become mothers at eleven, grandmothers at twenty-two, and past child-bearing at thirty.

5. And now, having stated these preliminaries, let us proceed to the marriage. Suppose yourself in my house in Damascus, the marriage to be that of a respectable Jew, and the hour for going to the wedding arrived. Come, and I will be your guide through the ancient city of Damascus, and you can note several characteristics of Orientalism as we now pass. "How narrow and crooked are these streets!" Yes, in many cases two horses cannot pass, but the narrowness is useful to ward off the sun, and broad streets are necessary only where wheeled vehicles are in use. Here there are none. "How ugly and black the houses!" Yes, you see no fine fronts, no brilliant windows, no splendid porticoes facing the streets All the elegance is within, and the doors and windows open upon an inner court ornamented with vines, oranges, weeping willows, and fountains of water. A variegated marble pavement receives your slippers, flowers of the richest Oriental beauty meet your eye, and the ear is enchanted with the sweet singing of birds. Many of these shapeless masses which the eye of the passenger looks upon are internally fitted up with the greatest splendor, and carry your thoughts back to the paradise of Eden. But let us make haste to the wedding. "What is this?" cried my friend as he looked a little to the left where the street was somewhat broader. That is a dead camel; it fell down under its burden to die, and it lies where it fell. These fifty dogs, which you see on it and in it, together with the heat of the sun, render the carcass innocuous in a few hours. "But here is another gathering of dogs!" Yes, it is a butcher killing a sheep, which he does on the open street surrounded by a number of lank hungry dogs waiting for their prey. He takes what is required for human consumption, and in five minutes all the garbage is devoured. Dogs, dogs, dogs! every corner is filled with them, and no one molests them; they are simply unclean, and enjoy the privilege of passive toleration; and as they never are allowed to enter the houses, may illustrate the awful text in the Apocalypse, "Without are dogs." "But what goes on yonder in the broad opening before the famous mosk formerly the church of Saint John?" My friend, you are fortunate, as it is not every day you can see, even in the holy city of Damascus, such a spectacle. It is a sheik, a saint of the Moslem kind; he rides a fine charger, which, in the midst of the dense multitude, is quiet as a lamb. You see the exertions of the saint, his hand and head are moving; his mouth and beard are covered with foam, and that cry which you hear perpetually repeated, and without the least variation, is "Allah," "Allah," Allah!" "God," "God," "God!" and the multitudes that surge round him are receiving his blessing and the forgiveness of sins, as the Romans do from the Pope at the Vatican. But look at the sea of heads! These green turbans are the nobility of the East, the descendants of the prophet; the white are the Moslems, the true believers; the grey are the Christian dogs; and the black are the Jewish swine. But come on, or we will be late for the wedding. "But no! see here! what is that under that tree? Is such an abomination permitted?" Yes, my friend, it is permitted, and that human brute naked as the hour he was born, covered with filth, sleeping in the open air, hairy and squalid as an Ourang-Outang, is a holy man, a saint of the highest order, who walks into the houses, does what he pleases, takes what he pleases, eats and drinks what he pleases, asks no permission, and nobody either forbids or rebukes him! He is a holy Fakeer and everything in the Moslem world is at his command. "But do you hear that shout?" These four or five hundred fanatics that are meeting us are the followers of the holy man. He is their leader and prophet who goes at the head of them, and that fierce shout which they repeat by the space of two hours is, "God is one, and we are his children." "God is one, and we are his children." Keep to the right and let them pass, for they are among the most furious enthusiasts of the Moslem creed. Here now we are coming to the bazaars, but look to the left and you see the street which is called "Straight." (Acts 9: 11.) These bazaars, unlike the inhabited parts of the city, are straight, and many of them elegant, but infinitely inferior to those of Constantinople, which are in fact one of the chief sights of that queen of the East. Every trade has its bazaar—this one is occupied by carpenters, that by shoemakers, another by silk merchants, another by tailors; all these trades and merchants are busy at their work in the open-air, and these white shapeless forms which are chaffering with the merchants about jewels, ribbons, and lace are the veiled beauties of the Harem, into which at present we cannot enter, and so we proceed on our way.

Here we are at the bridegroom's house, and met by more than the hundred thousand welcomes of the warm-hearted Irishman. Lay your shoes there at the threshold, and enter; sweetmeats and sugar-water are immediately presented; hands are refreshed and handkerchiefs sprinkled with sweet-smelling essences, and we take our place on the divans that encircle the chamber. The company is now assembled, and the Rabbi begins by prayers, in which the Jews present join him in a kind of liturgical service. They have on their praying cloaks, and the appearance of the company is serious, save when they repeat the form, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty." They give three steps or jumps forward at the three repetitions of "Holy," to signify that they desire to make progress in sanctification. This custom to a stranger has a singular effect, and leads more to ridicule than holy feeling. However, it may be, and I hope it is, different with the Jews. The prayers are now over, and the procession is formed, which increases in numbers every moment. till we arrive at the bride's house. Just as we approach, the bride and her companions move towards the door to meet us, and the shrill, wild, heaven-piercing shout of "Ho zarageet!" salutes it. It is the midnight cry of the virgins (Matt. 25): "Behold the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." The marriage ceremony is now performed by the Rabbi, who reads certain passages, and also the marriage contract in the presence of the assembly as witnesses. The bride, deeply veiled, is seated upon a high chair, or throne, surrounded by her maidens (the virgins, her companions), with her head bent down, waiting the event. The bridegroom now approaches, she rises from her seat, they bend their heads towards each other, and a veil is thrown over both. He then puts a ring on her finger, repeating with an audible voice: "With this ring I consecrate thee to myself according to the custom of Moses and the children of Israel." This is the material part of the service. The Rabbi then takes wine, pours it into a glass as an emblem of the joyous occasion, drinks, and then hands it round to the guests; after which he throws down the glass and breaks it to pieces. This latter act has a double signification, indicating virginitas franganda, or, as others think, reminding the guests even on their most joyous occasions, that Jerusalem is in ruins, and that their gladness should be tempered with sorrow.

How full of meaning are all these Jewish customs, and how delightful to trace in them the church's relations to the Lord and King! He is the Bridegroom and she is the second Eve for the second Adam, taken from his bleeding side, and with him to be placed in the paradise of God! Pentecost was the espousals, the advent is the marriage, and the period between is the time of hope, and expectation, and patient waiting for the Bridegroom. The procession leaves the heavenly gate, and the bride at the midnight cry goes out to meet the bridegroom, and the joyous union takes place in the aerial heavens (1 Cor. 15: 51; 1 Thes. 4: 13–18: Luke 17: 34), where the bridal party is formed (the gathering—episunagoge; (2 Thes. 2: 1; Mat. 24: 31) before coming in glory and majesty with the holy angels to take possession of the kingdom which was prepared for her from the foundation of the world, and purchased by the blood of her redeeming King. The marriage takes place at night; and it is the dark hour of midnight, when there is hardly any faith on the earth, when Christendom is Sodom, and the earth ready for a deluge of fire, and Antichrist ruling the world—there at that dark midnight hour the Bridegroom comes! When even the wise are asleep, most lamps are gone out, and all are flickering in their sockets, when the son of perdition sits in the temple of God, and the bottomless pit is opening for the Dragon and the lake of fire flaming for the beast and the false prophet (Rev. 19: 20), and Babylon, the great, the mother of harlots, ready, like a millstone, to be cast into the sea (Rev. 18: 21); then the Lord comes! the Bridegroom becomes the husband, the Bride the married wife, and the royal family of creation are formed, the kings and priests of God and of Christ, who are to rule in him, and with him, and for him, over all things forever. This is the marriage of the Lamb: this is the victory of the saints; this is the doom of Antichrist; this is the dethronement of the devil; this is the sabbatical rest; the long promised jubilee of the world. Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh! Let us join in chorus with the jubilant creation (Rev. 19. 1; Psalms 96: 98) in singing to his glorious name.

Or let us take a draft of melody from the noblest and holiest of our Christian poets, the godly Cowper, who turned the whole current of our poetic literature from the stiff formal rules of art to the free harmonious majesty of nature. Let us breathe out together the prayer of the pious Calvinist in these harmonious words.

"Come, then, and added to thy many crowns,
Receive yet one, the crown of all the earth,
Thou who alone art worthy! It was thine
By ancient covenant, ere nature's birth;
And thou hast made it thine by purchase since,
And overpaid its value with thy blood.
Thy saints proclaim thee King; and in their hearts
Thy title is engraven with a pen
Dipped in the fountain of eternal love—
Thy saints proclaim thee King; and thy delay
Give courage to their foes, who, could they see
The dawn of thy last advent, long desired,
Would creep into the bowels of the hills,
And flee for safety to the falling rocks."

But this and all that has been written on the coming of the Lord, and the marriage of the Lamb, by human genius, come far short of the psalms of David, the anthems of the Old Testament prophets, and the majestic symbols of the Apocalypse.

But let us return to sober prose, and the typical truths contained in the Jewish marriage.

1. The Bridegroom and Bride are Christ and his redeemed church.

2. The espousals or bethrothment is the Pentecost effusion of the Spirit to gain the Bride's consent.

3. The period of waiting between the espousals and the marriage denotes the position of the church from Pentecost till the advent.

4. The bridegroom going forth to claim the bride is the coming of the Lord to take his church to himself.

5. The bride going out to meet him shows the rapture of the saints and their joining his train in the air,

6. The night season, when the marriage takes place, denotes the apostasy of the church as it was in the days of Noah and Lot.

7. The lamps and torches that accompany the marriage procession, represent the flaming fire in which the Lord comes to take vengeance on the apostasy and glorify his saints.

8. The marriage contract represents the title-deeds of the covenant of redemption by which the heirs and the inheritance are forever made his.

9. The marriage is the most joyful event in human life, and the coming of Christ is the hope of the church, and the jubilee of the whole creation.

10. One of the purposes of marriage is according to the original decree and will of God, "to increase, and multiply, and replenish the earth;" and the coming of the Lord which is the marriage of the Lamb, is the regeneration (Mat. 19: 28), the restoration of all things (Acts 3: 19–22), the time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord (Acts 3: 21), when nations shall be born in a day, and the earth filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters over the sea. (Is. 11: 9.) Thus do we see how, in the method of God's revelation, he has incorporated into the substance of human life a mighty system of typification by which the earth becomes the index of the heavenly, and we are directly led on step by step into higher and higher regions of divine intelligence and wisdom. As the Son of Man before and after baptism was the same person; as Judaism and Christianity are the one heir, though in very different conditions (Gal. 4: 1–5); as Moses with the veil off is Christ, and Christ with the veil on is Moses; as the Old and New Testaments can no more be separated than the body and the spirit of a living man, even so in the heart of a devout Christian, birth and marriage, house and family, food and raiment, and all the institutions of this mortal life, can never be separated from their antitypes, which give them their beauty and significance. In this way, history, science, society, nationality, human life in general, becomes luminous, and grace leads us from nature up to nature's God. Jesus, the Incarnate Son of God, becomes the center of all things to the reflective mind, and in him, and from him, all earthly things take their significance and glory.—Rainbow.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

At the late session of the New York Conference at Brockport, there was a large attendance, and a good spirit prevailed throughout. It was voted to have a campmeeting in connection with the Annual Meeting, sometime in June. A Committee of seven will meet in Rochester, May 1, to make arrangements. It is probable that the Conference territory will be districted for Quarterly Meetings.——Br. Hook commends C. W. Rathburn of Rhode Island, formerly of the Methodist church as now a worthy preacher of the truths we advocate. We are glad of new recruits. We need many more.

AN IMPORTANT PROPOSITION.

The book entitled The Doctrine of Immortality, by Eld. James H. Whitmore, has been before the public long enough to establish its character as one of the very best works, if indeed it be not the best, yet written upon that subject. Its merits and efficacy are acknowledged wherever it is read.

It deals with one of the most important theological questions of the age. And our hearts have of late been stirred within us while we have beheld the church, and the world, too, almost wholly given to immaterialism. The children imbibe it, not only at Sunday School, but in the common schools. It is sung, prayed, talked, preached, written, so incessantly, that people generally take it for granted that it is true: but it is not true.

In every community there are some who will candidly consider the testimony against immaterialism, if they have the opportunity. We shall never gain all in any place; b[illegible] there are few places where we may not convince some. Ministers cannot do all the work, though they are doing nobly and doing much. Our proposition is, in addition to our ordinary tract work, to print so[illegible] as many as possible, of and send them out preaching [illegible] the nature and destiny of ma[illegible] is the[illegible] us to work, and work in earn[illegible]

Our proposition is this. We will get out an edition of this work in c[illegible], yet good and durable shape, so that it [illegible] likely to be preserved, and will bear han[illegible] g; for we wish them to be circulated and read. This edition will be published especially for distribution, and the price be such that every Adventist can afford to give away at least [illegible] copy.

PROPOSED PRICES.

Five copies	$ 1
Thirty copies	5.0
One Hundred copies	16.0

☞ No money to be paid until the books are ready for delivery.

We will commence printing the edition as soon as subscriptions for one thousand copies are received. As soon as it is ready, subscribers will be notified, and the books will be forwarded to their order, on receipt of their subscriptions. But send no money until it is announced that the edition is ready.

Friends of the truth of God, one and all, will you engage in this timely work? Will you respond to this call immediately, and shall our press, soon be set at work throwing off the sheets laden with this great truth? we await your reply. Send us word by the returning mail, how many copies you will take, from five upwards. Look about you, think of any who may be open to conviction, but are not interested enough to pay 50c, or $1.00 for the book in its present form, but who would read it if given to them. Make up your mind to supply as many of them with it as you can.

Brethren in neighborhoods and churches, When you assemble in your meetings, unite your subscription, and send them all in one name, and so get them cheaper, and more of them for your various fields. What [illegible] we should see if ten thousand copies could be scattered within a few months. Yet that number would be only two copies and a half to each of our subscribers.

Send in your subscriptions.

THE

ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES,

A large, neat, eight-page weekly paper, thoroughly devoted to the advancement of the cause of Christ by the faithful advocacy, defence and dissemination of what is called Advent doctrine,

EDITED BY

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

The Times contains, weekly, matter expository, exegetical, illustrative, practical; including communications, selections and original matter, with letters from those of like precious faith in all parts of the country, the news of the body, and a faithful digest of the news of the world bearing upon the signs of the times; with news of the progress of our cause in different parts, and also news of what our opponents are saying and doing, with expositions and refutations of their arguments; articles on prophecy; notices of current and useful literature; short sermons; a column or more for the children; choice bits of poetry—in short matter enough in every number to make a good sized book, and all furnished for only FOUR CENTS A WEEK, or $2 a year. No paper of its class furnishes so much reading matter, even when a greater price is charged.

The paper has been very useful in the past, and can be made more so by extending its circulation. To our friends who are working faithfully for this end, we make the following offer: We will send

THE TIMES, POST PAID,

to any address in the United States or Canada, on trial,

FOR THREE MONTHS,

for 35c. For one dollar, we will send THE TIMES to any three persons, three months, post paid; and any larger number at the same rate.

Who will take advantage of this liberal offer, to introduce THE TIMES in a village, a neighborhood, a church. For

TEN DOLLARS

you can send a live Advent paper to

THIRTY PERSONS

or into thirty families, post-paid, for three months. Could it fail to do good? Five dollars will pay for fifteen copies, and one dollar for three.

We make this liberal offer solely to introduce the paper in new fields and localities.

Will the ministry please publish it to their congregations?

Will our friends please tell it to their friends.

Will you who love the cause and wish THE TIMES to prosper, pay for 3, 5, 10, 50, or 100 copies, on these liberal terms. We have now 300 names, of partially interested persons among whom we could obtain perhaps more, could we send them the paper free for three months.

FIFTY PERMANENT SUBSCRIBERS,

Who will send at once? Send in the names, with 33⅓ cents for each name, and (if you give the P. O. address plainly) we will guarantee the delivery of thirteen numbers of THE TIMES, free of postage, to each one of them.

Three thousand three months subscribers, on this plan, will give us a large and permanent addition to our list.

Address, JOSHUA V. HIMES,

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

Saturday, Feb. 25. To-night spoke on the kingdom of God, showing it to be literal, and located on the earth, and under the whole heavens. Jesus Christ, the seed of Abraham, and of David, is the heir to the throne. He is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords. And he is very soon to destroy all the kingdoms of this terrene state, and fix on earth his heavenly throne. And who will not pray, "Thy kingdom come!"

Many questions were asked at the close. One minister asked if I believed that man in death was entirely unconscious. I said certainly. Well then, how do you account for Paul saying that he did not know whether he was in the body, or out of the body. 2 Cor. 12: 1-3. I replied that Paul was not dead. That he had a vision, and did not know whether he had it in a dream, or whether it was in his natural, normal state. If he had been out of the body then he would have been dead. But he did not die. He simply had a vision.

Sabbath, Feb. 26. I attended the Disciple church this a. m. in the chapel where I had spoken all the week. The pastor preached on prayer, and said many good things. As usual with this people, they closed with the communion which I enjoyed much.

At night I spoke in the Presbyterian house, on future punishment. I showed that men were not punished in sheol, nor in hades, both meaning the grave; but in gehenna, where they will be burned up root and branch, they are not to be kept in being to suffer endless torment according to popular theology. This last view as held and preached by the orthodox clergy of the land is unscriptural, and irrational, and reflects the highest dishonor upon God, who is love itself.

Monday, Feb. 27. I re-read to-day Eld. Geo. Thomson's review of a work published by the "American Tract Society," entitled Who Are Sadducees? or truth vindicated. Being a review of "The wicked not annihilated, or Modern Sadduceeism refuted by Israel P. Warren." I think Br. Thomson has done a good work, in this review, for which he will have the thanks of those of our brethren who read it. It was needed. I have often met with Mr. Warren's work, and have felt that a brief review of it was needed. It is an insidious thing, but only required a brief exposure of its fallacies. And this Br. Thomson has given. I hope that brethren and sisters will remember Br. T. and help him circulate this work. You can get copies by addressing Eld. Geo. Thomson, Attica, Wis.

Tuesday, Feb. 28. I have conversed with many to-day on religious topics, some of whom have attended my lectures, and say that for the first time they have become interested in the Bible. The view generally given of the character and government of God, in the eternal suffering of the lost they could never believe, and so rejected the Bible altogether, supposing that the Bible taught the doctrine. Now they receive the book as the word of God, and can love its Author.

I had a talk with a minister on the destiny of the wicked. He believes that the rich man is down under-ground, somewhere, crying for a drop of water yet. And that the dying thief went direct to paradise with Christ on the day of the crucifixion. But Jesus died that day while the thief did not. And the Savior said to Mary three days after, that he had not yet ascended. He also thought that Paul's soul could be out of his body absolutely, and yet Paul not dead. I have sometimes thought it was a waste of time to talk to teachers of this stamp. I told him I thought he was befogged, and his theology belonged to another age.

At night I spoke in Roundy's Hall, which is large and comfortable. We shall have the remainder of our meetings here. We have had meetings in the Presbyterian and the Disciple chapels, but have been interrupted to the injury of the interest. But are grateful to the churches for the use of their houses of worship.

I took up the subject of future punishment, as taught by Christ. Matt. 3: 12; 5: 29, 30; 7: 13, 14; 10: 28; 13: 30, 42; Mk. 9: 43-48, with Is. 66: 24, in explanation; Lk. 9: 24, 25; 12: 25. In all these passages we have the nature of the punishment of the wicked clearly stated. It is destruction or death, and not eternal torment.

Wednesday, March 1. I see by the papers to-day that France is finally crushed before her invader. Is there not a cause for this? France has sinned, and brought ruin upon herself. Besides her general immoralities, she has added to her guilt by "worshiping the beast," or sustaining the Papal power after the judgment began to sit upon it. (Dan. 7: 26.) The proclamation of the sitting of this judgment by the angel flying in the midst of heaven (Rev. 14: 6, 7), was connected with a solemn warning that those who should worship the beast after this, "should drink of the wine of the wrath of God, poured out without mixture." France sustained the Papacy by crushing the Roman Republic in 1848-9, and replacing the Pope in Rome. She then gave her support to the Roman Pontiff, and furnished a standing army in Rome for the protection of the so-called head of the church, and his temporal power and dominion, contrary to the warning, that if any should worship or give their support to the beast, the wrath, or displeasure of God should be poured upon them. And the Word of God has been signally fulfilled in the desolations of France, as has before been the case in other countries.

To-night I finished a course of four lectures on the destiny of the lost, showing that it would not be eternal life in woe, but absolute extinction of being, or as Conybeare, translates 2 Thes. 1: 10—"Then shall there go forth against them from the presence of the Lord, and from the brightness of his glorious majesty, their righteous doom, even an EVERLASTING DESTRUCTION."

Thursday, March 2. We have in town some very intelligent Jews. They belong to "the Radicals." They are not strict in keeping the Sabbath with some other institutions of Moses. They have outgrown them. One of these Jews handed me The Israelite, to-day, the organ of this branch of the Jewish family in the United States. I find, in it, the official report of the American Hebrews," in which they say, they have the utmost attachment to, and reverence for the constitution of the United States, and a desire to commend this country and its laws to the Hebrew people throughout the world as their true New Jerusalem. And that the prophesied return to Palestine is allegorical.

Friday, March 3. Have had interesting conversations with many who have been enlightened on the Word of God respecting the future destiny of both saints and sinners. They feel greatly blessed in the new view they have of God's government; in that they now see that he is not to punish men with eternal misery, but ETERNAL DEATH. They now see and enjoy God as the God of love.

This view of the character and government of God, is gaining ground in this country and in Europe. I have been much interested in the views of a learned and popular divine in Germany —Dr. Richard Rothe. He is said to be the foremost theologian in Germany, and enjoys the respect and esteem, of all who know him, and is, withal, an humble Christian. He shows how God seeks to save the sinner by turning him from his sin. If this fails, he says:

"But penal retribution cannot enforce the attainment of its primary object with reference to the sinner: viz: his separation from sin, or his amendment. By means of his power of self-determination the sinner is able to harden himself against it. Yet he cannot thus annul or frustrate the Divine punishment, but by so doing he gives it a changed direction. Divine penalty is essentially Divine negation of sin, Divine reaction against it; and, as Divine, simply absolute. It cannot relax until it has actually removed the sin. If the sinner does not separate himself from the sin, if he identifies himself with it finally, then the punishment is directed against himself, and fulfills the Divine judgment upon sin in himself, by the abolishing of his own being. For evil must be done away absolutely, as certainly as it is opposed to God, at whatever cost. If the sinner will not cease from it, then must he share its doom. Successfully mock God in his defiance, he cannot. Thus Divine retribution results at last in the annihilation of the sinner; even by means of the evil impending over him, as consequence of his sin, through and in it the Divine punishment culminates. This annihilation of the sinner—this death in the New Testament sense—is accordingly the final aim of the Divine punishment; and the necessary final result, lying in its very idea of sin consistently and completely fulfilling itself. ....If punishment is executed completely, then its consequence is even the annihilation of the sinner himself. As punishment, that is, when it remains punishment and is not removed by forgiveness, it ever ends with the death of the sinner in this sense." (Theological Ethics, vol. 2, p. 195.)

At night I expounded those texts which are claimed as teaching the conscious intermediate state, showing, that their true meaning does not favor that view.

From Geo. W. Wyllys, Dustin, Ill.

Our little Church in this place is almost broken up, as the most have removed, and there are so few of us that we cannot sustain preaching. Br. Burington has been trying to get up an interest, but there is quite a spirit of opposition in this place. Br. Burr came and labored with us for two or three evenings faithfully. Then Br. Mabey come for a few days, and the Lord seemed to be with us. Br. Burington continued on for a few evenings, but there seemed to be an element working against us, and the meeting stopped. Still we feel to put our trust in the Lord. My health is very poor, and I am deprived of meetings; but I have a fixed principle, and I feel resolved with the asistance of my heavenly Father to shun the tide of opposition, that I may at last inherit the kingdom. Pray for us, that our faith fail not; that when Jesus comes we may all be prepared to enter in through the gates of the New Jeruslem.

From Eliza Lewis, Ottawa Co. Mich.

In reading over the last paper, I was thinking of the part I like the best. And I found that I liked the "Letters and Extracts" the best. And it does my soul good to read the cheering letters from the brethren and sisters scattered all over the land. We came here the latter part of July and like the place very much. It is a nice little town. The only objection is that there are no Adventists around here, with the exception of one family. We cannot tell how we miss the blessed gatherings we used to enjoy in Chicago, and the society of brethren and sisters of like precious faith. We do long to hear the word preached in its purity. We attend the Baptist and Methodist meetings sometimes; but it makes my heart ache to hear the blessed word of God perverted. I am doing all I can to help on the cause of truth by way of scattering books and tracts, and we are trying to keep our lamps trimmed and burning, and be ready to go to the marriage supper of the Lamb. I wish you could arrange to come this way and hold a series of meetings. I think there might be much good done. The people seem willing to listen to the truth. My prayer to God is that we may be the means in the hands of the Lord of sowing seed that will bring forth fruit to his honor and glory. And may we be faithful till Jesus comes, and hear at last the welcome,—"Come ye blessed of my father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

[You must try to visit the church in Hesperia, sometime. It is about twenty-two miles from you. Ed.

From Joseph'ne Lowry, Ham'lton Co. O.

We can hardly keep house without The Times, it is so full of the Divine messages of truth, as combined in the precious Word of God, and applied to our every day wants and needs. We hear so many sermons now-a-days that make one feel more hungry for the truth, instead of in any way satisfying the soul—not the immortal soul, but the mortal. We are just beginning to study for ourselves, instead of letting the minister do it all for us. We have been taught by them that we had not time to read and understand, but I believe we should have no more important study than that which treats of our future existence. I can never be thankful enough to Dr. Tibbets, who first gave me the idea that to have immortal life I must seek for it. I had always supposed, that I had that as a gift from God with my physical being; and to keep that spark of immortality in a happy state was my study. But not so does the Bible teach, but that the "gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." I am glad that I see this as it is; and I would that every one who is diligently seeking after truth, should see it as plainly as I do.

From Thos. B Lunsford, Saint Mary's, Mo.

For sometime I have been isolated from any of the brethren holding the great truths of the Bible, and I have felt lonesome for a few months. I left St. Louis sometime last fall, thinking that my little boy might get his health (which at, this present time seems to gain very fast; for which wife and I feel to thank the Lord) I want to say that here is a good place for one of the preaching brethren to do good in South East Missouri. People seem willing to hear the truth and study the Bible. I am reading the Bible testimony for some of them concerning the time of reward, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal life only in Christ Jesus. The people are casting away their fireside theories for the plain truth; and the idea of reward at death is repudiated by some. I shall start a Bible class this week, if the Lord will. The essay on private judgment in the Advent Minstrel is creating an excitement. The people love it. I wish I had some copies to hand around. They would do much good, and would certainly abate a great deal of prejudice. I have not been here very long. It is a River Town, of about 200 to 250 inhabitants, beautiful for situation, good farming country back, healthy location, and is about seventy miles from St. Louis.

I have not had a copy, of The Times for several months, only the old ones I have on file. I am reading them over, and lending them out to neighbors. They like them very much.

From D D Chaffee, Wilbraham, Mass. Feb. 1.

The Congregational minister here gave out an appointment for a "Praise meeting" to be held at his church two weeks ago last evening, but some of the leading members objected, for fear of injuring the house. So it had to be given up notwithstanding many gathered.

Last evening a Union Praise meeting was held at the Methodist house. After the whole congregation had sung "Watchman tell us of the night," the leader asked the watchmen (ministers), to make remarks upon these words. They both made remarks, but did not lisp a word about the subject sung of. I could but think how nicely Is. 56: 10, applied here. "His watchmen are blind: they are all ignorant, they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber. They are shepherds that cannot understand: they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter." Who ever heard these watchmen tell about the time of the night. Echo answers, Who? But one of them did remark on that occasion that the term "praise" occurred 234 times in the Bible, and we might learn the importance of a subject by the number of times it occurred in the Scriptures. Ah! thought I, that will account for this tenacity of the doctrine of the natural immortality of man. The great frequency with which he finds the subject mentioned in the Bible!! judging from his silence on the resurrection, I should conclude he did not find it often enough to give it any importance whatever. And from the importance he makes of the subject of going to heaven at death, I should judge he could count its mention in hundreds of places. And so of other subjects; the more frequent the less prominence, and the less frequent the more prominence, did he give them.

From H H Bliss, Buda, Ill.

To write to you seems very much like writing to the moon, for you may be about as far off; but as you have a conscious heart that beats at home all the while, a word may not be lost.

When you are sailing over this western world on your practical wings of faith, I wish you would alight and fan us with your wings, and teach us that we may soar aloft above the quicksands and snares that fasten us so close to earth. I feel conscious that we are living in the last days—That the prophecies, or promises of God, to this world of probation, have nearly all been fulfilled; and that, that fulfillment, so minute, is a perfect demonstration that the rest will be fulfilled; that there is no hope that this world will grow better, but on the contrary, worse and worse: that it is the duty and privilege of the Lord's children not only to cease from the longings for the riches, honors and pleasures of this proud, rebellious, perishing world, but that they should come out from all its abominations, showing themselves pilgrims and strangers; looking and longing for a resting place that is peaceful, triumphant and glorious, and, standing upon the sure rock of ages, "rejoicing always." The dangers before our friends and fellow-men who are out of Christ, are terribly deceptive and destructive, and our lives, which have been bought by the precious blood of Christ, are not our own, but his, and should be spent in his service, laboring, suffering and pleading, while constantly pressing "toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

I say I am conscious of all this, and when I look at my inactivity, my apparent indifference, I am a wonder to myself! The Lord helping me I will be more active. Cheered by your constant labors, in feebleness, amidst difficulties that most all strong men shrink from, I subscribe myself your brother in Christ.

From C H Sawin, Worcester, Mass Feb. 11.

Please accept one more Christian salutation. Says the apostle—"It is good always to be zealously affected in a good thing." All our good brethren in Worcester seem bound to one place —the heavenly Canaan—where they all hope soon to arrive. Home, sweet home! how good it sounds! It never seemed better to me than at the present time. The prospect, indeed, looks cheering, when a Bible view is taken of the signs of the times. They show conclusively that Christ's coming cannot be a far future event. These signs are ominous of the speedy coming of the great Arbitrator and Dictator of the battle of the great day. Let us rejoice, singing, "Fly swifter round ye wheels of time, and bring the welcome day." Human suffering caused by the recent wars, as it has been in all ages, brings into the field a large amount of Christian labor. Joy go with the laborers. I hope every one will see their duty. Hope animates us, and may the witness of the Spirit comfort us concerning our hope. It appears to me we may be living in the winding up scenes of the history of the false prophet, mentioned in Rev. 16: 13, as one of "the three unclean spirits that go forth unto the kings of the earth, and the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. May we all be ready and keep in that happy condition until the new heavens and new earth appear.

Brief Extracts.

Br. L. Z. Lotsfriech, Wayne Co., Iowa, says: We are still strong in the faith, looking and wishing for the appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ to restore this world to its Eden state, number up its jewels, reward his servants the prophets, and saints and them that fear his name small and great, and to destroy them that corrupt the earth. We are keeping up a prayer and social meeting at private houses. Our number is small, but we hope that it may be increased and that others may begin to seek for glory, honor and immortality. Our life is hid with Christ in God, and when Christ who is our life shall appear we also shall appear with him in glory. It is a great consolation to me to know that my life is in such good hands. I have no doubt but that I shall receive it in due time, if I am only faithful to the end.————S. Baldwin, Wayne Co. Iowa: I have been holding meetings in a little town called Bethlehem. Preached twenty-four evenings. Used the School-house a few times, but it was soon found to be too small. The Methodist people then very kindly gave us the use of their house. The people are intelligent, and are willing to afford others the privilege they themselves love. There is a good interest there.————W. F. Fahnestock, Dauphin Co. Pa: Time can never obliterate, and I trust eternity will brighten, the memory of that precious moment when first that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ fell upon my ear, from the voice of Br. Miller, in this city, in 1842. Since then I have fought the good fight, despite continued opposition on every side. I daily realize more and more the preciousness of those beautiful lines—"Nearer my God to thee." As I am not my own, but bought with the precious blood of Jesus, I have no desire to lay up treasures on earth.————Sr. T. W. Richards, Eau Claire Co. Wis.: I feel like saying a word for THE TIMES. It is a welcome visitor in our household. The letters of those of like precious faith are a real class-meeting to me. Dear brothers and sisters be faithful a little longer. When the chief Shepherd shall appear, we shall receive a crown of life that fadeth not away. Then we shall see him as he is, and be made like him.———— Br. John Hobbs, writes: I wish to say a word in regard to the subject matter of THE TIMES. It seems to me that while it is good and proper to prepare food for those who are already of the household of faith, yet there is a great multitude who know nothing about repentance, conversion, or what they must do to be saved. Would it not be well for our writers to give us articles occasionally on such subjects? Tell how God loved the world; why it is required of us to believe in Christ; what is meant by coming to Christ; and many other things in connection with conversion.————M. F. Wright, Steuben Co. Ind.: It really does give me great pleasure to read the columns of THE TIMES, especially those that are filled with the lines written by the brothers and sisters living in various places in this world of sin and sorrow. I think we are truly living in startling times. The present state of the nations of the old world indicates their speedy downfall. The King of kings the Lord of life and glory is coming. We almost hear the rumbling of his chariot wheels. Oh! let us be ready to welcome his appearing, and be able to say; this is our God, we have waited for him; this is the Lord, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.————Joseph Lutrell, Montreal: We are but few here at present, but I am happy to say that we are endeavoring to be faithful to our Bibles. We require help to spread the truth more rapidly. I am satisfied that God works by means, but on account of the heavy prejudice that is felt here, we require more powerful means than we have at our disposal. Would that a Paul were here to make known the way of life clearly to the multitudes who have never been instructed in the right way. As the apostle said, so I take it, "we have need of patience." Our hope for cure of all the wrongs that exist, is in the coming of the Son of man.———— Geo. Wright, Jr., Lexington, Mich. I am now (Feb.) holding meetings four miles up the shore. Spoke last night on the souls under the altar. The subject was given me by a bitter opposer. The house was packed, although the Methodists are holding a protracted meeting close by. One started to serve the Lord. Our glorious cause is steadily rising. I have great reason for gratitude when I look back on the past year and half. Out of about 200 to whom I have given the right hand of fellowship, I believe not a dozen have backslidden.———— ————Andrew Organ, Fillmore Co., Minn.: I should like to write a long letter about the glorious hope; but I feel that others are better qualified to do it than I am. But I must say, glory to God for the light and truth that shines so clearly in these last days. I do rejoice that God hath raised up many faithful ones in these last times as witnesses for the truth. That the number may be increased is the prayer of your brother, in hope of everlasting life.————James Sloan, Lapeer, Mich. We have had some additions to our numbers, and we have been pleading with the Lord to send us some laborers after his own heart; and he has answered our cry and sent Br. A. D. Mackie. We have been working together in the Lord, that sinners may be saved when the Lord comes. Pray for us. This is a hard place. The people have so much immortality in them that they will not submit to be saved by the terms of the gospel. Help us to plead with the Lord for them, that their eyes may be opened, and we have such a revival as has never been seen in Lapeer.———— Hattie L. Dunham, LaCross Co. Wis.; I am still looking for the second coming of Christ who is to change our vile bodies and make them like unto his most glorious body. But my heart grows sick within me when I think of the separation that must then take place. Many of my dearest friends are still without a hope in Christ. I can do nothing but pray for them, and leave the result with God. I will do that.————R. B. Dutton, Toronto, Iowa: I am here with Br. Buck, at work in our Master's vineyard. We commenced our meeting about three weeks ago. The Lord has blessed our labors. Some thirty-five have given their hearts to Jesus, and the interest is good yet. I leave here tomorrow to commence a meeting in another place. Br. Buck will continue here over Sabbath. We expect to organize a church this evening. Brethren and sisters pray for us, that the Lord may give us wisdom and every needfull grace.————P. Livingston, Galt, Ont.: I feel the want of words to express my deep sensation of joy at reading Br. Brewer's article in THE TIMES of Feb. 14. It breathes the views I embraced in hearing Br. Charles Fitch's lecture at Oberlin, Ohio, in 1843, on Adventism. I felt he was a man of God and taught by God's Holy Spirit. He was teachable as a little child, and received the truth as the light expanded upon his mind. I feel a pleasure in endorsing every word he has uttered, and glad am I to find you acquiesce in most of his sentiments. I am glad to add, also my feeble expression to the truth of what he has advanced.————W. H. Carr, Moline, Ill. We have an organization here. Br. James McKinley is our leader. We have fourteen members. We lack a preacher or some one to lecture on and explain the great truths of the Bible. Could we have some one to expound the doctrine as taught by the Bible, I am sure we could add many to our number. Br. White and McKinley are hard workers in the Lord's vineyard, but there are many obstacles in the way of progress. The good people of sister churches refuse to recognize us as Christians, and, therefore, will not let us have their houses, even could we get a speaker. Halls are beyond our slender means, for we are all poor in purse, though rich in the Spirit of truth. We will continue to pray for better days.———— ————Geo. W. Hurd, Oakland, S. H. Ill.: I am holding meetings here. The Lord is with us to bless. Four or five are up every night for prayers. The brethren are alive to the necessity of earnest and untiring labor, and are working together. Nine have been added up to this date, and we are expecting more every evening. The meeting was commenced by Br. L. Scott, and Br. North, a "Brethren" preacher.————P. F. Willoughby, Jefferson, Iowa: This is a beautiful morning for winter, and finds us, by the blessing of God, in comfortable health. We have no preaching here, only THE TIMES and Crisis which we prize very highly. We went to hear a funeral sermon last Sunday. It was a curious effort. Take it altogether I should say it was false and without foundation; but the people smile, and seem to think it all right. What won't they take and call it all it good? But it was very stale to me. We should like to hear better preaching. If any of the brethren come this way, give us a call. We try to scatter tracts, and give our papers to the people about here, and hope by this means to interest some, that they may begin to search for truth.———— J. W. Burroughs, Ottawa, Ill. I closed my meetings at Wallingford, Feb. 13. I organized a church of fourteen members, Sam'l. Overturf, Elder, and A. B. Clinton Deacons. The interest is good. They chose me pastor of the church; so I have additional care on my mind. I request the prayers of all God's people.———— ————S. W. Thurber, Omro, Wis.: I spent two weeks in West Salem, Wis., commencing with small congregations and closing with full houses. Some wanderers returned. Six rose for prayers the last evening. A good impression rested on the people. The meeting closed too soon, we all felt. But I was tired out, and had to stop. I found some opposing elements, but none too much to make the truth shine out clearly. The meeting at Sparta closed with six additions to the church. They have made arrangements with me to settle with them, if I think best. They are a blessed church. I love them.————Geo. Thomson, Arena, Wis. I met with the church here in their first Covenant meeting, on Saturday. We had a blessed season. The brethren are persecuted on account of their faith; but it only makes them stronger. I preached Saturday night, and three times yesterday. Two more arose for prayer. The church is going to work in earnest. They have hired a hall, and mean to keep up meetings. I have consented to remove to this place in the spring, and to labor with the church here, and through this section.

The Reign of Peace.

When one reads of the elaborate preparations which even the most civilized of European nations still continue to make for attacking their neighbors, or, as they all pretend, for defending themselves against their neighbors, one can hardly help feeling a good deal disheartened about the probability of our being able to find a substitute for war, as a mode of deciding international disputes. All the Continental Powers have greatly increased their armaments within the last thirty years. France increased hers greatly in 1867: Russia has greatly increased hers; and now England, the most peaceful, and best protected by nature of them all, is engaged in greatly increasing hers. What renders all this the more remarkable and the more depressing is, that it is the great triumphs of peace, such as the railroad and the telegraph, which make this increase necessary. The railroad and telegraph having rendered the transportation and concentration of troops easier, it has followed that every Government must have more troops to transport and concentrate. The result is that every Government has either put its whole male population under arms, or is in a fair way to do so, and we are having war after war in rapid succession, and wars as bloody and cruel as any the world has seen in any age.

The prospect looks all the gloomier when we come to consider what these wars and rumors of wars are all about. There is no more conflict of interest between the different European States than between the various States of the American Union. France has just as much reason, as far as money and comfort are concerned, for living in peace with Germany and Italy as New York has for living in peace with New Jersey and Pennsylvania. No Frenchman or German would deny this, and there is no Frenchman or German who knows anything about the matter who does not think the American Confederation a blessing to all who live under it, if for no other reason, because it enables the political communities which compose it to do without standing armies, and reduces their disputes to the modest dimensions of lawsuits, capable of settlement by bill and answer. Why, then, in the name of common sense, one naturally asks, do not the European States let each other alone? If they have nothing to gain, as regards wealth or comfort, by fighting each other, why do they fight, and keep constantly ready to fight each other?

To this there is only one answer, and it is an answer which makes the prospects of courts of arbitration look very gloomy; it is that they dislike each other, sometimes even hate and envy each other. Each wants to see the other humiliated. They do not speak each other's language; they do not like each other's manners or cookery, and have a very low opinion of each other's character. Each thinks the others are constantly up to some kind of mischief. In short, the state of feeling between them is that which one often sees prevailing between neighbors in private life, and it is one which admits of no formal settlement. If Smith and his wife hate and envy Brown and his wife, and cannot bear to see them driving a carriage or putting up a green-house, what can any third party do to reconcile them? If they differ in opinion on some subject, on which exact knowledge is attainable, they may be set right; if they quarrel over a piece of property, or the construction of a contract, or the tracing of a boundary-line, nothing is easier than to call in an arbitrator, and apply either the rules of positive law or the principles of abstract justice to the decision of the controversy. But what can be done when Brown simply says he can't bear Smith, that he is an odious creature; or when Smith says that Brown's airs are a little too much, and that what he wants is to be taken down a peg or two? On such troubles we cannot arbitrate. When we meet a case like this in private life, we turn it over to a minister, as something to be prayed over, and are thankful if the parties keep their hands off each other. When such a state of things arises between nations it would seem as if there was nothing for it but to fight. For sixty-four years Prussia has hated France on account of Jena; now France will probably hate Prussia for sixty-four years more on account of Sedan and Paris—and so it goes on. If you tell them they ought not to hate each other, that the Bible says it is wrong, each will reply that that is very true, but that nevertheless the first chance it gets it will give the other a drubbing, to take the pride and impudence out of it and teach it how to behave. In short, in the matter of charity and forgiveness they feel very much as the poet Heine said he felt about forgiving his enemies. What he asked of Providence was, a modest cottage, with half a dozen of his enemies hanging to a tree in front of his door. He was ready to forgive them, but not till they were hung. The Prussians are ready to love Frenchmen, but only after having given them a severe beating, and after the Frenchmen have acknowledged themselves to be a vain, fickle, vicious people, in every way inferior to the Germans. The French, on the other hand, are willing to love the Germans after having captured Berlin, and after the Germans have acknowledged themselves to be a coarse, stupid and gluttonous barbarians, in every way inferior to the French. Both will agree, too, to love and forgive the English, but only after having seized London, and levied a handsome contribution on it, and obtained from both Houses of Parliament a formal acknowledgment that a more perfidious, heartless, canting and hypocritical nation than England never existed. This being the state of things, the reign of peace is evidently very near at hand.—N. Y. Times.

No sensible person objects to candid, even if sharp, criticism, if he is not misrepresented, but rather invites and welcomes it, but to be attacked on false premises is rubbing the back of poor human nature the wrong way, and is apt to elicit sparks and shocks.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, - - - - - - MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 14, 1871.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil; the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

New Subscribers List

WANTED AND REALLY NEEDED.

We have no doubt that the desired number of new subscribers can be obtained within the year, and a much larger number, if our friends have only a mind to work. Just at present, is probably the poorest time in the year to get new subscribers. But let none neglect the work on that account. And when you can not get a subscriber directly, prepare the way by tracts, and loaning your paper. Sow the seed, and the fruit will come by and by.

The following are the contributions to this fund the past week:

Book Notices, Etc.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE is one of the most valuable literary periodicals of the day. It skims contemporary literature, especially that in a foreign field, and gives the cream to its readers. It is a 64 page weekly magazine. And is only $8 a year. LITTELL & GAY, Boston, Mass.

We have mentioned the Methodist, of New York, before as the most desirable paper published by the body indicated by its name. Its publishers intend to make it better still. Dr. Stevens will be associated with Dr. Crooks, the present Editor; the paper will be much enlarged and otherwise improved in every respect possible.

We have received copies of a new health journal, monthly, bearing the title of Health and Home. It has a very taking title, and a very taking appearance and table of contents, and will, we judge, prove a success. It proposes to "glean from all fields, hold under contribution all schools of medicine, and seek aid from all intelligent accessible teachers." W. R. DE PUY & BRO., 805 Broadway, New York. $1.50 a year.

Obituary.

HUGHART. In Richland Center, Wis., Feb. 11 1871, Br. Andrew Hughart: aged 66 years, 8 months, and 25 days.

He united with the church of God at Pine River, in January, 1866. For many years he had lived a consistent Christian life. Since his connection with us his uniform piety and exemplary character had won for him many friends. His home was a place where the weary pilgrim received a cordial welcome. During the last two years of his life his sufferings were at times severe, but were borne with great gratitude and resignation to the Divine will with an unwavering hope of a blessed immortality at the appearing of Jesus. He said: "My work is done. I have no fear of death. I wait patiently the event." Sometime previous to his decease he selected for use on the occasion of his funeral, the following portion of Scripture—1 Cor. 15: 16-28. Funeral at the Presbyterian church; service by Rev J. Wallworth. Br. H. leaves a companion and five children to mourn. May the Lord sustain hem. BENJ JUDSON.

Crisis please copy.

SCOTT. In Bridgeton, Wewaygo Co. Mich., Feb. 26, 1871, Adam B. Scott: aged 60 years.

Father was a great sufferer during the last few weeks of his life. But he endured all with great patience, and perfect resignation to the Lord's will. He died in faith that Jesus will soon come to reward all men, according to their works, and establish his everlasting kingdom. Meanwhile he expected to sleep in the grave, until the sound of the last trumpet shall call him forth to everlasting life. A wife, five sons and five daughters lament his loss, but sustained by the hope that he sleeps in Jesus. Sermon by Eld. Sterling from Job 14: 10. E. B. SCOTT.

The Times.

AT HOME.

In many parts of the South there exists what is perhaps justly called a "reign of terror, owing to the continual conflicts between some of the negroes and the secret organization called the Ku-klux Band." There is a call for government interference, which is accorded hesitatingly probably for political reasons. Meanwhile murders are of every day occurrence, and other crimes are too common to attract more than passing notice. Of course this sad state of things does not exist in every locality, but the trouble is widespread, and calculated to excite alarm.—The 41st Congress expired on the 3d. and the 42d was organized immediately. The most notable change is the deposition of Charles Sumner from his position as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. The old Congress passed few laws of general interest at its late session.—On the 7th a disastrous tornado passed over East St. Louis. Something may be judged of its power from the fact that a whole train of cars was lifted from the track, with the locomotive and carried forty feet. Seven persons were killed outright, and large numbers badly injured: while the destruction of property was immense. In Morgan Co Ill., Memphis, Tenn., and elsewhere the storm was very severe.

ABROAD.

The French Assembly has removed to Versailles.—There have been further riotous proceedings in Paris. But all was quiet at latest dates.—In the same day's dispatches, Trochu is reported insane and Rochefort dead, and both reports flatly denied. About half the news daily received is of this contradictory character.—The French prisoners in Switzerland have been engaged in riotous proceedings, which resulted in the death of one person.—Napoleon has protested against the late vote of the Assembly. The vote has not been changed.—How curious, in the light of recent events, does a sentence like this sound, indited by Prince William of Baden to Napoleon, on receipt of a copy of his life of Cæsar? "Will your Majesty deign to permit me to preserve your book as a pledge of the sentiments of benevolence toward all mankind which it inculcates, as well as a proof of affection which it causes him to enjoy who is proud of the honor of styling himself your most humble and obedient servant." Or this from Prince Charles, of Hohenzollern: "I pray your Majesty to accept the very feeble expression of the profound and lively gratitude with which I receive this souvenir of friendship, together with the assurance of all the sentiments of respect and attachment—which I also express on behalf of all my family—with which I shall never cease to respond to it." These were written five years ago; but the world moves swiftly in these days.—A private letter from Paris brings to notice a curious case of what is called the irony of history. The Great Exhibition of 1851 was supposed to be the inauguration of a period of perpetual peace. A large collection of French wheats was sent to it by order of the National Assembly. After the exhibition these samples were stored, for the benefit of the curious, in the galleries of the Conservatoire des Arts et Metiers. The directors of the museum and their families, and the sick and wounded, (for whom beds had been prepared in the building,) have lived through the latter portion of the siege upon good white bread, made out of the samples above mentioned.—Rochefort's watchword of regicide is exercising its influence in Denmark, where Christian IX. has recently been shot at. The King, very sensibly, took no notice of the attempt at assassination, ordering the would-be murderer's release, and advising him to practice with his pistol if he intended to remain in the business. Christian is evidently a humorist.

West Indies.

The Commission to San Domingo are returning home prepared to earnestly advocate the annexation of that piece of an island to our country. It is to be hoped that all their efforts in this direction will fail.—The Cuban rebellion, oftimes reported dead, is still progressing. There are reports of frequent fighting, with success on both sides.

Metz.

Mr. Robinson, a newspaper correspondent who was confined in Metz during the siege has published a sketch of the investment of that city, and arraigns Bazaine, as determined not to escape, and quite willing to be captured. He seems to have been both incapable and disloyal. The evidence in proof of these points is quite strong; and unless refuted Bazaine must be branded as one of the chief authors of the ruin of his country. At present hatred of the Republic and devotion to a corrupt fallen empire seem to have prompted the action by which 170,000 soldiers were handed over to the German conquerors of France. What changes they might have made in the course of affairs under the lead of a loyal competent general, it is useless although interesting to speculate.

Peace in Europe.

So far as France and Prussia are concerned the duration of peace is contingent on the time necessary for France to get ready to fight. But it is evident that Prussia means to put this day as far away as possible, by exactions of both territory and money, which while they shall cripple France shall at the same time strengthen the new German empire. If the German purpose were to so burden the French nation financially as to make it impossible for them to do otherwise than maintain the most economical and therefore the most peaceful government possible, they would insist on just such terms of peace as they now demand. They demand one billion of dollars, payable within three years. This sum, with the expenses of the war and the debt already existing, will make a total of $4,700,000,000, as the amount of the mortgage upon the property and industry of France. This is a burden that will be felt by all classes, and every appearance of the tax-collector will serve to feed the grudge the French bear toward their conquerors, and create a longing for the approach of the day of revenge.

It also appears by the late elections, that the inhabitants of Alsace and Loraine do not desire annexation to the new and flourishing German empire. They would rather remain with burdened France; and this in spite of their German origin, and the fact that many of them still speak that language. It is stated that so strongly do they dislike the prospect of German rule, that there are already extensive movements for emigration; and that the United States will receive a large portion of the emigrants.

In making the appeal to the duel for the settlement of difficulties, nations, like individuals, should abide the result. But the fact is, that the defeated party, however guilty in the opening of the contest, always feels itself aggrieved and injured, and will seek the earliest opportunity for revenge. To believe that it will be otherwise with France in the present instance, is irrational. So far as causation of the war is concerned, probably both nations were equally guilty: both had long been preparing for the contest, and only circumstances could determine which should be the attacking party. The weakness of Louis Napoleon, involved France in the disgrace of breaking the peace of Europe. But the very action taken by Germany to destroy the power of France to ever again go to war without the consent of Germany and Russia, the present arbiters of Europe, will make a future war the more certain. Says the New York Times:

> Most observers will probably come to the conclusion that the treaty recently concluded will last just as long as the exhaustion of France, and not a moment longer. We are not discussing the question who began the recent war, or whether the Germans have done right in annexing Alsace and Loraine in direct and violent opposition to the wishes of the inhabitants of those provinces. It may be quite proper to grind the faces of the French people into the very dust, and to inflict upon them every possible indignity which the ingenuity of the Teutonic mind could devise. It may be a just retribution on the part of the Germans to seize all the territory and exact all the money they wanted, and then refuse to spare a bleeding and prostrate nation the humiliation of occupying their capital, for the mere purpose of driving the iron a little further into the soul. All this, we say, may be in accordance with those ideas of Christianity, Progress, and Civilization, which, at this age of the world's history, no man or people would think of disregarding. The only point we may venture to make a decided statement about is that, right or wrong, just or unjust, this new treaty will be torn into shreds the moment the paralyzed fingers of France regain their strength. It may be five years hence, or ten, or fifty—but this war has to be fought again some day, as surely as the sun will continue to rise and set. No doubt it is very shocking that evil passions should thus be nursed, but there are a good many things in this muddled world which we have to take as we find them, in default of our unfortunate inability to set them straight.

And with unconcealed sarcasm upon the prophets of "peace and safety," the Times adds: "The French, meanwhile, have to get themselves some sort of a working government, and then they will see what can be done toward startling the nerves of those who still cherish faith in the 'dawn of universal peace,' and the 'irresistible march of progress.'" Cannot the advocates of the temporal millennium and the permanent reign of universal peace, see that the course of events does not favor their theory, any more than does the course of Scripture and prophecy. There are some good things, men, and movements in the world; and some of these are gaining ground: but the forces of evil are gaining much faster. You may cry "Peace, peace!" but there will be no permanent peace till the Prince of peace comes to earth to reign.

Russia and Prussia.

That was a very significant note, which Emperor William recently addressed to the Czar, thanking him before the world for not embarrassing Germany during its war upon France. Very courteous this, in the Czar. But do empires bestow such courtesies for nothing? And why has the Emperor no thanks for Austria's quiet, and for England's servility? Because their keeping of the peace was wholly due to unpreparedness for war. The passage of compliments between Czar and Emperor means that there has been a secret understanding between them; that in case England or Austria interfered, Russia would side with Germany. It also means that Germany has assured the Northern Bear that his next predatory excursion shall not be interfered with. These two empires now control Europe. There are those who affect to believe that their power will be used for the benefit of mankind. We doubt it; and meanwhile watch with intense interest for the developments of the future. Russia is to have her own way in the East. What will she do? and when will she act? are questions of deep interest to the student of prophecy.

The New German Empire.

The new Empire of Germany begins from this time a career of immense importance to the world. Its population is the second of the great States of Europe. Russia leads it with 63,000,000; but, including Alsace and Lorraine Germany follows with 40,120,000 of the most industrious and intelligent inhabitants to be found in any community of the world. France, shorn of a large part of her two provinces, comes next, with 36,430,000; and then the Austrian Monarchy, with 35,943,000, and Great Britain, with 30,838,000; last of all being Italy, with Rome, counting 26,470,000 inhabitants. Even the preponderating population of the German Empire is no fair measure of its strength. Its position is central, whether for military or moral influence. It is compact and homogeneous. All its vast forces are under the control of one Executive and the Parliament. Its leading State—Prussia—is confessedly the most intelligent, disciplined and vigorous community in Europe. The Administration is everywhere economical and thoroughly well organized. The educational system of Prussia, its economy and thorough discipline will now be spread through all the Empire. Even this tremendous war will leave less debt on the Empire than it would on any other civilized State. The Hohenzollerns always made their enemies pay their war expenses, and no army lives at so little money-cost as the German.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

A Methodist called the Italian unity meeting in Boston to order, a Trinitarian Congregationalist was its President, a Universalist offered the resolution, a Unitarian seconded them, and an Episcopalian made one of the strongest speeches in their support.—It is reported in England that Home, the famous Spiritist, has become a convert to Episcopalianism, and is soon to assume holy orders. He is said to have been led to that Church by revelations from the spirit-world, where creeds have been hitherto supposed to have no existence.—Andrew Jackson Davis has not renounced Spiritism, as has been reported.—The "Friends" of Baltimore have begun a revolution in the style of their meeting-houses, by erecting an elegant Quaker chapel in that city. Not only is the exterior of the edifice very handsome, but the interior is rich with walnut pews, cushions, and carpets.—An acute arithmetician has figured out by the double rule of three, or upward, that, while there are a couple of millions of people in the United States who are denied the privilege of reading their Bibles by lack of education, there are exactly ten times as many who might read them, but don't—for lack of inclination.—An English minister, of the established church, protests against the ministers of any denomination employing, or being allowed the title of "Rev." And if they are to have it, he will bear it no longer. He says he earned his right to it at college. He talks like one of the kind of ministers that man makes, and the Lord has little to do with.—The Rev. Charles E. Cheney, who was lately suspended from the ministry by Bishop Whitehouse, but whom his congregation determined to retain in defiance of the Bishop's authority, gave notice to his congregation on Sunday last, that members would be received into the church as usual; but that, for the present, the rite of conformation could not be administered. The Bishop, thus challenged, must take his choice between going still further in his efforts to control or crush the recusant minister and retreating from his position.—The Waldensians are meeting with good success in Rome. They have established Bible depositories in connection with the London Society, and colporteurs are busy in the city, where a few months ago the Word of God was bound by the "Vicar of Christ."

BRIEF EXCERPTS.

The Baptist Union: Will it not be a blessed day when every Christian church shall heartily recognize all other Christian churches as honored members of the one great family, the one body, and Jesus the head over all? To which we reply, yes, indeed, for it will be after Jesus has come, and in his kingdom. Never before.——N. Y. Observer: Every lottery ticket seller, every Christian lady selling lottery tickets at a fair, ought to be arrested, indicted, tried and punished according to the violated law of the State.——The Methodist says; There are many whose lives are wasted, not from want of capacity, but from want of application. They are endowed with gifts which might make them of service to the world if they would but use them. These gifts are often the admiration of their friends, and occasionally of themselves. There is a self-consciousness of talent, though sometimes, it is true, connected with an overestimation of ability. These people need, however, to be taught that ability of itself never accomplished anything. The power to do and the doing are not the same, nor are they necessarily connected. There is enough unused ability in the world to make it far better than it is. Too often talent is associated with a mental inertia, hard to shake off; and thus it happens that men of moderate abilities are far more successful in life than others who have higher natural gifts. The machinery that has the motive power supplied does the work. It may be less costly, less beautiful than some other that has not the power applied, but it is far more useful....The mighty struggle is going on. Every man is needed, every influence required. None are so strong that they can do the work alone; none so feeble that they cannot help. The Church needs quickening; the inward fire must be stirred up, or, covered with the ashes of worldliness, it will go out.——N. Y. Herald: Figs do not grow upon thistles nor grapes upon thorns; neither will good fruit spring from such seeds as we have indicated. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land—not a famine of bread nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord; and they [the people] shall run to and fro and seek the word of the Lord and shall not find it." Had the Hebrew prophet Amos lived in this generation and in this city he could not more clearly have described the spiritual condition of the people.

Responses.

We have a number of responses, thus early to our proposition for the free and wide circulation of Br. Whitmore's work. Among others we give the following, from Br. Grow, of Ottawa, Ill.:

> I see by the last TIMES that you propose getting out a "cheap but durable edition" of Eld. Whitmore's work on The Doctrine of Immortality. I am exceeding glad to know it, and write to inform you that I am good for thirty copies, to start with. I think it the best work ever published on that subject. No candid mind can possibly read it with care, and not have serious doubts of the truth of the opposite doctrine.

—We feel encouraged to hope the proposed first edition of a thousand copies, will be promptly taken up. Let us hear from others.

New Appointments.

Preaching brethren will please make this department interesting by sending in their appointments, for new fields especially. In appointments, give place and date of meeting; and make "notices" brief pointed and stirring.

☞ Always write appointments on a slip of paper by themselves.

Milroy, Ill., Saturday eve. April 1, and over Sabbath, and once in four weeks until further notice. C. W. SMITH.

Pitman's Hall, Boscobel, Grant Co. Wis., Thursday eve. March 16, and onward as long as duty may require. P. HITCHCOCK. C. A. HUYRE.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 28, 1871.

The Sinner and his End.

MY DEAR FRIENDS: You have asked me to present in a short space the Scriptural theory relative to the sinner and his end. I have much pleasure in complying with your wish, as well on account of the importance of the subject as in memory of the very gratifying visit which, in connection with it, I lately paid to your town.

When God made man, he made him not subject to death, or, in other words, he made him immortal. In forming man, he made him in this, as well as other respects, an image of himself. It was not to one part of man, namely, his soul or spirit, that God gave this immortality, but to the perfect man, that is to the human body animated by the breath of life. (Gen. 1: 26; 2: 7).

But immortality can only belong to any creature so long as the Creator wills. He who gives life can take it away, and he who creates can destroy. Accordingly, in the creation of man, God expressly told him that his immortality was not an inalienable gift, but was altogether conditional on his obedience. He imposed on him one prohibition, and warned him that "in the day he ate of the tree of knowledge, he would surely die." (Gen. 2: 17.)

Whenever a lawgiver imposes a penalty for any offence, the nature of the penalty is made plain to the parties who are warned not to incur it. This is one of the first principles of all justice. Accordingly, Adam knew perfectly well what death was. He knew it because it was the law of all the creatures that were lower than himself. Bird and beast and fish all were made subject to death, and all, after their short life, ceased to exist. This was Adam's well known and only idea of what death was. This he understood would be his penalty if he sinned. Continuing obedient, he knew he would never die; becoming a transgressor, he knew he would cease to live.

There are some who tell us that the death threatened to Adam did not mean this but means something quite different. They tell us that it meant man's becoming dead to God, or dead in sins, and also destined to everlasting misery in hell. It is very easy to show that the death threatened to Adam had no such meaning as this.

In the first place, it is a great mistake to say that death to God, or death in sin, is a punishment inflicted by God. This is the sinner's own guilty act, with which it were impious to say that God has any thing to do. God does not produce this guilty state of mind, but punishes the sinner because he has produced it. And again, we are taught in Scriptures, that our Lord, in redeeming us, suffered that very death which is man's penalty for disobedience "He tasted death for every man" (Heb. 2: 9). Christ certainly never died to God, was never dead in sin, and therefore this spiritual death is no part whatever of the penalty of sin.

It is equally certain that an everlasting life of pain was not intended as the penalty for human sin. Whatever was the penalty, it was not only threatened, but is also endured by Adam and all his posterity. When God came to Adam, after he had sinned, he did not come to tell him that he would excuse him from the penalty or from any part of it, but that he would most surely execute it. (Gen. 3: 19.) And Paul teaches us the same truth, when he says that the death which sin brought into the world has "passed upon all men" (Rom. 5: 12). By the death, then, which God threatened to Adam and his race for sin, and which God inflicted upon Adam and his race for sin, cannot be meant an eternal life of pain, for in that case no man whatsoever could ever enjoy the blessed life of God, and even Christ himself, who endured for us the full penalty of our sin, could not be exempted from an eternity of pain.

But why should we look for any other explanation of the death threatened for sin; than that which God himself gave to the sinner when he had sinned, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return?" (Gen. 3: 19). Here is God's own definition of it. Not one word said about "death in sin;" not a word said about everlasting misery. The lawgiver has explained his penalty, and we may not dare to alter or to add to it. The sinner has lost his immortality; he has forfeited his title to an eternal life; he has [illegible] himself like the beasts that perish; and so God comes and turns him from the tree of life, lest he should eat and live forever," because in God's world there is no such thing as eternal life for the sinful, that priceless boon is inseparably connected with holiness and love. Eternal evil! A never-dying sinner! Poor man has dreamed of such monstrous existences, but they have no place in the world of our God.

And now we have seen what the first sin brought on man. It brought death, i. e. the loss of the blessed life which God bestowed on man at his creation. He received plain and distinct warning that such would be the effect of sin, and in the graveyards of this earth and the sure visit of death to each son and daughter of our race, we see that God was true to his pledged Word, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

And now man, become a sinner, is no longer immortal, but mortal. His condition is no longer represented by a comparison with things that endure, but with things that fade and depart. He is like the grass that withereth, like the flower that fadeth, like the beasts that perish; his life is but a vapor that appeareth for a little while and then vanisheth away. (Ps. 103: 15; 49; 12; Jas. 4: 14). Man's proud boast of his natural immortality is the direct opposite to God's account of him in his Word.

But God had blessings in store for man. God foresaw that man would fall and become mortal, but he intended in his own way of grace to restore immortality to man. This was through his only Son our Savior Jesus Christ. The dim promise of restoration made in Eden, contained in the assurance that the seed of the woman should bruise the head of the serpent (Gen. 3: 15), was shown in all its full grand meaning when the woman's seed appeared upon this earth and proclaimed his mission. "I am come," he said, "that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly:" "the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth, and believeth in me, shall never die" (Jno. 10: 10; 6: 33; 11: 25). Such was the mission of Christ—to give back to man life that he had lost. As unbelief in and rebellion against God has been man's dark sad way to death, so faith in him who God sent as the Savior was to be the sinner's blessed way to life. As the spiritual death of the soul to God was the way downward to physical death, so the renewed life of the soul to God is the way upward to that life which only such souls can use and enjoy aright.

In this Gospel of Christ, the Lifebringer, there is no contradiction between what God said he would do in case man sinned, and what he has done in his redemption of man by Christ. There is no change of purpose here: no first intention of God altered for a second intention; no purpose of judgment changed into one of mercy. Redemption was God's purpose before man was cut off from the tree of life; for "known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world," and Jesus Christ is "the lamb slain from the foundation of this world" (Acts 15: 18; Rev. 13: 8). Accordingly we do not read in God's threatening death to Adam one word about its being eternal. He told him he would surely die, and surely he he has died; but he did not tell him he would die forever; if he had done so there would have no Savior, no Gospel, no blessed eternal life for the fallen race. Man would in that case have appeared upon the earth and disappeared, even as race after race of the lower creatures has appeared and then disappeared, leaving but the faint trace of its former existence upon the rocks.

But when redemption through Christ is announced, when the new eternal life is proclaimed as man's restored privilege through faith, new and ominous words which never were used before are attached to the penalty for the rejection of the Redeemer. The nature of the penalty is the same; it is still "death," "destruction," the loss of life; but the duration of the penalty is expressly, unequivocally, unmistakably defined. It is no longer simple "death" that is threatened. That word, though well understood, would not now be enough. That word had been used when the penalty was intended to be reversed, and was actually reversed by a God of grace. That word by itself, therefore, it is plain, would not be enough when the penalty was an irreversible one, one that might never be changed. Accordingly we have description given of the second death, which is to come upon the rejector of the Gospel, which were not used in the description of that first death, which has come upon our race through Adam's sin. The worm that preys upon the twice-dead, is a worm that never dies; the fire that consumes their carcasses is a fire that is unquenchable; their smoke rises up forever and ever; their fearful destruction is everlasting; their dread punishment one which can never end; their second death is not merely that of the body, but is one that involves both body and soul. (Mk. 9: 44; Rev. 14: 11; 2 Thes. 1: 9; Mat. 25; 46; 10 28). He who first gave man life, and attached a condition to its permanence, has, when he gives back life, also attached a condition, and unmistakably declared what this condition is.

And here, too, we see the mingled justice and mercy of God, our, Father. Great, wise, loving reasons led him to give to fallen man the way back to life, that he did not give to the fallen angels. The same loving reasons have led him to decide that the offers of life made to man in this present life shall never be repeated to man in any condition or in any life after this. "Now is man's accepted time, now is the day of salvation." If he sins wilfully after he has received the knowledge of truth, "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." (2 Cor. 6: 2; Heb. 10 26).

Hence it was absolutely necessary, only the part of justice on God's side, only the part of loving mercy, to attach to the penalty for the rejection of his last offer to those ominous words—"unquenchable," "everlasting"—which God did not attach to the penalty for the first sin. Man has seen that the death threatened and inflicted on the race for Adam's sin, is only, in God's exercise of his prerogative, a temporal death. It takes place, indeed, in every one of us, but in every one of us it only rules for a time. In the case of the human spirit, in whatever conscious state or condition of sleep it may continue during the intermediate state, we are taught that its life is not destroyed (Mat. 10: 28); while in regard of the body we are taught that "the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of Christ, and shall come forth." (Jno. 5: 28.)

It was absolutely necessary, then, if the second death was not to be of this temporary and partial kind, that it should be so declared. And no other words would suit but those which God has used. The just lawgiver, in attaching his penalty for the rejection of his gospel, has but acted the part of justice when, intending never again to offer redemption," he has described the penalty as "everlasting death," "everlasting destruction."

It became him, who is merciful as well as wise, to use those words of solemn omen. He knew man's heart, that it was prone to flatter itself to its destruction; he knew the wiles of Satan, that he would ever, during his permitted term, repeat in human ears his old lie that promised life where God had threatened death; he knew that men would arise, some of them good men, though here false teachers, who would discourse in soft honeyed words of the Divine benevolence and mercy, and would weave the flattering tale of Gospels proclaimed in other coming ages to those who had rejected Christ's Gospel here, of those redeemed upon earth having it as their future allotted work to woo with winning words those who would not here be won, yea even to subdue the fallen angels and Satan himself by their loving words and entreaties. This was not to be, and, therefore, he who willeth not the death of a sinner, but that he should repent and live, has in very mercy spoken of the "unquenchable fire," the "everlasting punishment," the irreversible doom of the second death. But this second death is not life of any kind but loss of life. It is not an existence in eternal torments, but is the eternal loss of the eternal life of the redeemed inflicted as the dread penalty for the second and final rejection by man of the goodness of God. When God meant by the second death a death from which there could be no restoration, he could only call it eternal, and in mercy he has done so.

There are some who tell us that the eternal deprivation of a blessed life is not an eternal punishment. They think the punishment is over the moment that the pains of the second death have ceased to be felt. What do such reasoners mean? Is the punishment of death inflicted here by criminals over when the criminal is dead? No, it has only then began. It lasts in all its

And thus we are to judge of that second death in hell which is to all the lost, whenever it comes there, an everlasting sleep. It has deprived the sinner, not of a few brief chequered tears of mingled joy and sorrow, but of an eternal life, across whose brightness comes no shade, no sadness, no change; which ever stretches on into the limitless future, and finds its peace and joy growing and deepening. Is not the deprivation of this life for sin an eternal punishment? Is not the destruction of such a life an everlasting destruction? Yes, it is. It is a punishment which the lapse of countless ages shall not reverse; it is a destruction from which eternity itself will not restore. No message of mercy will again be sent to those lost ones of hell. They die there to rise and live no more. No powerful voice ever sounds in those deaf ears. No breath from God, the Life-giver, ever enters into those dry bones, lays sinews upon them, brings on them flesh, covers them with skin, puts breath into them, and causes them to live once more. The angel of death has spread his wings upon the blast of judgment, and breathed upon that exceeding great army which has followed here the banners of the prince of darkness, and lo, force for every year, every day, every moment of that life of which it has deprived the criminal. Else that death which all legislature has esteemed the greatest punishment, and which some men think too great to be inflicted even for the greatest crimes, is of almost all punishments the shortest and the least. But such is not man's judgment of death. He esteems it, and justly, the greatest, the sorest, the most lasting punishment he can possibly inflict. He thinks so, utterly irrespective of anything he may believe, with or without reason, may happen after death. Death is thus esteemed whether it is inflicted upon the good man or the evil. Death is thus esteemed by those who believe that rewards and punishments commence with the separate soul, or who believe that hades is a silent land of sleep and unconsciousness for all, good and bad alike. Death is thus esteemed by those Christian nations who believe on God's word in a future life, and by those who have no hope and no fear beyond the grave, because they think that death is, for all alike, a long eternal sleep.

when they who have here followed the Prince of Life shall have arisen in the morning of their endless being, they shall behold the lost sink, one after another, into the slumber of everlasting forgetfulness, and loud shall rise their note of praise to God, who has thus, in a just judgment, blotted out evil from his word, and made all things once more very good.

Such, sinner, is the second death. Such is the end of those who reject the Gospel of Christ. Such are the sad wages of sin. Oh! will you not come, in repentance for sin and a lively faith to Christ, that you may have that eternal life which is God's free blessed gift. Is not such an eternal life worth all your life's labor even to obtain a hope of it? And it is given without money and without price to everyone who comes to Christ and asks from him water to slake his thirst, and receives from him the well of water which springeth up into everlasting life.

LINES.

Take comfort, Christians, when your friends
In Jesus fall asleep;
The Savior's being never ends,
Why then dejected weep?
Why inconsolable, as those
To whom no hope is given?
They shall arise as Jesus rose,
When he descends from heaven.

As Jesus died, and rose again
The first-fruits, from the dead;
So his dear saints shall rise, and reign
With their triumphant head.
The time draws nigh, when from the clouds
Christ shall with shouts descend,
And the last trumpet's awful voice
The heavens and earth shall rend.

Then we who live shall changed be,
And they who sleep shall wake;
The graves shall yield their ancient charge,
And earth's foundations shake.
The saints of God, from death set free,
With joy shall mount on high;
The heavenly host with praises loud
Shall meet them in the sky.

Together to their Father's house
With joyful hearts they go;
And dwell forever with the Lord,
Beyond the reach of wo.
A few short years of evil past,
We reach the happy shore,
Where death-divided friends at last
Shall meet, to part no more.

MY LEGACY.

BY R. S.

They told me I was heir. I turned in haste,
And ran to seek my treasure,
And wondered as I ran how it was placed—
If I should find a measure
Of Gold, or if the titles of fair lands
And houses would be laid within my hands.

I journeyed many roads; I knocked at gates;
I spoke to each wayfarer
I met, and said: "A heritage awaits
Me. Art not thou the bearer
Of news? Some message sent me, whereby
I learn which way my new possessions lie?"

Some asked me in; naught lay beyond their door;
Some smiled and could not tarry,
But said that men were just behind who bore
More gold than I could carry;
And so the morn, the noon, the day, were spent,
While, empty-handed, up and down I went.

At last one cried, whose face I could not see,
As through the mist he hasted:
"Poor child! what evil ones have hindered thee,
Till this whole day is wasted?
Hath no man told thee that thou art joint heir
With one named Christ, who waits the goods to share?"

The one named Christ I sought for many days,
In many places, vainly;
I heard men name his name in many ways;
I saw his temples plainly;
But they who named him most gave me no sign
To find him by, or prove the heirship mine.

And when at last I stood before his face,
I knew him by no token
Save subtle air of joy which filled the place;
Our greeting was not spoken;
In solemn silence I received my share,
Kneeling before my brother and "joint heir."

My share! No need of house or spreading lands
As I had dreamed; no measure
Heaped up with gold; my elder brother's hands
Had never held such treasure.
Foxes have holes, and birds in nests are fed;
My brother had not where to lay his head.

My share! The right, like him, to know all pain
Which hearts are made for knowing;
The right to find in loss the surest gain;
To reap my joy from sowing
In bitter tears; the right with him to keep
A watch by day and night with all who weep.

My share! To-day men call it grief and death;
I see the joy and life to-morrow;
I thank our Father with my every breath
For this sweet legacy of sorrow;
And through my tears I call to each: "Joint heir
With Christ, make haste to ask him for thy share."

The 1335 Days. No. 3.

WHEN WILL THEY END?

I will now present another quotation from history, showing that very soon after the obsequies of Pope Agapetus, the new patriarch, Mennas, assembled a council to dispose of the above mentioned memorials.

"Mennas, the new patriarch, assembled a council, in great haste, consisting of the bishops, who were then at Constantinople, and in that neighborhood, in all fifty-five. In this council were read several memorials, containing heavy complaints against Anthimus, Severus, Petrus of Apamea, Zoaras, and their followers. Anthimus was several times summoned to appear; and upon his not appearing, divested by the council of the Episcopal dignity, and declared unworthy of the name of a Christian. As for Severus, and Petrus of Apamea, they were charged with several enormous crimes, and therefore degraded and anathematized by all the fathers of the council.... The present council met, for the first time, on the 2d of May (536), and broke up on the 4th of June, when they acquainted the emperor with the judgment they had given; who thereupon issued an edict, dated the 6th of August, ordering their judgment to be put in execution, and, at the same time, banishing Anthimus, Severus, Petrus of Apamea, Zoaras and their followers, from Constantinople and all the other great cities, condemning their books to the flames, forbidding all persons to keep them by them, and all transcribers to copy them, on pain of having their hands cut off. This law was addressed to Mennas, the most holy and most blessed archbishop, and universal patriarch." (Bower, Vol. I, pp. 343, 344.)

Candid reader, I now call for your judgment. Does it not appear from the foregoing that some time during the year 536, the point was reached when the abomination of desolation stood in the holy place? So it appears to my mind. But you may ask was their persecution in the provinces of the Eastern Empire from that time on? And I answer without fear of successful contradiction, that if we trace the history of that empire, onward for centuries, we find that from the above date, there were almost continuous scenes of persecution, even unto death, against all those who would not adopt the Trinitarian doctrine of the two natures of Christ, and the Catholic worship. I have just quoted above from Bower, showing that an edict was issued by the emperor against the Eutychians and others, that demanded persecution and exile; and now I will just refer you to another, recorded on p. 353 of the same history, where we learn that some monks of Palestine applied to the Pope's nuncio, and the patriarch Mennas, of Constantinople, in A. D., 541, for the condemning of the sect of Origenists; when they having presented a memorial to Justinian, containing some of the most remarkable errors of Origen; he immediately issued an edict condemning them as heretics, and to suffer accordingly. This edict was immediately followed by another against the Acephali; obliging all patriarchs, metropolitans, bishops, and ecclesiastics in his dominions, to publicly receive the decree of Chalcedon establishing the two natures in Christ on pain of forfeiting their sees and every other preferment they enjoyed in the church. Again Gibbon says (vol. 4, p. [illegible]): "The [illegible] of Anastasius (Justinian) replanted the orthodox standard in the East; Severus fled into Egypt....fifty-four bishops were swept from their thrones, eight hundred ecclesiastics were cast into prison." Again (pp. 529, 530, 531) we read the following account of events which commenced in 532, but are to the point in our argument, showing that the armies of Justinian were preparing the way for placing of the abomination in the holy place, which I have shown was accomplished in 536.

"A secret remnant of pagans, who still lurked in the most refined and most rustic conditions of mankind, excited the indignation of the Christians ....They were sternly informed that they must choose without delay between the displeasure of Jupiter and Justinian, and that their aversion to the gospel could no longer be disguised under the scandalous mask of indifference or impiety. Seventy thousand pagans were detected and converted in Asia, Phrygia, Lydia, and Caria; ninety-six churches built for the new proselytes; and linen vestments, Bibles and liturgies, and vases of gold and silver, were supplied by the pious munificence of Justinian. The Jews, who had been gradually stripped of their immunities, were oppressed by a vexatious law, which compelled them to observe the festival of Easter, the same day on which it was celebrated by the Catholic Christians. The Samaritans of Palestine were a motley race, an ambiguous sect, rejected as Jews by the Pagans, by the Jews as schismatics, by the Christians as idolaters. The abomination of the cross had already been planted on their holy mount of Gerizem (eleven hours travel from Jerusalem), but the persecution of Justinian offered only the alternative of baptism or rebellion. They chose the latter: under the standard of a desperate leader, they rose in arms, and retaliated their wrongs on the lives, property, and temples of a defenceless people. The Samaritans were finally subdued by the regular forces of the East: twenty thousand were slain, twenty thousand were sold by the Arabs to the infidels of Persia and India, and the remains of that unhappy nation atoned for the crime of treason by the sin of hypocrisy. It has been computed that one hundred thousand Roman subjects were extirpated in the Samaritan war, which converted the once fruitful province into a desolate and smoking wilderness. But in the creed of Justinian, the guilt of murder could not be applied to the slaughter of unbelievers; and he piously labored to establish with fire and sword the unity of the Christian faith."

Again (p. 54[illegible]):

"To this [illegible]n] standard of natural and religious freedom, myriads of fugitives resorted from all the provinces of the Eastern Empire; the narrow bigotry of Justinian was punished by the emigration of his most industrious subjects."

We also learn from the same history, when referring to many of those who fled from the persecutions of Justinian, that they established themselves in the villages and mountains along the borders of the Euphrates, and the cities and mountains of lesser Asia. If we follow for a moment the leading events of the history of Justinian, during the period of his raising the decrees of the Catholic Councils, to the summit of their universal acceptance wherever his power could be felt; we find him first issuing an edict against philosophers, heretics, and pagans, of the Greek empire, in A. D. 529. In 532 he issued an edict against Jews, Christians and Pagans of the Greek nation, and the provinces of Judea, compelling them to accept the Catholic faith on pain of death and exile, during which year one hundred thousand Roman subjects perished. We next find him in 533 making war on the Vandals in Africa, and history records the fact, that in one awful hour on the eve of St. Cyprian of that year, the Arians, conscious that their reign had expired, resigned their temples to the Catholics, who rescued their saint from profane hands, performed holy rites, and loudly proclaimed the creed of Athanasius and Justinian. We next find him sending an embassy to Rome with rich presents for the Pope, and a parchment containing his relig[illegible] was in harmony with the Catholic Councils, requesting the Pope to inform him if he accepted the document as the creed and faith of the Catholic Church, and if so, to separate from his communion, and anathematize as heretics all who would not subscribe to it, which he did in A. D., 534. We next find the Pope in Constantinople in A. D. 536, when the matter was settled as to the creed and faith of the Eastern Church, including the holy place, as shown above.

I might continue to quote history almost indefinitely, to sustain the position I have taken, but the above must suffice. I will simply add that although the persecution of heretics raged with such fury in the East, from A. D., 536 and onward; Italy was still under the dominion of the Arian Goths, as late as A. D., 550. See Blair's Chronological Tables, p. 533, where it is said that Pope Vigilius being still at Constantinople, "urges Justinian to rescue Italy from the dominion of the Arians." If the position I have taken is in harmony with the word of God, then we have already entered upon the last year of the 1335, which are to reach to the resurrection of the dead. The signs of the times, and the condition of the nations also indicate that the great day of God is near, even almost upon us. May the Lord help us to be about the Master's work, so that when he shall appear, we may hear his voice pronounce the sweet words, with which, to us, at such a time, none others can be compared—"Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Oppositions of Orthodoxy Falsely so Called.

Some time ago I presented an article under the head of Oppositions of sciences falsely so called, from (1 Tim. 6: 20), in which we believe Paul taught that there had been, and would be false conclusions drawn from true science, or that there was also false science taught by the world. We are however more inclined to believe that Paul meant that there was false science taught in opposition to true science, as maintained by not only Paul, a learned man, but by the Word of God: a book of science as well as Christian doctrine.

I now propose to present some reasons for the assertion or declaration of the caption at the head of this article, to wit.: that there are also oppositions from a false orthodoxy. We take the position that there is a true orthodoxy, the meaning of which according to Webster is "Soundness of faith; a belief in the genuine doctrines taught in the Scriptures; consonance to genuine Scriptural doctrines," etc.

Those, then, who are sound in the Christian faith, are the true orthodoxy. But inasmuch as all Christian denominations claim that they are orthodox in the faith expressed in their various creeds, how are we to determine which creed or denomination is the genuine orthodox?

I do not propose to investigate the creeds of men in this connection, but to select one proposition, the same referred to in the former article, to wit.: the nature of man; and to show by the word of truth that there are oppositions of orthodoxy, falsely so called, on this question, as well as opposition of false science. I select this proposition more especially because the various sects are generally well agreed in belief that man is naturally immortal, having received, as they affirm, immortality at creation, when God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. I admit that if it can be maintained by the Word of truth that man is an immortal being, then all who so declare, are orthodox on this point. But if it can be shown that the Word of God does not teach this idea, then it follows as a logical conclusion as well as a Bible truth that all who maintain it, if called orthodox, are falsely so called. But "to the law and to the testimony."

To begin at the beginning let us look at Gen. 2: 7. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." It is maintained that here is sufficient evidence to prove man's immortality, from the fact that God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. Or, in other words, that Adam received by this act of breathing on the part of God, a portion of the Lord's immortal essence or life. In drawing conclusions it is quite necessary to be careful to adhere to the Word as it is written. And we are compelled here to maintain the negative to the assertion that man received any of God's breath as an entity: inasmuch as it is written that he, God, breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, instead of the assertion maintained by some that he breathed his [God's] immortal breath into his nostrils. We do not read that it was God's breath that was imparted, but the breath of life, was given. But says one, it is sufficient to establish the idea that it was God's breath from the fact that the Word says he breathed it! We answer no; because we cannot find any analogies in the Word to show that when the breath of God is mentioned it really does mean a part of himself, but rather is spoken of as a power or influence emanating from and under the control of the Almighty. If we look at Job 37: 10, we shall find the following declaration: "By the breath of God frost is given; and the breadth of the waters is straitened." What are we to understand by the above assertion? Are we to believe that the breath of God, breathed as a man's breath, produces frost? Surely were one to take this position and teach it publicly he would be denounced as an idiot. What is meant is simply the power by which God creates and upholds all things; and the expression does not imply that he imparts a portion of himself, as a divine essence, or immortal entity, in the formation of frost, snow, rain, sunshine, or man, to claim, that he does is an error of heathendom, which deifies stocks, stones, rivers, hills, and many other created substances. With this imperfection, to which we believe Christians can all subscribe to consistently with their faith, we ask why not be consistent in the interpretation of other Scriptures, and believe that inasmuch as God created all things, he imparted to man the power to breathe and live, not by personal contact, but by his power by which he controls all things? "But," says the objector, "why did he not merely tell Adam to live, or bid him exist? Why so particular to state that God breathed into his nostrils," unless it be to show immediate contact and reception of immortality?" We would answer that we do not feel safe to rely entirely upon conjecture, on which the last question seems to be entirely based. For this declaration in the Word of God that man received immortality at his creation, or that he has received it at any time since; but, rather, he is encouraged to seek for it, as for something not as yet in his possession. This being the case and there being recorded declarations in the Word of God that the word, breath of God, is used in various senses, or to convey other ideas than that of immortality, it would be well to examine some of the evidences, at least, before a final conclusion.

We are not told definitely in the Word that the declaration "by the breath of God frost is given" means the controling power or omnipotence of the Almighty over all his works; Yet we believe that frost, ice, or snow, are not part of God, but are brought about by his everlasting power, or his omnipotent will. The breath of life received by Adam, was not a part of God, but rather power received from God to breathe his atmosphere and live. We have an illustration however in this same chapter of Genesis, where God made woman, who is also, it is claimed, an immortal being. But for reasons not set forth in the Word, there [illegible] declaration that God breathed in [illegible] nostrils, neither that she received [illegible] part of Adam's breath; but Adam [illegible]tes that she was bone of his bones and flesh of his flesh. Another illustration of God's power to bring to life without breathing, or calling for breath, spirit or soul to enter the body is found in the raising of Lazarus, as well others in the case of whom he spake into existence from death by the word of his power. I conclude then, with Job, that life is given by the power of God, and is under his control, and it is not a part of God himself, but something he holds in his hands—speaking after the manner of men, and also after the manner of Holy Writ as follows: "I whose hand is the soul of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind." (Job 12: 10.)

We also find language connected with the words "breath of God" that convey quite an opposite meaning to giving of life, existence etc.: "And he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked." (Is. 11: 4.) "Out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations." (Rev. 19: 15.) Does any one suppose that breath, rod, and sharp sword spoken of in these passages are really literal things? or that they are a part of the Almighty in any sense. Are they not simple figures of the exertions and use of his power?

Let us believe the Word of God, rather than man, lest we come under condemnation, to the class of whom Jesus said—"And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." (John 5: 40.) The life that is hid with Christ in God, and which is brought to light by the gospel, will be given only to those who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, and honor, and immortality." The record is sure. "He that hath the Son, hath life: and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life" (1 John 5: 12.) the oppositions of orthodoxy falsely so called, notwithstanding. H. W.

Toulon, Ill.

> "Blessed are the dead, which die in the Lord, from henceforth; Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." (Rev. 14: 13.)

The Spirit of Truth confirms this heavenly testimony, that the righteous dead are blessed, henceforth, namely from that time forward, that they may rest from toil. The apostle Paul, towards the close of his arduous labors in proclaiming the Gospel, or glad tidings of the kingdom of God, says: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course [career.] As a faithful minister of the gospel," one "born of God." he had overcome by patient endurance, persecutions, afflictions, necessities, distresses, stripes and imprisonments, etc., and hence he "desired to depart and be with Christ," thereby signifying his desire to "sleep in Jesus," and "rest from the days of adversity" (Ps. 94: 13), or wearysome toil as enumerated by him. (2 Cor. 11: 23-27.) Moreover he warns all who will live godly in Christ, that they must "suffer persecution" (2 Tim. 3: 12), even as Christ himself had previously declared to his disciples, saying, "If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you." (John 15: 20.) It is evident, therefore, that the aged apostle to the Gentiles indulged in no expectation of rest by entering into heaven, as his language is commonly construed to indicate, but refreshing repose as in sleep, from his wearisome labor; inasmuch as when near the time of his decease he exclaims "henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day [of the glorious appearing of Christ]; and not to me only, but to them also, that love his appearing." (2 Tim. 4: 8.) This is in accordance with his exhortation to Titus, to be "looking for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of the great God our Savior, Jesus Christ." as then only, was the time he anticipated heavenly rest, even "when the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, to reward every man according as his works." (Mat. 16: 27; 2 Cor. 5: 10; Rev. 22: 12.) Seeing that this mortal shall then put on immortality, and the body be redeemed from all iniquity, the longing desire of the apostle was, not to be unclothed, for, says he, "to abide in the flesh would be to serve the Lord,"—as is manifest in all his apostles (Rom. 8: 22, [illegible] : 2-4; Phil. 1: 21-25), [illegible] the longing of the [illegible] (Is. [illegible] 18, 19.) Moreover in his epistle to the church at Colosse he declares "Your life [immortal] is hid with Christ in God, and when Christ, who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Yea, and "be like him" (1 John [illegible] : 2; Rom. 6: 5), a condition of being whereof nothing short could satisfy the Psalmist of Israel, (Ps. 17: 15.)

In the divine parable it is related of the ten virgins, that while the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept, contrary to the attitude commanded by Christ, namely; their lights burning, and like unto men waiting for their Lord." (Luke 12: 35, 36.) But, the wise, it appears, had oil in their vessels, a type of their unity to Christ by means of the Holy Spirit, and whereby they were "sealed unto the day of redemption." Therefore, when the coming of the bridegroom was announced, they were found ready and went in with him to the marriage, as it is written: "Blessed are all they who are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb." (Rev. 19: 9.) But the foolish virgins, who represent all those of the human race, not "born of the Spirit, the Spirit of adoption," otherwise, "born of God" by their culpable neglect to ask for, or seek to obtain that promised heavenly "life and light," were not in a proper condition to appear at the sacred banquet; being in their mortal filthy garments, and not adorned with "the wedding garment" of immortality. Therefore to such it will be hereafter said by Christ "I know you not!" Alas! "God will despise their image." (Ps. 73: 20)

Except a man be born again, says Christ, he cannot enter the kingdom of God, inasmuch as that which is born of the flesh, is flesh, (vile, mortal), but that which is born of the Spirit is spirit (holy, spiritual), hence it is written, "flesh and blood [the components of Adamic life] cannot inherit the kingdom of God." (1 Cor. 15: 50.) "The washing of regeneration" from fleshly defilements, can only be performed by the operation of the Holy Spirit; and such cleansing is therefore indispensably necessary for all mankind, in order to attain eternal life; for "the Spirit is life" (Rom. 8: 10), life derived from God through Christ alone; being wholly distinct from ordinary or natural life, which is shown thus: "As the Father hath life [natural] in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life [spiritual] in himself." (Jno. 5: 26.) Nor by any other means whatever than this spiritual life which is "the light of men" (Jno. 1: 4-9), even the Holy "Spirit of wisdom and understanding" can man discern "the deep things of God;" as it is written: "What man knoweth [understandeth] the things of man, except by the spirit [life natural] which is in him; even so, the things of God, knoweth no man, but by the Spirit [life spiritual] which is of God." (1 Cor. 2: 11-14.) And, hence, by this regenerating power of God, man is not only privileged with a new birth, "born of God," but he is enabled to "walk in newness of life," "live in the Spirit,"—and "filled with the Spirit."

It was, however, Christ Jesus only, "the Holy One of God" who posessed this holy unction "without measure" (Jno. 3: 34.) Man merely receives it from him, "of his fullness." (ch. 1: 16.) And of all such persons, it is written: "If we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." (Rom. 6: 5.) This was the only resemblance the apostle Paul so earnestly desired when he exclaimed—"If by any means, I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." (Phil. 3: 11.) By this Divine power only, can man "worship God in spirit and in truth (Jno. 4: 23, 24), and be assured that they possess eternal life (Jno. [illegible] 11: 26; 1 Jno. 5: 1[illegible].) At the glorious advent of the [illegible] their vile body," by [illegible] like his [illegible] body, shining in the effulgence [illegible] ing life.

Nominal Christians, foolish virgins, slumbering and sleeping on religious ceremonies, and forms of worship, awake, awake, from the brink of "the resurrection to damnation!" Behold he was graciously sent to preach the "glad tidings of salvation," even "the Gospel of the kingdom of God," has at the same time warned you that "now," especially "Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation." Therefore delay not or the door to the marriage may be shut. Diligently and devoutly both "ask" and "seek" to possess this inestimable treasure, even "the pearl of great price." It is to be obtained "without money and without price or cost; for know ye not that you are "wretched and poor and blind and naked?" (Rev. 3; 17.) "The hidden manna," "the true bread from heaven," "the bread of life," is now freely offered to them who are perishing with hunger." Strive, therefore, for "that meat which endureth unto everlasting life" (John 6: 27, 51, 54), even the promised Holy Spirit, "the Spirit of Adoption" graciously offered "for the life of the world."

On the other hand, ye "hidden ones," who possess the heavenly light and life, "beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, according to the tradition of men." The outward ceremony of "baptism by water" never can change you into "a new creature in Christ Jesus." (2 Cor. 5: 17.) Nothing short of the "one baptism" by Christ, [illegible] Acts 10: 43, 44), poured [illegible] true and faithful believers in his Gospel, can procure "remission of sins." (Acts 2: 38, 39.) For it is only "the blood [type of life] of Jesus Christ that cleanseth from all sin." (1 John 1: 7.) By that holy annointing we are "baptized into Christ," have "put on Christ," and are "sealed unto the day of redemption." Therefore, it is written—"He that believeth [the Gospel] and is baptized [into Christ] shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mk. 16: 16.) Therefore "Quench not," also "grieve not the Holy Spirit" in these perilous times of the last days by ignoring its inestimable value; seeing that "your adversary, the Devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." But in all your wrestling "put on the whole armor of God," and being thus equipped, under "the Captain of our salvation, who was made perfect through sufferings," it shall be truly inscribed on your tomb—"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

Our Young Folks.

A LOVING SPIRIT.

How many deeds of kindness
Each one of us may do,
Although we have so little strength,
And little wisdom, too.
It wants a loving spirit,
Much more than strength, to prove
How many things we all may do
For others by our love.

Uncle Nathan sat on a bench, with a pair of round eyed spectacles on the tip of his nose. His mouth was puckered and drawn till it looked like a fat pincushion, and his blunt black finger was pressed hard on the open page of a little spelling-book, as though he thought he could take the learning like [illegible].

"What you name dat?" he asked of a little girl sitting on the bench beside him. He [illegible] as he spoke, and shook his head, "I done forgot him oncet more," said he. "Tell me dis yere time, and I will make a pint of remembering him."

"That is A, Uncle Nathan. A is right easy," replied the child.

"Sure 'nough. So he is when you knows him, [illegible] yere one done gone entirely." Uncle Nathan rubbed his woolly head in a despairing sort of way, but he held all the closer to his book.

"Can't you read uncle?" said a kindly voice beside him.

The old man looked, with his finger still on the obstinate letter A.

"No, massa," said he, sorrowfully. "I can't read, and 'pears like I can't never learn. 'Pears like I'm too old."

"O no, not a bit of it. You can learn to read as well as any body," replied the visitor. "Can you spell?"

"No, massa, I can't spell, neither, and I don't know my letters. I learns 'em, and learns 'em, but somehow they gets in such acconfumblement, I can't pick 'em out no way."

"But you wish to learn, don't you?"

"Sartain, massa. That is why dis yere ole man holds on to come to the Sunday school along o' the chilerns. I loves Jesus and I spects to get to heaven when I dies; but I just wishes I could read a bit in the Bible before I gets. So I holds out to try, but it is a right slow piece of business."

"You mustn't be discouraged, uncle," said the gentleman.—"Never fear but you'll read the Bible yet. Come, now, I'll teach you. You see that letter Look at it well and tell me what it is like."

Uncle Nathan puckered his mouth harder than ever, and squinted his eyes till they looked like two button holes.

"Dis yer is a correct picter of a hoop, massa," said he at length.

"Very good," replied the gentleman. "That is O. Now you certainly can remember the letter that looks like a hoop is called O."

"Sartain. I'll never let him slip. O! Dat ar's a hoop. O," returned Uncle Nathan, gravely.

"Yes. Now what does this letter look like?

Uncle Nathan squinted again, and twisted his face till it seemed as though he was trying to unscrew it like a match box.

"Well, 'pears like dat ar is the likeness of a buck saw," said he, after scratching his head and rubbing his nose.

"That is so. Well that letter is called X. And surely you can remember X looks like a buck saw."

"Dat is de troof, massa. I done remember that easy. I'll always know him, sure."

"Now, then O-X spells the biggest animal you ever saw," said Mr. Tisdale.

Uncle Nathan rolled his eye like a huckleberry in a cup of milk.

"You're a fooling dis chile," said he, shaking the woolly tuft on the top of his head, doubtfully.

"O no, uncle, I am not. O-X spells ox, as sure as your are born."

You ought to have seen that negro's face shine, then!

"O-X ox, dis darkey ken spell!" he cried. "O-X ox! I done got him now! Dat is spelling. And dis yer ole man has done it hisself. Dat is more'n I ever looked to do. Yes, sah! I can learn to read now, sure. I sees!"

Sure enough he could. He had found the key, and from that time went on slowly and steadily, till at last, on the proudest day of his life, he sat down to spell painfully out the first verse of John's Gospel:

"'In—the—be—'—dat's a hard feller!'b-e-g-i-n-n-i-ng—was—the—Word,—and—the—Word—was—with—God—and—the—Word—was—God.'"

Uncle Nathan felt ready to go to heaven, now. He could read the Bible.—Youth's Companion.

—We wish Uncle Nathan could have had some one to tell him about the new earth. Mankind do not, and are not to go to heaven. They are (the righteous) to inherit the earth. ED.

Nearly all children love to hear ghost stories. Here is a sensible one:

THE BEST WAY TO TREAT GHOSTS.

If we only learn to fear God in the right way, we should learn, at the same time, never to fear anything else. Those who fear God properly are the bravest people in the world. The Bible tells us that "The wicked flee when no man pursueth, but the righteous is bold as a lion."

Let me tell how a little girl once got over a great fright, just by fearing God and having right thoughts about him. She went to pay a visit to her aunt in the country. While there, she had to sleep in a room by herself. This was not very pleasant to her, for at home she always slept with her sister.

One night, during this visit, [illegible] which she thought she saw as plainly as could be, was turned a little to one side, and was not looking at her. She said to herself, "It is a ghost, I am sure it is!" and she pulled the bedclothes over her head. Presently she said to herself, "Well, what if there is a ghost here, is not God here too? and does not the Bible say that nothing can harm those who trust in him?" Then she tried to put her trust in God. This gave her courage, and she resolved to take another look at the white thing. It did look very much like a living thing of some kind. "Well, if it is," she thought to herself, "I'll speak to it;" and she cried out, "Who's there?" The figure did not stir nor answer. There it stood as still and white as ever.

"My father says there are no ghosts," she said to herself. "And if there are, what harm is it likely they want to do to me? I'll just put my trust in God, and he can take care of me." This thought gave her courage, and made her feel more comfortable. Still, there stood the figure.

"I'll know who or what you are," said the little girl. "Mother says frights are worse in people's fancies than anywhere else." Then she jumped out of bed and marched straight up to it. How many children would have done that? I am afraid some grown up people would hardly have the courage to do this. But this dear child went straight up to it. And what do you suppose it proved to be? Why, it was only the moonlight shining through the curtains on the wall. "How much it did look like a head with eyes and nose and mouth," she said: and then jumped into bed again. For a while she lay and looked at it But it only looked like moonshine, now, and no ghost; and she wondered how she could have been so deceived And that I dare say is as much as ghosts ever are—only moonshine. She kept her eye on the soft silver light till she fell into a sweet sleep again.—Rev. Dr. Newton.

The Bible Class.

"Restitution of all Things."

The Greek word here translated "restitution," is apokatastasis, and only occurs this once in the New Testament. But the cognate verb is used in the Septuagint version of the Old Testament, at Ex. 14: 26; "Stretch out thy hand," &c., "that the waters may come again upon the Egyptians," and in the next verse, "and the sea returned." Here the verb apokathistemi, corresponding to the noun apokatastasis, is translated "to come again," and "to return." This is its true and constant meaning. I can find no instance where it bears the signification "to finish" or "to accomplish." There may be such, but I am ignorant of it. The preposition apo in composition with a verb, and prefixed kata is used in this sense of "again" (which we here give it) in all places where it occurs in the New Testament. These instances are three, viz., Ephe. 2: 17; Col. 1: 20, and 22. In each of these cases the word apokatallato occurs, and is translated "to reconcile"—katalatto is "to conciliate," apo katalatto is "to re-conciliate" or "re-concile." In like manner katastasis is "an establishing," and apo katastasis is "re-establishing," or "a restitution," as our translators rightly have it. The Latin vulgate gives the same rendering, "restitutio." The French and German do the same. I have no other versions now by me to consult, but I doubt not they coincide.

Donnegan, in his Lexicon, gives under apokatastasis the following meaning, "re-establishment," "replacement," "restoration," "return," and no others Pickering has, under the word, these meanings "restoration," "restitution," "re-establishment," "return" and no others. Donnegan and Pickering based their Lexicons on Schneider and Schrevelius; two rather weighty authorities. No such meaning as "completion," "accomplishment" or "finishing," are seen in their explanations of the word

S., in his endeavors to improve the common reading, was doubtless influenced by good motives; but we should be very cautious how we meddle with the received text, even with the best motives. The most diligent examination should always precede rejection of the present version, in any word or sentence therein, or evil consequences must ensue. In the present instance, I think the sentence, as it now stands, far from "conveying no meaning," is full of meaning: the whole verse is, "Whom (Jesus Christ) the heaven must receive, until the times of the restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began:" that is "Jesus Christ shall remain in heaven until the end of the world, when the new earth shall succeed the [illegible]

EFFECTUAL PRAYER ILLUSTRATED.—Dr Guthrie, in his Discourses on the Parables, gives an illustration from Eastern life, which throws a flood of light on the success of the woman pleading with the unjust judge. He says of her importunity:

This art is carried to the highest perfection in the East. A traveller in Persia tells how he was besieged by one who solicited a gift more costly than he was prepared to give. The hoary, and as the people esteemed him, holy mendicant, sat himself down before his gate, throwing up a rude tent to shelter himself from the noonday sun. There he remained like a sentinel, nor left his post but to follow the traveller out of doors, and return with him. Taking snatches of sleep during the day, when the other rested in the house, he kept up a hideous howling and clamorous demands, all the hours of the night—an annoyance which, persisted in for successive days and nights, and even weeks, seldom fails, as you can suppose, to gain its object.

Such were the means by which the widow gained hers. So soon as ever the unjust judge took his seat at the gate of the city, where in the East courts are held and all causes heard, his eye, as it roamed over the crowd, fell on her. There she was, and always was—sorrow in her dress, but determination in the flash of her eye; her form bent down with grief, but her spirit unbroken, resolved to give the judge no rest, until he had avenged her of her adversary. Now breaking in on the business of the court, she is on her feet, passionately demanding justice, and now, stretched upon the ground at his feet, she piteously implores it. Nor can he shake her off. Denied her suit, she follows him to his house to interrupt his leisure and embitter his pleasures. Her voice ringing loud on the threshold demanding entry, she bursts into his presence, and is dragged away by the servants thrust out, but only to return as the ball struck rebounds, the billows shattered on the rocks fall back into the deep to gather volume and strength for a new attack. And as by constant dashing, the waves in time cut into the cliff, which, yielding to the incessant action of a weaker element, some day bows his proud head, and precipitating itself forward, falls into the sea, which, swallowing it up, sweeps over it with jubilant, triumphant waves, so the persistence of the widow overcomes the resistance of the judge. Diamond cuts diamond. She conquers by importunity. Yielding to her requests, he says: "Because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me."

JOSHUA V. HIMES, - - - - EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 28, 1871.

As we allow a reasonable latitude to the expression of opinions in our columns, we wish it understood that the editor is in no case responsible for the sentiments of correspondents. His responsibility, so far as opinions are concerned, extends only to editorial matter and selections.

CHRIST was hated without a cause. He told his disciples that they would be, and they were. They are to-day. They are called "bigots," "illiberal," "fanatic," "narrow," "dogmatic," every sort of bad name because they cling to the Word and Gospel of God. The Cainites would kill them to-day had they the power.—Zion's Herald.

—But there are some denominations of Christians—Adventists for instance—who are worse hated, worse named, worse treated by the professed "Sethites," than they ordinarily are by the "Cainites." They are not only called fanatics, but infidels; not simply bigots, but ignoramuses. We don't think our orthodox friends would kill us; but many of them certainly would like to "kill out" our doctrine by closing our mouths and stopping our presses if they had the power. At least, they say so.

WE recently met the suggestion that Advent publications be placed on sale in all the leading bookstores of the country. We were of the opinion that the author of the suggestion had not had much experience in placing Advent works on the market. The following from a Toronto brother is in point:

The editors of denominational journals, while exposing what they affirm to be an old heresy revived—a doctrine whose tendency is 'evil and only evil,' with strange inconsistency refuse to publish a scriptural exposition of their error; while booksellers—professedly Christian men—will not allow Dr. Leask's tract to be seen in their shops; while light, frivolous, and sensational or profane literature everywhere abounds.

—"Leading booksellers" cannot afford to allow Advent literature on their shelves. French novels would not injure their reputation: Adventism would. A curious comment, this, on the time we live in!

OUR WITNESS OF IMMORTALITY.

Dr. Hall says: "The popular impression is that ordinary men live wholly or mainly [illegible] the present. If the present, as distinguished from the eternal, be meant, it is true. But it is not true that most men live in the present as contrasted with the nearer future. On the contrary, the present is little in most minds but as a step to the future. The child longs for boyhood, and the boy for manhood. Manhood longs for the time of establishment, and when it is reached—if it be—for the time of rest and relief from care. So the human spirit, by its projecting of itself into the future, appears in some vague way to own its present unsatisfactory condition, and to 'feel after, if happily it may find' something better in advance. It would be strange if this life-long habit of counting on the future were to be broken abruptly off after death and end in nothing. It is the witness within ourselves of our immortality."

We say: "Most men use the present as a step to the future, but [illegible] direction [illegible] God, downward and not upward. And it is impossible to seriously conceive that God should have created a race of free agents with such natures that they must live forever, whether they would or not, foreknowing that a large portion of them would inevitably so pervert their freedom as to enter upon a course ever downward in its tendency, causing them to eternally retrograde from what he designed man should be, thus incurring a never-ending conflict with the Divine will, and as a consequence, also, eternal misery. Hence, while we find in some men a longing for closer relations to God, and aspirations for what is truly 'something better in advance,' we should not conclude from this that all men will live forever; but, rather, that all men may live forever if they chose to fit themselves for an eternal existence.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

SHELBYVILLE, ILL.

MONDAY, March 13. We have quite a stir among our Pædo-Baptist brethren to-day, on the subject of Baptism, which came up yesterday, in my illustration of 1 Cor. 15: 29, concerning baptism for the resurrection of the dead. Buried with Christ in baptism, in hope of the resurrection. I said nothing against sprinkling, but stuck to the Bible, which says he that is immersed into Christ, puts on Christ. (Rom. 6: 3, 4.) A Presbyterian brother desired baptism, and I told him I would attend to it. This produced a little feeling on the part of some, who thought I had a new Bible, for they certainly knew, and thought I ought to know that the word baptism, meant to sprinkle as well as immerse. But as I did not know this, I must be set down for an ignoramus, with them, until they shall study the Bible and find out what the Word does mean. I do not feel much disturbed, this matter will come out right in the end.

At night I spoke on perfect peace, and had a season of much blessedness. The elements seemed quite calm. But the discussion which begins to-morrow night will stir things up again. There is much interest now in reading the Bible, and I hope for still more. There has been great neglect of that Book here, as elsewhere.

TUESDAY, March 14. I was to discuss the subject of future punishment this evening, but my opponent failed to get to town, and so I preached to the audience at their request. I spoke from 1 John 3: 8—"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." I spoke of the moral work of Christ, in which sin, and the works of the devil were destroyed in conversion, saved from sin, sin "forgiven," "blotted out," "washed away," "cleansed from sin." In the end, he will "bruise the head of the serpent, and destroy death and him that had the power of it, that is the devil." This will be in the restitution of all things.

WEDNESDAY, March 15. Had an interesting discussion with some of the Jews. I appealed to their own Scriptures, and showed them that Christ fulfilled them in his first advent, and that they ought to receive him. I quoted to them Is. 53. This chapter I claimed referred to the sufferings and death of Christ. It was really a history of his sufferings, given seven centuries before it was fulfilled. I told them the only explanation that their Rabbies had given of this chapter was, that it referred to the scattered and depressed condition of the Jewish people. They said it meant more than that, and they should inquire of their leading teachers for light.

In the evening I commenced a discussion at Roundy's Hall, with Rev. Mr. Williams, Presbyterian, on the question—"Does the Bible teach that the punishment of the wicked will consist in everlasting misery?" Mr. W. affirmed and I denied. We had three speeches each of twenty minutes, before an intelligent audience who filled the house. I think good will come out of it. I have never felt at liberty before in my long ministry to enter upon a public discussion, on any great religious question. But I felt that the circumstances justified it in this case. I had a good man for an opponent, well versed in the common or popular theology. He went over much ground, and sustained his theory with the usual arguments. I had great liberty in replying, and felt to the praise of God that the cause of truth did not suffer in my hands. I think I made it plain from the Word, that "the wages of sin is death," and not eternal life in misery.

SOME POINTS OF THE DISCUSSION.

Mr. Williams contended that the "Sodomites were now suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. (Jude 7.) That the third angel's message Rev. 14: 9-11 (which all good critics give up) related to the future torment of the wicked. That Rev. 20: 9, 10, related also to the future condition of the lost; but did not explain how "Gog and Magog," could be devoured, and still exist in torment. As to the present condition of the wicked, he said there were three places—"death," "hades" and the "sea," and they were now suffering in one of them. Did not make it clear which! Did not know where the Sodomites were, or where the suffering wicked were located. The locality was of no importance, he thought.

Death meant life in one sense. Second death was eternal life in misery. Destruction meant eternal preservation in hell fire.

In reply I showed that the Sodomites were destroyed by the fire, that the Dead Sea occupies the place of their destruction; and that they are now in hades, the grave, and not in hell fire. That "Gog and Magog," were devoured and were not in existence. That the devil, the beast and false prophet, of Rev. 20: 10, were symbols of pagan and papal Rome, were judged and punished, the same as Idumea in Is. 34: 9, 10, where it is said the fire is not quenched, night nor day; the smoke thereof going up forever." And Rev. 19: 3, is of Babylon, whose smoke "rose up forever and ever." In my closing speech I showed what the Bible taught of the future of the wicked.

1. The "second death in the lake of fire," exclusion from life, and utter irreversible destruction. (Rev. 20: 14; 21: 8.) To be cast into perdition. (2 Pet. 3: 7.)

2. Excision, to be cut off from life. (Ps. 37: 9, 22, 28, 38; Prov. 2: 22.) The life of the ungodly is "cut off."

3. Anathema, which means utter destruction. (Rom. 9: 3.) Paul could not mean that he was willing to suffer eternal misery!

4. Destruction, destroy, and perish, are words that signify utter loss of life. (Mat. 7: 13; 10: 28; 2 Cor. 2: 15; Acts 3: 23; 2 Thes. 1: 8, 9.) Punished with everlasting destruction.

5. Corruption.—"Of the flesh reap corruption." (Gal. 6: 8.) "Utterly perish in their own corruption. (2 Pet. 2: 12.) This is extinction.

6. Consumed, devoured, burned as "chaff," as tares, burned up root and branch, consumed out of the earth. (Mat. 3:12; 13: 30; Mal. 4: 1; Ps. 104: 35.)

7. Place of punishment. Not sheol, or hades, but gehenna where both soul and body are destroyed.

8. Unquenchable fire. Mat. 3: 5. "Burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."

CONCLUSION.

As for the righteous, I showed that they would live. (Lk. 10: 28; Ps. 69: 28); live forever. (Jno. 6: 51–58; Ps. 16: 11.) Christ our life. (Col. 3: 1–3.) Everlasting life. (Gal. 6: 8.) Eternal life. (Mat. 25: 46.) Power of an endless life. (Heb. 7: 16.) Life evermore. (Ps. 133: 3.)

The wicked will die. (Ezk. 18: 4.) Death. (Rom. 5: 23.) Second death. (Rev. 21: 8.) Destroyed. (Mat. 10: 28; 7: 15; 2 Pet. 2: 12.) Perish. (Ps. 37: 20.) Lose life. (Mat. 10: 29.) Perdition. (2 Pet. 3: 7.) Consume. (Ps. 134: 35.) Burnt up. (Mal. 4: 1.) Devoured. (Heb. 10: 27.)

These, with many other texts I brought to prove that instead of suffering everlasting misery in fire, the lost would be utterly extinguished.

The parties now agreed to close the debate. It was conducted in a Christian spirit. Mr. Williams honestly holds the old views, and is a Christian gentleman.

THE AGGRESSIVE CHURCH.

Under cover of the dust raised by Spiritism during twenty years past, the Roman Church has been steadily though silently working to obtain and control political power in this country. In the business metropolis of the land it has succeeded to such an extent that many doubt whether that city, or even its State will ever be freed from their controling influence. Some of the public journals recognize the evils of this growth of Romanism, and protest against its culture by the government. In a late issue the New York Times says:

Did the Catholics, like the Episcopalians or the Methodists, simply hold their faith as a matter of religious belief or feeling, no sane mortal could have a word to say against it. The only reason the subject is ever introduced in these columns, is that this Church, unlike others, is seeking and has gained a political power which is dangerous to our future. Our frothy American "liberals" who dread to have the name of a religious belief ever mentioned in a public journal, except in praise, may as well understand that the Catholic Church of the United States is guided by men as much abler and more far-sighted than their sentimental associates, as Loyola was than the "Evangelicals" of his day. They aim steadily, as did the Jesuits of the Middle Ages, at the control of our schools and charities. And to secure this, and also to strengthen their political power, they follow the illustrious example of the Church in all countries and ages, and seek especially to possess large masses of real estate. Somebody has said that "whoever has control of the real estate of a country, rules that country." Nothing would give the Roman Catholic Church of the United States such power over the masses, as large possessions of land and buildings.

In all civilized countries, the steady progress of liberty and intelligence has been marked by a constant struggle against this corrupting evil of ecclesiastical property. English legislation, from the Magna Charta, by successive acts, to the celebrated statute of Mortmain of George II., has been little else than a history of incessant popular efforts to restrain ecclesiastical corporations from holding excessive properties in real estate, whether held under the title of another for their "use and trust," or whether conveyed directly to them. Spain has only been able by revolution to free herself from this incubus within a few years, and Italy is every year confiscating those burdensome ecclesiastical properties which pay no taxes, and hang like a heavy weight on the neck of the nation. In Mexico one-third of the whole real estate of the country was held by the priests, who controlled thereby every political party, and nothing but the establishment of the Republic enabled the authorities to rid the people of so burdensome an incumbrance, and compel this large interest to contribute to the taxation and education of the country.

In this State (New York) it is estimated that $50,000,000 of real estate held by the Roman Catholic Church. Incessant grants are made to it by our city authorities, on long leases, at merely nominal rates. Splendid cathedrals are being built for it in various cities, and it receives, under school and charity grants, constant aid from the State.

—Thus while Romanism is losing [illegible] no means slowly, attaining power in this land. That it will succeed, as it gladly would do, in bringing this country under Papal control, we do not believe; but that it is destined to make no trouble, as a nation, unless its present rise is checked, can scarcely be doubted.

THE SABBATH.

A friend says, "I wish you could see that your position; that the first-day is the Sabbath is untenable."

In reply I would say: that I hold the Sabbath as the apostles and early Christians did. The first day is called Sabbatos in Acts 20: 7, or Sabbaths. A day of rest, and sacred worship. I do not associate it with the seventh-day, with its rigors of the law; but still, with the practice of the early church I feel a sympathy, and cling to the Christian Sabbath, "Lord's Day," or first day of the week, as a day that should be observed by the church. As it is a day of rest, I know of no more appropriate name, for it, than the Sabbath.

As to the change of the day, we remark that none claim direct, or express legislation on the subject. Br. Preble takes the ground that it was changed, but does not claim special legislation by either Christ or the apostles; but sustains his view by an array of circumstances and facts, if we rightly understand him.

By all means let us have a day of rest. Let us keep it as such, and let us keep it in accordance with apostolical usage and in the spirit of the Gospel. Neither Christ or the apostles enjoined Sabbath-keeping under the Gospel. The following remarks by the editor of the Advance will be read with interest in this connection:

A correspondent objects to the use of the word "Sunday" rather than "Sabbath," and desires editorial light. We indicate, briefly, the facts which bear upon the subject. 1. No direct Scriptural authority can be given for calling the first day of the week the Sabbath. That name is ALWAYS confined in the Bible to the seventh day or the Jewish Sabbath. This holds as true in the New Testament as it does in the Old Testament. The only other name than the numerical one, there given to the first day, is, "the Lord's day." 2. As Paul in the epistle to the Colossians (2: 16, 17) speaks of "the Sabbath-day" as done away, along with "the new moons" and other Jewish "holy days," it would seem wise, to distinguish the weekly Christian worship day from the Jewish, by a separate name, to prevent confusion of ideas and arguments. 3. In so doing, we have our choice of three things: we can, with the Quakers, say "First day;" which is unusual, stiff, and unnatural, unless we and others can agree to name similarly, by number, all the days of the week; or we can say "Lord's day," which is suitable in religious connections and as descriptive of its associations, but is not convenient for constant use, an attempt at which would savor of cant; or we can ordinarily use the recognized secular name "Sunday," as we do the recognized secular names of the other days of the week, without reference to their forgotten heathen origin, of which no one thinks in uttering them. As on the first day of creation the light burst upon the darkness, and as on the same day of the week Christ arose from the dead, as "the Sun of righteousness," dispersing the darkness of the moral world, the current name has even a Christian propriety. 4. It is impossible for Christians to make the name "Sabbath" apply to the first day of the week in all countries, as that name is in many of their languages the ordinary and established secular name for the seventh day or Saturday. There lies before us, as we write, a Protestant religious newspaper, in the Greek language, published at Athens, each "Sabbato," or Sabbath, which means Saturday. There also lies before us, a similar Spanish newspaper, published at Seville every "Sabado," or Sabbath; that again is every Saturday. The same holds true in Italian. What confusion would arise, should evangelical Christians in Spain, Italy and Greece, and in the adjoining lands, undertake to call the first day of the week "Sabbath," when all their neighbors give that name to the seventh day! This linguistic fact, by the way, incidentally but clearly shows, by evidence from each branch of the Christian church, the Greek and the Latin, that the Christian "Lord's day" was not thought in early times to be "the Sabbath," with only a change of the day of observance; it was regarded rather as its successor, a separate, though kindred institution, resting on distinct Christian grounds. This need not prevent us, however, from speaking of it, at times, popular and analogically, as the Christian Sabbath.

WHAT TRACTS WILL DO.

The following extract from a recent letter to the Crisis shows what tracts will do, and as a sufficient answer to the prejudice of those who think they are of but little account:

Thank the Lord, just in the time of need Eld. D. D. Reed and wife came to our wicked town, and scattered tracts. Our preacher was pleased to denominate them "fire-brands," and warned the congregation not to read them, for "they taught damnable heresies." Notwithstanding, I ventured to read a portion of one on the state of the dead, just to see what the foolish Adventists would teach about that which no man could know. In reading I went for assistance to the pastor. But he could not help me out; then I asked God for assistance as never before, and took the Bible and Cruden's Concordance, and sat down for ten days and examined the highest authority for quotations to assist me in the strange and humiliating dilemma in which I found myself. After a thorough investigation, notwithstanding the inveterate hatred and contempt in which I held the abominable doctrine of the sleep of the dead, I could only lift up my hands and exclaim, Glory be to God, I have found the truth! I then truly felt that the scales had fallen from my eyes. Now I believe the Bible as never before; the knots are loosed, and an illiterate man may understand it.

—By the way, have you done anything for the tract cause this year?

Making an entry of charities on our worldly ledger is a sure way to have our whole account thrown out at the judgment day.

Believers That Never Die.

Remarks on the conversation between our Lord and Martha as recorded in John 11: 20-28, being an extract from a letter from a gentleman in Philadelphia to his friend in Illinois.

Life and immortality were brought to life by our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. The voice from heaven, speaking of him, said, "This is my beloved Son, hear him." It becomes us, therefore, to listen to what he said (especially on these subjects), with the most profound reverence and attention. It is scarcely possible for us to conceive of the blackness of the darkness that obscured the heathen mind on the subject of the resurrection of the body and the life everlasting; and it is lamentable to think that even now,

"Amidst the blaze of gospel day," many of the so-called wise men and philosophers of the world, like the Sadducees of old, profess to believe that "there is no resurrection neither angel nor spirit."

It seems to me that the full meaning of the declaration of our Lord in his conversation with Martha, as related in this place, is not understood by the generality of readers. "Lord, if thou hadst been here," said she, "my brother had not died." (Mary said the same a little while afterwards), and some of the Jews that were present asked, "Could not this man, which opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?" These Jews had, no doubt, seen Christ display his miraculous power by giving sight to the blind. It is evident, also, that the sisters had heard of his having miraculously restored to health some that had been lying at the point of death; and they therefore felt assured that, had he been with them, he would not have permitted their brother, whom he so loved, to have died. Martha goes farther, and expresses the belief that even then, though Lazarus had been dead four days, if he (Christ) would ask power of God to raise him from the grave, God would give it him.

She did not then know that Christ of his own power could raise her brother from the dead; for when our Lord says, "Thy brother shall rise again," she replies, "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day."

Then follows the glorious declaration of our Lord—of him who had life in himself, even as the Father had life in himself—and on whom all our hopes of immortality [illegible] am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, shall live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"

It does not appear that Martha comprehended the meaning of these declarations; for she replied, "Yea, Lord, I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world;" an answer quite irrelevant to the question.

It is clear to my mind that she did not then conceive him to be the Lord and giver of life; the incarnate God—the fountain of life and immortality. And we should not think it strange that she did not understand the saying, seeing that his disciples, who were with him continually, and to whom he so repeatedly announced, in the clearest possible language, that he should be crucified and rise again on the third day, were unable to understand that saying: "it was hid from them that they perceived it not." Even they considered him as only "a prophet mighty in deed and in word," whom they "trusted would have redeemed Israel" from the Roman yoke; and when he died, as he predicted, they were so bewildered and demoralized as to be "as sheep without a shepherd."

Having stated that these declarations of our Lord were not, as I think, fully understood by Martha, let me ask, how are they understood by us of the present day? That he is "the resurrection and the life," is the belief of Christians of all denominations; therefore it is unnecessary to dwell upon that part of his discourse. No one can believe in Christ without believing this. After having given Martha this assurance, he adds, "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, shall live." ('Tis a pity our translators did not word this passage so as to express its meaning more clearly. We Protestants cannot accept the doctrine that men may believe in Christ after they have departed this life, and so obtain a blissful immortality; yet the wording of our translation might be understood as teaching it.)

Our Lord's meaning unquestionably is, that believers in him though they may die a temporal death, shall be resurrected by him at his second coming to a life of everlasting felicity.

In John 3: 36, we read that "he that believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life;" not shall have but hath it now—in present possession, abiding in him (John 3: 24), and which shall continue to abide in him, though he may die a temporal death; forasmuch as he has been made a partaker of the life which is in Christ, which life is, necessarily immortal.

Our Lord ends his discourse with Martha by saying, "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die" (Some commentators write "shall never die eternally." But while this leads us away from what I believe to be the proper meaning, it does not help their meaning a whit; inasmuch as it is most certain that no believer in Christ, whether he be living or dead, shall die eternally. It is this last declaration of our Lord which, I think, is not fully understood. The commentators that I have consulted seem to consider the two declarations as being about tantamount to each other, and both to mean the same thing: i. e., that believers in Christ, whether they be living or dead, shall have eternal life; forgetting our Lord's words, that some shall "never die;" meaning most certainly, a temporal death. As I understand it, our Lord speaks of two distinct classes of believers; of one class that should die a temporal death, and of another that should "never die," either here or hereafter.

I know it is easier to raise difficulties than to overcome them; but I think there will be no difficulty in understanding our Lord's words in the sense I take them, when we turn to 1 Cor. 15: 51, where the Apostle says, "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." See also 1 Thes. 4: 15-18, viz.: "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

[illegible] Apostle, and that by the word "we," he unquestionably means the saints which shall be "alive and remain" at the second coming of the Lord, I am compelled to believe that they are the persons of whom Christ says, "Whosoever liveth [is living] and believeth in me shall never die."

The Apostle does not say, nor are we to understand, that all human beings that are alive upon the earth at the Lord's coming shall be changed without tasting temporal death. He spoke only of believers in Christ; and, as I think, of the first resurrection. But admitting for a moment, for the sake of argument, that all persons that are then alive shall be changed without tasting of temporal death, it does not militate in the least against my understanding of our Lord's saying to Martha, that whoever is living and believeth in him shall never die; for we know that the wicked shall be condemned to suffer the bitter pains of an eternal death.

If I were asked to write an account of the conversation that passed at this time between our Lord and Martha, according to my understanding of it, I would do it thus: When Martha met him, knowing that he had raised others to health and strength who were at the point of death, she expressed her belief that if he had been there he would not have suffered her brother to die. Our Lord, wishing to console her, and yet not desiring to tell her distinctly what he was about to do, assured her that her brother should rise again. She, in reply, expressed her belief that he would rise in the general resurrection at the last day. She did not know that, of himself, our Lord had the power to raise her brother from the grave while he was yet speaking; but she believed that if he would ask that power of God, God would give it him. Our Lord then told her that he was the resurrection and the life; that it was at his voice that those in their graves, at the time of the general resurrection, should come forth; it was only necessary for him, at that moment, to say "Lazarus come forth!" and her brother would be immediately alive again; and informed her that those that believed in him while they lived in this world, though they might suffer temporal death, should be raised from their graves, and live with him eternally; and, that those believers in him who remained alive upon the earth at his second coming, should "never die," either here or hereafter, but should be changed, and, with the resurrected believers, be caught up to meet him in the air, and be with him forever in glory.

I offer these remarks with much diffidence. I cannot say whether they be new or not; but the explanation I have given to our Lord's words is more satisfactory to my mind than any I have met.—J. J. in Prophetic Times.

Important Extracts. No. 2.

From Smith's N. T. Dictionary, Ed. 1832. HELL. This is a word much used, and but little understood, the Pagans mean one thing by it. The Mahomedans another. The Jews another. The Catholics and other sectarians another, and the Scripture writers something different from them all. The original word called hell in our language, is sheol or hades, and signifies (1) the grave. Acts 2: 27, compared with Ps. 16: 10. Christ's soul was not left in hell. The meaning is, that God did not leave him in the grave to see corruption; the soul meaning his life. Christ says the gates of hell shall not prevail against his church, (Mat. 16: 18.) Death, or the grave which receives the subjects of other kings, and even brings kings from their thrones, shall not destroy my kingdom, as it cannot hold me nor my subjects, I will raise them all from the dead.

2. The word means the earth and air, the place where the wicked will be destroyed at the day of judgment. (Mat. 10: 28.) "And fear not them which kill the body; but cannot kill the soul, but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." (Lk. 12: 5.) "But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear; fear him, which after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell. Yea, I say unto you, fear him." These places speak plainly of the soul and body being destroyed in hell. Allowing that hell means the earth and air, we may see the propriety of what Peter said (2 Pet. 3: 7.) "But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." Perdition here means destruction [illegible] evident that at the last day, this earth will be dissolved or melted. This will make the whole globe a lake of fire. Here wicked men and devils will be destroyed. This fire is prepared for the devil and his angels, and for ungodly men. (Mat. 25; 41.) "Then shall he say to them on his left hand, depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." In this verse, the devil and his angels, and the wicked of all nations are sentenced together to depart into everlasting fire, which will make an end of them. This agrees with what is said in Rev. 20: 14, 15. "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire, this is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the Book of Life was cast into the lake of fire." What is called hell in one place, is called a lake of fire in another. In one place it is said the earth is reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. Another place tells of being cast into a lake of fire. Another place tells of being cast into hell fire. Another, of the soul and body being destroyed in hell. These must all mean one thing. This is the hell mentioned in the Scriptures. This being the meaning of hell, we may see the meaning of many places in the Scriptures, such as these: (Mat. 5: 22.) "But whosoever shall say, Thou fool! shall be in danger of hell fire." (ch. 11: 23). "And thou Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shall be brought down to hell." (Deut. 32: 22). "For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase and shall set on fire the foundation of the mountains." (Ps. 10: 17). "The wicked shall be turned into hell with all the nations that forget God." The horrid descriptions of a hell where men are tormented eternally, drinking melted lead, sulphur, etc., are the idle inventions of ignorant priests to scare the simple into blind submission to such tyrants, and ought to be rejected by all who read the Scriptures. The earth on fire, is the hell into which the wicked will be cast at the last day, and be destroyed forever as the tares are gathered and burnt. (Mat. 13: 40.)

GATHERED FRAGMENTS.

At the present advance of intellectual refinement philosophy will prove faith to be a farce—Adam a relic—this world the work of an earthquake—the Bible a tale of credulity—and the Almighty nothing more than an honorary member of the great college of science and arts.—Josh Billings.

The church's pilgrimage is nearly done. Yet she is not less a pilgrim as its end draws nigh. Nay, more so. The last stage of the journey is the dearest for her. Her path lies through the thickest darkness that the world has yet felt. It seems as if it were only by the fitful blaze of conflagrations that we can now shape our way. It is the sound of falling kingdoms that is guiding us onward. It is the fragments of broken thrones lying across our path that assures us that our route is the true one, and that its end is near, —that end, the morning with its songs; and in that morning, a kingdom; and in that kingdom, glory; and in that glory, the everlasting rest, the Sabbath of eternity.—Bonar.

"Come, then, and added to thy many crowns,
Receive yet one, the crowns of all the earth,
Thou who alone art worthy! It was thine
By ancient covenant, 'ere nature's birth;
And thou hast made it thine by purchase since,
And overpaid its value with thy blood.
Thy saints proclaim thee king; and in their hearts
Thy title is engraven with a pen
Dipp'd in the fountain of eternal love.
Thy saints proclaim thee king; and thy delay
Gives courage to their foes, who, could they see
The dawn of thy last advent, long desired,
Would creep into the bowels of the hills,
And flee for safety to the falling rocks."
—Cowper.

"Though it is written, 'Of that day and hour knoweth no man,' yet our incarnate Lord, in answer to the inquiries of his disciples, gave certain signs which should precede his coming, and said, 'When ye shall see all these things come to pass, know that it is near, even at the doors.' And why did he give these signs, if it were not important that we should observe them? He reproved those Scribes and Pharisees who did not take pains to observe the signs of his first coming. Had they done so, they might have been prepared for its solemn issues.

"Perhaps you may wonder when I say that, though I have been so long [illegible] to my mind, there is that which is so emphatic in the Scriptures of truth on this solemn yet glorious theme, that I am amazed Christians of the present day do not feel more like the early Christians, who would fain have hastened the day by their eager longings for it.—Phebe Farmer.

The following curious document is in the latest issue of the secret papers of the Tuileries. The author of the letter is M. Louvet, who was a member of the "Liberal" Ollivier Ministry, and it was written four months before the birth of the Prince Imperial:—

"Saumur, Nov. 17, 1853.

"Sire,—The Church of Puy, Notre Dame, near Saumur, possesses one of the most precious relics of Christianity—I mean a girdle of the Holy Virgin, given by William VI., Duke of Aquitaine, who brought it from the Holy Land. According to the tradition it was woven by Mary herself. The archives of the Church of Puy and many other historical documents attest the authenticity of this relic. The kings of France in all time had great faith in this girdle. Anne of Austria wore it at St. Germain in 1628, when she gave birth to the Prince who became Louis XIV. If, Sire, it would be agreeable to you to place her Imperial Majesty under the protection of this relic during the great event which is about to crown your domestic happiness and consolidate the repose of France, I feel sure that the cure and the Bishop would be most happy to comply with your Majesty's desire. I have the honor to be, etc., The Mayor of Saumur, Deputy to the Corps Legislatif. "LOUVET."

The record does not say whether the offer was accepted.

AN IMPORTANT PROPOSITION.

The book entitled The Doctrine of Immortality, by Eld. James H. Whitmore, has been before the public long enough to establish its character as one of the very best works, if indeed it be not the best, yet written upon that subject. Its merits and efficacy are acknowledged wherever it is read.

It deals with one of the most important theological questions of the age. And our hearts have of late been stirred within us while we have beheld the church, and the world, too, almost wholly given to immaterialism. The children imbibe it, not only at Sunday School, but in the common schools. It is sung, prayed, talked, preached, written, so incessantly, that people generally take it for granted that it is true; but it is not true.

In every community there are some who will candidly consider the testimony against immaterialism, if they have the opportunity. We shall never gain all in any place; but there are few places where we may not convince some. Ministers cannot do all the work, though they are doing nobly and doing much. Our proposition is, in addition to our ordinary tract work, to print some thousands, as many as possible, of and send them out preaching the truth upon the nature and destiny of man. It is time for us to work, and work in earnest.

Our proposition is this. We will get out an edition of this work in cheap yet good and durable shape, so that it will be likely to be preserved, and will bear handling; for we wish them to be circulated and read. This edition will be published especially for distribution, and the price be such that every Adventist can afford to give away at least one copy.

PROPOSED PRICES.

FIVE COPIES	$ 1.00
THIRTY COPIES	5.00
ONE HUNDRED COPIES	16.00

☞ NO MONEY TO BE PAID UNTIL THE BOOKS ARE READY FOR DELIVERY.

We will commence printing the edition as soon as subscriptions for one thousand copies are received. As soon as it is ready, subscribers will be notified, and the books will be forwarded to their order, on receipt of their subscriptions. But send no money until it is announced that the edition is ready.

Friends of the truth of God, one and all, will you engage in this timely work? Will you respond to this call immediately, and shall our press, soon be set at work throwing off the sheets laden with this great truth? we await your reply. Send us word by the returning mail, how many copies you will take, from five upwards. Look about you, think of any who may be open to conviction, but are not interested enough to pay 50c, or $1.00 for the book in its present form, but who would read it if given to them. Make up your mind to supply as many of them with it as you can.

Brethren in neighborhoods and churches. When you assemble in your meetings, unite your subscription, and send them all in one name, and so get them cheaper, and more of them for your various fields. What results we should see if ten thousand copies could be scattered within a few months. Yet that number would be only two copies and a half to each of our subscribers.

Send in your subscriptions. tf

THE

ADVENT CHRISTIAN

TIMES,

A large, neat, eight-page weekly paper, thoroughly devoted to the advancement of the cause of Christ by the faithful advocacy, defence and dissemination of what is called [illegible]

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

THE TIMES contains, weekly, matter expository, exegetical, illustrative, practical; including communications, selections and original matter, with letters from those of like precious faith in all parts of the country, the news of the body, and a faithful digest of the news of the world bearing upon the signs of the times; with news of the progress of our cause in different parts, and also news of what our opponents are saying and doing, with expositions and refutations of their arguments; articles on prophecy; notices of current and useful literature; short sermons; a column or more for the children; choice bits of poetry—in short matter enough in every number to make a good sized book, and all furnished for only FOUR CENTS A WEEK, or [illegible] a year. No paper of its class furnishes so much reading matter, even when a greater price is charged.

The paper has been very useful in the past, and can be made more so by extending its circulation. To our friends who are working faithfully for this end, we make the following offer: We will send

THE TIMES, POST PAID,

to any address in the United States or Canada, on trial,

FOR THREE MONTHS,

for 35c. For one dollar, we will send THE TIMES to any three persons, three months, post paid; and any larger number at the same rate.

Who will take advantage of this liberal offer, to introduce THE TIMES in a village, a neighborhood, a church. For

TEN DOLLARS

you can send a live Advent paper to

THIRTY PERSONS

or into thirty families, post-paid, for three months. Could it fail to do good? Five dollars will pay for fifteen copies; and one dollar for three.

We make this liberal offer solely to introduce the paper in new fields and localities.

Will the ministry please publish it to their congregations?

Will our friends please tell it to their friends.

Will you who love the cause and wish THE TIMES to prosper, pay for 3, 5, 10, 50, or 100 copies, on these liberal terms. We have now 800 names, of partially interested persons among whom we could obtain

FIFTY PERMANENT SUBSCRIBERS,

perhaps more, could we send them the paper free for three months.

Who will send at once? Send in the names, with 33⅓ cents for each name, and (if you give the P. O. address plainly) we will guarantee the delivery of thirteen numbers of THE TIMES, free of postage, to each one of them.

Three thousand three months subscribers, on this plan, will give us a large and permanent addition to our list.

Address, JOSHUA V. HIMES,
Buchanan, Mich.

Correspondence.

Letter From England.

I have long been ashamed of my neglect in writing you. I might offer a sufficient excuse, explanation, and apology; but I cannot justify my long silence. I am indebted to you, and greatly obliged, by your continuing to send me the paper regularly. I like its altered shape much. I like its contents. I long to be at liberty from the galling yoke of this world's enslaving bustle, that I might be more, indeed wholly, devoted to the great and interesting work of proclaiming the nearness and certainty and character of that redemption, unto which we are called, and for which we hope. I rejoice with you in the success of the work which you are doing. I sympathyize with you in your trials. I pray God to sustain you, and to increase your triumph.

For nearly, or somewhere about, eight and twenty years I have had the pleasure of communication, by means of a paper and correspondence, with brethren in America, who have been brought to the knowledge that the Lord Jesus is coming again, and permitted the great honor of bearing witness unto that glorious truth. By their means I myself was brought unto that knowledge, and that blessed hope. by "The Voice of Elijah," published By Br. Hutchinson, and providentially scattered in this country, my eyes were opened, and I have been enabled through grace to hold fast the precious truth unto this hour, and now more than ever I rejoice in the prospect, and desire the Master to come. But patience must have its perfect work. Perfection in the Master was attained through suffering. Every true child receives, as we need most, corrections and scourging, because of our many shortcomings and offences. In him was no offence or coming short; but he was bruised for our offences, and by his stripes we are healed.

The great truth is spreading. Everywhere the children are having their eyes and their hearts turned toward home. This is not our home; this is not the place and the time of our rest. In this country the light is shining more and more brightly. The Rainbow, edited by Dr. Leask, is a valuable means of spreading the [illegible] and endangered its existence; some eschewed it at once; but more were raised up in their room, and the interest was increased in its abiding adherents.

It is a most gratifying result of recent investigation, that the current theology concerning the end of the wicked has been to a great extent corrected. Of all the errors ever propagated, of all the superstition that ever disgraced and afflicted poor, fallen humanity, nothing has been equal to the horrible blasphemy of that diabolical lie, which has represented, and presisted in the representation, that the wicked "shall not surely die;" or, in other words, that death, the wages of sin, means endless life in torment. No doubt many sincere Christians believe this to be the truth: but truth is not to be measured by sincerity. Mercifully and righteously God requires according to that which a man hath. God does not reap where he has not sown. Sin is not imputed where there is no law—The law entered that sin might be made manifest, and that all might appear guilty before God. Sin is transgression of the law; and "the soul that sinneth it shall die;" not continue in the endurance of torment forever. I remain as ever your faithful brother in Christ.

From J L Slick, Carroll Co. Ill Mar 6

I am a reader of THE TIMES: which is a favorite friend as well as a weekly visitor of mine. I like it very much. The reason it is liked by me is (1) because it comes out boldy (but in a loving and meek spirit) bringing with it God's Word to back up its assertions and teachings. (2) Because it brings things both old and new from out the rich treasures of God. (3) Because it admonishes its readers to watch and be prepared for the coming of the Lord who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing. (4) Because it furnishes its readers with such kind and cheerful letters from the brethren, who tell us how they are getting along as pilgrims, wandering in this world, which will soon be free from the fetters of sin. I would like to see more of my young and old friends take THE TIMES, but they are too prejudiced to read any such article headed Advent, although by hard work I have found three persons who promised to read it if I will send it to them, which I cheerfully do. You and I are strangers, but I hope brothers in Christ.

From D. O. Hisk, Maryville, Mo.

After parting with you, at our late Annual Conference, I started for Quitman, where I held a series of meetings for ten days. Large and deeply interested audiences. I dealt largely with the prophetic Scriptures, showing our manifest nearness to the great consummation, the close of the Gospel dispensation, and the coronation of Jesus, King of kings, and Lord of lords. Much interest was manifested, and when I called for an expression from the crowed audience, that all who believed we had preached the truth, should rise to their feet, a large two thirds promptly arose. Upon another occasion, after presenting the subject of the "thief on the cross" in concluding my remarks I asked that as many as would promise, before they slept that night, to bow their knees, and devoutly pray the prayer of the dying thief—"Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom," to arise, nearly every one arose. All our meetings were characterized by solemn candid thinking. The spirit of inquiry has been thoroughly waked up. A little church was organized, of eight members, with good prospects. Had but one day to spend at home, with dear ones, then on to the crowded school house five miles east of Maryville, to proclaim the tidings of our coming King. The chart, which I had just received, was promptly unrolled, and hung up, so that "he might run that readeth." And our authority for its appearance, was given in God's own words, from Heb. 2. Night after night did that chart tell the story of God's great plan, concerning the history of our race from the days of Babylon's proud and mighty monarch to the time when the seventh angel shall sound the doom of all earthly governments, and usher in the consummation of all things, even the time when "reward" shall be given unto prophets, and saints, and those who fear God's name, small and great, even the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that God should "destroy" those who corrupt the earth. Never did I see men and women listen [illegible] hearts to Jesus and prepare to greet him with joy when he comes. Thirteen good substantial members were added to our church at Maryville, and several more are intending to unite soon. We expect to constitute them "A branch" of the Maryville church. Praise God, for this manifest strength given to our Maryville interest.

My next point was at Sander's S. H. eight miles south of town, where I labored against many disadvantages, but endeavored faithfully to present "present truth," prophetic and practical. And although I have preached two years among this people, I never saw so deep a seriousness manifest as now. The Lord grant that seriousness may ripen into Christian character, made noble by the sanctifying power of Divine truth.

About fifteen arose to express their desire to come to Jesus. I was obliged to close the special meetings because of other engagements. I hope, and pray the work may not stop until many shall fully come to the enjoyment of "that hope that maketh not ashamed." There are some noble ones, who are searching the Scriptures, whose hearts the Lord has opened, and I would make honorable mention of Br. Wm. Jones and family, also young Br. Thos. Vandervort, and his excellent wife, who are resolved to give themselves to Jesus, the great "life giver," and wait patiently for him to appear. May their hearts be strong like heroes and heorines for God and his truth.

My next point was the McGinnis S. H. eight miles north-west of town, where you, Br. Himes, stood, one evening in a "pack" of human beings, and presented the truth on "the importance of prophecy." Here I held a three day's meeting, the object being to show why we as a people were looking for the coming One. I at once hung up the chart, and told the people, that was God's chart—for he had commanded, "saying, write the vision, and make it plain on tables." The last evening, I stood in a perfect pack, and for an hour and a half they listened with great interest to the prophetic word, marking the downfall of Papacy and our consequent proximity to the time "when the kingdom and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the saints of the most High, who shall possess it forever and ever." I am now at home, and must now look after the interests of the little church in town. We have arranged to hold meetings the 2d and 4th Sunday in each month, having permission of the trustees to occupy the commodious school house. We commence regular service the 4th Sabbath in this month. In entering anew upon my labor in this town, to give greater prominence to the glorious truth of Jesus' soon coming, who will then bestow life and immortality upon all who are in sympathy with him, I do feel that my "sufficiency is of God;" and with a humble reliance upon his grace. I try to be strong of heart and do my best for Jesus and his truth; and like Br. D. Q. Kent, from whom I received a warm Christian letter a few days since. I pray, "uphold me by thy free Spirit; then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee."

From C. R. Stouffer, Chicago, Ill.

For five years I have been a confessed follower of the Lord Jesus. During part of that time I have been searching for the Truth faithfully, as for hidden treasures. Raised in the M. E. Church, in early life I imbibed the principles of that body relative to the Spiritual kingdom, and the immediate flight on cherubic wings of the soul at death, to that land "beyond the bounds of time and space." For a long time I was a warm advocate of those theories, and could prove, to a demonstration, that the body only dies, and the justified soul released from its prison-house immediately rises to heavenly realms, where it spends an eternity "singing and praising forever."

But ever and anon I'd meet with difficulties in my attempt to study the Word impartially. Above all things the doctrine of the Eternity of Torment troubled me exceedingly, for I could not reconcile it with the revelations we have of God's infinite goodness and love. There seemed a great weight upon me when I tried to rise to a conception of the length and breadth, the hight and depth of the love of God, and that dogma alone was in a fair way to drive me from a belief in the Scriptures and revealed religion.

My trouble in this point was confided to a brother of mine, who quoted the usual passages that are made to prop up that doctrine. But they only capped the climax (and ought to have been convincing (?). He said my organ of Benevolence was too large; that it made me regard the Father's love only, and left me powerless in the presence of his justice.

Sometime afterward a tract fell into my possession, by some strange providence, and I read it as eagerly as a starving man would devour a morsel of food. It was a scriptural exposition of the doctrine of future punishment, and was as welcome as the sunshine after the rain. Guided by its light, I sent for THE TIMES, and then for Collins' Address and several other tracts.

A few thoughts culled from those sources were the key to the whole mystery. Passage after passage (before entirely misunderstood) fell into line and harmony, as the stars under the magic wand of Kepler and his followers. Now I no longer feel oppressed as I study the Word. Great doors have swung noiselessly upon their hinges and revealed the treasures of God. Now I can run the Christian race gladly, and with renewed strength. Now I can undertake work for the Master that was once too great for me to attempt. Now I can speak of the love of God and feel sure that it is done conscientiously, and with a heartfelt sense of its truth. And, though now a member of the Baptist church, which in this city does not countenance the glorious truths we hold dear, still I mean to do all I can to bring the truth before others, remembering the words—"Let him that hath my word, speak my word, saith the Lord."

I enjoy reading THE TIMES and the Quarterly very much, and find it as near like what that talk must have been on the way to Emmaus, as anything we have outside of the Bible, and this side of the great white throne.

From Myron T Stone, Newaygo Co. Mich:

I have taken THE TIMES for one year and over, and now will enclose money for the coming year. I cannot do without it in my family. Myself and wife have many rejoicing times, as we sit around the fireside reading it. We like its glorious Bible doctrine, and we are looking for our Master to come and set up his kingdom. Jesus said: "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." Is there not a people preaching this same gospel at the present day? or are we in darkness? "But ye, brethren, are not in the darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day. We are not of the night, nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober. For they that sleep, sleep in the night and they that be drunken, are drunken in the night. But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breast-plate of faith and love, and for a helmet, the hope of salvation. For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us; that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you, by the Word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Brethren, let us comfort one another with these words. Although we may be tried and tempted, and have many things said against us, we have the promise of eternal life, if we endure to the end. Why, glory to God! then our loved ones are coming forth again. Our fathers and mothers and sisters and brothers, who have long been sleeping in the dust of the earth. They shall awake, and come forth to sing the new song on the other shore. 'Tis there I expect to meet that sweet little babe we laid away in yonder graveyard. Oh! how we loved her! We stood over her little cradle while she was sick, we did all we could for her; but she is gone. She has fallen asleep till Jesus comes. Then, if I am faithful, I shall meet that little one again. For God says in his Word, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Glory to God for the promise!

From Samuel Horsecroft, Sussex, Eng.

[illegible] is a very cheering messenger. I should like to see all those brethren and sisters that I hear from in it. But that is impossible in this mortal state. I admire their confidence and hope. I sometimes read their letters with many tears, which brings close union in love for each other. I see, also, that at some of your meetings in America you have a great many present to sit down at the table where we commemorate the broken body of our Lord, showing that he was bruised for our iniquities, and wounded for our transgressions. It is with great difficulty that we get any to set along with us, or give us a fair hearing. I should rejoice to hear this gospel of the kingdom proclaimed throughout my country, as it seems to be in favored America. But we are like Moses, and get only a few to stand on the Lord's side. I would to God there were or could be more, before the Lord comes out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth. What a day it will be when the heavens are on fire, and the earth is melting in the fervent heat.

From O O Fosdick, Sparland, Ill

I highly esteem THE TIMES, for it was the means of bringing my loved brother to Christ, whom I had many times prayed for, and this winter have had the privilege of hearing him praise God for salvation. I wrote you to send him the paper, hardly believing he would read it; but praying that he might, and that it would do him good. Bless the Lord, that he hears the prayers of his weakest children. But I hope to be stronger in the Lord. My heart's desire is to be the means in my Father's hands of doing some little good in this mortal life. My heart longs for the time to come when immortal life shall be given, when Christ shall appear to judge the world, and we shall remove to his presence where we shall be forever safe. I have sore trials, and the adversary does not fail to try and get me off the right track. But I shall put my entire trust in Jesus, that dear friend upon whom I have relied these thirty-one years, and can say of a truth, he has been a helper in every time of need.

From M E Rawlings, Jefferson Co Ind

The truth is gaining here, through much opposition. We were delighted with Br. Himes' visit last spring, and sincerely hope he may be permitted to come again. There has been quite a revival of religion here in the Methodist and Baptist churches, and we have been made to rejoice in seeing sinners coming to Jesus. I witnessed this morning a beautiful baptismal scene. Seven precious ones were buried with Christ in bap[illegible] rising to walk in newness o[illegible] Most of them were young peop[illegible] [illegible]sh to say to all that love Jesus [illegible] I want to be one of that glori[illegible]on, that shall live and reign with [illegible] our King in the new earth, redeemed. Blessed, happy thought! May we all be there. There is nothing satisfying in the pleasures of this world, I have no wish to share in them. My desire and prayer is that I may run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith.

From L H Ferrell, Louisville, Ky

I thought you would like to hear from us at Louisville. We are still looking for the Master's return, as everything that we see of the signs of the last times, as spoken of by our Savior, leads me to believe we are close to the time when the King, whose right it is to reign, will come and cleanse the earth from sin and sinners, and receive his waiting saints to himself. Dear Lord, hasten the time, when sorrow and sin will be no more. It does us good to hear from the brethren, and to hear that the Lord is adding to their number such as will be saved. These are evil times. The Spiritualists are doing great harm here, leading many away to destruction. Even the churches are getting filled with them. I am sorry that they cannot see that the spiritists deny Jesus and the Bible; which if any do, they will perish.

From B E Vowles, Utica, Minn.

It is now nearly a year since I first embraced religion. A short time after, my parents came out under the labors of Br. S. C. Wellcome. We have had good times here, for four or five weeks past. Br. M. Wellcome came down and helped us, with great success. The cause of truth is gaining ground in this region. We have preaching every Sunday, and prayer-meeting twice a week, on Thursday and Sunday. They are largely attended. Let us remember each other in our prayers. Though we shall never all meet, to greet each other, until we meet in the kingdom.

From Eleanora Chase, Wheelock, Vt March 21

It is indeed heart-sickening to see the provisions that are being fed out to the starving of earth, both temporally and spiritually. I look on with pity, and say in my heart,

"Fly, fly on wings of mourning
You who the truth can tell,
And sound the timely warning
To rescue souls from hell."

For has not the time come when we are commanded to know that the Lord is even at the door, and that whatever is done must be done quickly? My little duties are confined mostly to my household, as are those of most mothers; and my prayer is for the salvation of my children. Will they be left to perish with those who reject mercy, when those who accept it as a free gift from God through Jesus Christ will be caught up to be forever with him? Will they be left to come up in the second resurrection, to suffer the penalty for sin? I am led to ask how shall I come before God in behalf of my children and loved ones. I feel that though God is ever ready to hear the prayers of all who call upon him, there are but few who are earnest and effectual in their supplications. I feel, too, that I am deficient in spirit and wisdom, and perhaps faith. But these are all gifts which our heavenly Father has promised to those who will humbly ask for them.

It seems that in consequence of the terrible confusion of the nations and powers of earth, and the eagerness for gain, which is covetousness, the sin by which man fell, and the love of pleasure for which all its votaries are in hot pursuit, the spirit of God, the greatest of blessings conferred upon us, as fallen creatures, is but little heeded, and the prayers and entreaties of God's people seem to be as water thrown upon the ground.

I try in my feeble manner to put what little light I have before all with whom I have to do, and to honor my profession of the faith of the gospel, hoping thereby to lead some to glorify God,

A few of the despised company who are looking for the return of Jesus are scattered among the hills and vales of the Green Mountain State, and my poor heart exults in the thought that though we are a scattered people, the time is soon coming when we shall be gathered from the East, West, North and South, out of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, from the living and from the dead.

Sr. Mary Otis has been here nourishing and strengthening the little band in this place, and trying to bring some to Christ, and we hope two or three have truly been brought to the saving knowledge of the truth through her instrumentality.

From Mary A Tibbetts, Volga, Ind. March 13.

If it affords the same pleasure to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad in the land to hear of the prosperity of the Master's cause that it does us, then the little I may say, though in much bodily weakness, will be welcome to the household of faith. We have as a family had much affliction for weeks past, several of us being down at once, myself among the number. But thanks to the watch care of our blessed Father in heaven we are convalescent, and hope soon to engage in the more active duties of life. But in all our affliction I wish to record the glory of God that we have been almost miraculously aided in keeping up the Bible-class which meets every Lord's day evening at our own house. The numbers in attendance have constantly increased, and a growing interest manifested in searching the Scriptures, with the understanding that former prejudices and training are to to be laid aside, and the teachings of Jesus and his apostles taken instead. This in some instances is very hard to to do, as a long established opinion is hard to yield, even though Christ himself should demand it. But this is the only correct and fair way in searching the Scriptures of truth.

I can scarcely tell you in words the joy brought to the household when the mail of Saturday evening brings us THE TIMES. The family gathers round while one reads aloud, and this forms the banquet of the evening. To hear of the spread of Gospel truth, that the word of the Lord is beginning "to run and be glorified," according to the desire of Paul when preaching to his Thessalonian brethren, form a spiritual entertainment that brings joy and peace to our hearts. I was particularly interrested in the letter of W. F. Talley. My heart run out in sympathy in view of his great sufferings and his willingness to learn of Christ. and as he remarked "that he was not a member of any church," and yet is a full believer in Jesus the Life-giver, I thought how beautiful it would be for two ministers of God to take him in a sheet down into the baptismal waters, and there permit him "to put on Christ before the world. We know a case just like this where a sister given up to die, felt she must obey the command of our Savior; on being denied the privilege in the church of which she was a member (the reasons assigned that she would die in the act), she remarked, "they say I must die any how, and my conscience cannot rest without baptism. So give me my request," Still being denied, she sent for two Baptist ministers, who are never afraid of baptism killing folks. They came and took her in a sheet to the waters near the house, and "buried her in Christ in baptism." Best of all the woman was made so happy "in the obedience of faith," that she came up shouting the praise of God, and begun to mend from that moment, and soon recovered her health and lived ten years after her baptism.

May our blessed Lord speedily come, set up his glorious kingdom, giving us immortal bloom and eternal life is the daily prayer of your waiting sister in "the blessed hope."

Brief Extracts.

Br. W. W. Locke, Hamilton Co. N. Y. says: Nearly every Sabbath I go before the people and try to spread the light of gospel truth in this backwoods country. Thank the Lord, I can see some fruit of my labor. Although I have been bitterly opposed by the churches, I have kept free from all useless debate, while speaking boldly as opportunity presented. I feel confident, should time continue, there will be a good Advent church here within twelve months. Next summer I mean to get some good speaker to come and help. Meantime, with God's blessing, I will continue to plow and prepare the soil as well as I can to receive the seed. Pray for us. ———L. N. Bowles, Green Co. Wis.: It gladens my heart every week to read of the coming kingdom of my Savior. I love to think that "the very same Jesus that the Jews crucified, is so soon to come to set up his kingdom upon this earth. I feel like trimming my lamp anew, and giving up all for Jesus, and to so live that I may have an abundant entrance into his kingdom. Pray for me.——— ———Jno. W. Said, Jackson Co. Iowa: We are looking for the Lord to come soon, and trying to be ready for the event. I am trying to sound the gospel trumpet wherever I go. I have just returned from a protracted meeting in Clayton Co., with Br. Kenney. The Lord was with us. When I returned home, I found one of my children sick. After seven days it died, and we laid it away until Jesus comes. When the voice of the archangel sounds, with the trump of God, it will awake to new life and immortality. "What a blessed hope is ours!"———Jno. Carver, Porter, Mich.: A word regarding our little church in Marcellus. We have had good meetings all the time since we organized, three times a week, and a good turn out every time, when the weather has been so they could get out. When we organized there was a number that held to the orthodox theories, but now they see the truths of God's Word, and say, "what a beautiful Book it is now!" We have had to drop some names, but what we have left are most of them alive, I believe in the Gospel truths. I am looking forward with a great deal of interest to the speedily coming kingdom, and pray, "Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly. And put an end to all sin and folly."———J. C. Hooper. Wis.: I was in hopes of hearing a good sermon to-day from the text—"The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." But it it was a sad failure. He stated that he dead mentioned, was the eternal banishment of the soul from the presence of God. Not a particle of Scripture was used in the whole discourse. We, as a community, are starving for the bread of life, although there are five churches to 1200 inhabitants.——— ———S. Weese, McLeod Co. Minn.: It cheers my heart to read the letters from the brethren and sisters abroad, as it does all the household of faith in this place. We also enjoyed a feast of fat things last Sunday at Hutchinson. Sr. Fassett preached the word to us, and we had a truly blessed season. Even unbelievers had to say it was the best preaching ever heard in the place. It was the first Advent preaching they had ever heard.———J. M. Bryant, Wayne Co. Iowa: I could never understand the Scriptures until I heard the Adventists preach; but now it seems easy to understand them. I have heard many of my friends say that the Scriptures are hard to be understood; but the reason is because they have not the right light upon them. I am very thankful that they are so plain. May the Lord help me to know and profit by them.——— ———Julia A. Rhodes. Berville, Mich.: In some places where I visit, I find in every house such a cloud of tobacco smoke as would nearly strangle one not used to it. And at the place where I was to speak, they would smoke until I commenced the services. Then if I asked them to buy a book, or send for the paper, they would like them well enough, but cannot get the money! At the same time they are paying from 30 to 75 cents a week for their tobacco. And some will set by their fires enjoying their smoke, while I am walking five miles to an appointment, and their horses standing idle in the stable. We need more of the Spirit of the Lord to lead us away from such vices, and to do those things which will do every body good. Let them stop spending money for tobacco, and use it for the paper, the tracts and the ministry, and the Lord will be well pleased.———G. E. Merrill, Worcester, Mass.: I believe that soon Christ will come in the clouds of heaven, and when he comes the dead in Christ will rise first, and we which are alive will be changed in a moment (and as though a moment was not quick enough, Paul says, "in the twinkling of an eye), and caught up to meet Christ in the air." Blessed thought! That in a few more days or months we shall see our friends that are sleeping in the dust. More blessed still, for we shall see Jesus the Life-giver. Oh! I must be faithful, I will by the grace of God live so that I shall be worthy to have an abundance enterance in through gates into the city, the New Jerusalem. Who will be there? May the Lord help us all to be faithful.

Conference Minutes

Conference Secretaries will please make their reports as interesting as possible. This can be done by making them condensed and pointed, and by omitting all six extras of mere forms.

Minnesota.

SILVER LAKE DISTRICT.

Q. M. commenced Feb. 8. Elds. R. L. Scott, E. Bacon, Ramer, and Parsons were present. The Lord was also with us to bless, giving us eighteen souls in conversion, and added to the church. Fifty sat down with us to the Lord's table. R. L. Wood, Sec'y.

WINONA DISTRICT.

The third Q. M. of this district met in connection with the Annual State Conference, at Winona, Jan. 30.

Officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows:

Wm. J. Burnell, President; S. C. Wellcome, Secretary; Philip Ramer, Treasurer.

Adjourned to meet at S. H., one mile N. of Br. Mitson's, about three miles N. E. of Elliota, Minn., on Friday, May 26, at 10.30 a. m.

PHILIP RAMER, Sec'y.

Crisis please copy.

Michigan.

EASTERN DISTRICT.

The third Q. M. of this district assembled at Columbus, as per appointment.

Brethren present: Elds. Geo. Wright, A. D. Mackie, R. Crandell, Smith Nowlin, E. H. Durand, Wm. Branch, J. M. Snook, Wm. Cumins; Brn. Schisco, Barnum, Stevenson, and others.

The Church in Grant was received to membership. Organized by E. H. Durand; 23 members. Deacons, A. B. Doty, and Edwin Lambkin. They have preaching monthly, and prayer-meetings semi-weekly.

The church sent in a recommendation for the ordination of Br. Durand.

The names of Wm. Cumins, Br. Hicks, and Smith Nowlin were also presented for membership. Referred to the Committee, to be reported at the Annual Meeting.

The ministers report the interest good in their several districts, so far as they have been able to occupy the field. Many are being converted, and some of the most hardened are submitting themselves to be the servants of Jesus.

There were no direct results so far as conversion of sinners at this meeting but we leave it in the hands of the Lord. Circumstances were unfavorable for continuing the meeting.

J. M. SNOOK, Sec'y.

Ohio, State Conference.

The first semi-annual session of the Ohio State Conference, will be held (by invitation of the Pastor,) with the church in Norwalk, Huron Co., commencing Thursday evening April 20th and continue over the following Sunday. Let every church in the State be sepresented by their delegates if possible. Come brethren and sisters in Christ to this meeting, and with the closing hours of time, let us push forward the car of salvation.

E. M. M'CULLOCH, Pres. of Conf.

Iowa.

IRON HILL DISTRICT.

The third Q. M. of this district commenced at the Ergate S. H. March 4. Eld. F. H. Kenny in the chair, Br. Buck, Secretary, pro tem. Quite a goodly number of ministers present, considering the extremely bad going.

Br. Dutton reports his labors as being blessed of God especially while laboring with Br. Buck at Toronto. Br. Buck's home. There has been a church raised up there, of some twenty-five good members. The prospect is encouraging.

Br. Adair reports labor at the Campbell S. H. the Lord giving his blessing. Br. Woodard, is trying to win souls to Christ, and hope to do more for his Master. Br. Buck is laboring at home most of the time, and has seen the Lord's cause prosper at Toronto.

Br. F. H. Kenny reports that besides his regular appointments, he has held a protracted meeting with Br; John Said at Elk Creek, in which the Lord blessed their labors abundantly, and a church was organized of sixteen members and good prospects for more.

On Saturday others came in. The question of our Annual Conference and camp-meeting came up, and it was voted that it shall be held about the first of June, as the committee may arrange. As some of the committee were absent, we could not decide where it should be, but left that to be determined hereafter.

The next question was, shall we have a tent? Some expressed themselves as doubtful about raising enough means. But on comparing notes, it was thought we could do it, and have it ready for our Annual Meeting.

Voted, that Br. Dutton correspond with those who had pledged their money.

Additional pledges, to the amount of $23 were received, making something over $200 in all.

Brethren of the A. C. Conference of Iowa, will we wake up to this matter? We can have a tent if we will go to work for it.

Sabbath morning we had a love feast at 9.30; and notwithstanding the rain and mud we had a good congregation, and interesting services through the day. We have reason to thank God and take courage.

D. A. DICKINSON, Sec'y.

CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE Q. M.

The second Q. M. of the Iowa Christian Conference convened at Clear Lake, Cero Gordo Co., Iowa, on March 11. In absence of the President and Secretary, Dr. Stanley was chosen President, pro tem., and A. J. Cottrell, Secretary.

Br. P. S. W. Deyo presented a letter from the church at Tama City, numbering 36 members, asking admission to the Conference, and recommending as a preacher, Eld. J. B. Talmadge; and Brn. M. A. Newcomb and T. F. Marshall as licensed preachers, who were received into the Conference.

Br. Deyo also presented a letter from Br. E. A. Marsh, who was also received into the Conference.

Adjourned. Preaching by Br. P. S. W. Deyo. At the close of the meeting, Sunday evening, a goodly number sat down to the Lord's table. It was a time of general interest.

A. J. COTTRELL, Sec'y.

Notices, Etc.

PHOTOGRAPHS.

I have often been solicited for my likeness by my friends both East and West, but have seldom furnished them because I could not get a satisfactory picture. This difficulty is now overcome, and I take this method to say to all who wish it, that I will send my picture, a "Berlin" photograph to any address for thirty cents. I would furnish them free of cost if I was able, but I am not. My address is De Kalb, Ill.

I would say that these pictures are taken at Mosher's gallery, No. 30 Washington St. Chicago. This is said to be the finest gallery west of New York City.

The "Berlin photograph" is the finest style of picture for an album I ever saw. A reduction in prices is made to ministers.

But as all earthly pictures will fade at last, let us see that we have "Christ formed with in the hope of glory," so that we may be made like Jesus' most glorious body when he comes. This is an "unfading hope." F. BURR.

Woman and her Work.

This is a monthly journal of 16 pp., established for the purpose of enlarging the sphere of woman's usefulness, especially in that department which becomes her so well, Christian charity. Published at Concord, N. H. Mrs. T. F. Sargent, Editor; assisted by Mrs. E. S. Jennings, Mrs. H. B. Hastings, and others.

Single copies, $1 a year. Address Mrs. T. F. Sargent, Box 456, Concord, N. H.

N. B.—New subscribers to both papers, will receive THE TIMES (weekly) and Woman and her Work (monthly), for $2.25 a year. Six months for $1.15.

In accordance with the motion of adjournment at the last Annual Meeting in Amboy, Ill., Sept. '70, there will be a meeting of the Western A. C. Publishing Association, at Amboy, Ill., in connection with the General Conference, commencing Thursday, March 23, at 9 a. m. As this will perhaps be one of the most important meetings the Association has yet held, it is desired that there should be a full attendance, especially of the original members. Let us have a rally of our business men and the ministry in behalf of the business of the cause of truth. Come, and come early. WM. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, - - - - - MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 28, 1871.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: } Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ THE TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed, the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil: the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Barr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,
To whom all communications should be addressed.

Small Tracts.

We have just issued a new edition of that popular little letter and distribution tract, A Wonderful Dream. $1 a hundred. It is really a choice thing.

We, also, have new editions of the "Gem" series. 25c. a hundred. Just the thing for the envelope, or to hand to one who is in a hurry. They can be read in a moment, and cannot fail to make themselves felt.

Acknowledgment.

I have received for the Church Debt at Strawberry Point, from New Hartford church, $4.10; Clear Lake, $2 50; Greeley, $1.50; Bear Creek, $2; Julia Shaw, 66c. Total, $11.26. P. S. W. DEYO.

WE last week received a fac simile specimen of a copy of the London Times as sent to Paris by Carrier Pigeons. It is on a little sheet about as large as ones hand, yet containing some 80,000 words This miniature is obtained by "microscopic photography." By aid of a strong magnifying glass, the entire paper can be read. It is really a curiosity. L. H. Rogers & Co., 81 Williams St., New York, send a copy for 25c. Or, a copy of 8 pp. of Harper's Weekly, similarly reduced.

THE leading Watch dealers in all the principal cities and towns of the United States, from Portland to San Francisco, and from St. Paul to New Orleans, to the number of over five hundred, have sent voluntary testimonials to the National Watch Company, that they consider and recommend the Elgin Watches to be all that the Company advertise them, as better finished, more correct and durable than any in market of rival for prices.

This is a deservedly high compliment to the character of the Elgin Watches, and ought to be conclusive with watch buyers as to the watch they want.

New Subscribers List.

WANTED AND REALLY NEEDED.

Twenty-six is a long way from a thousand. But we remember that this is the poorest time in the whole year for canvassing, and therefore are not at all discouraged about raising the thousand subscribers during the year. However, in order to this end we must work early and late in season and out of season. Let us succeed. Who will help?

The following are the contributions to this fund the past week:

The Times.

AT HOME.

It is feared the Joint High Commission appointed to adjust the differences between Great Britain and the United States will not be able to arrive at any result which will be acceptable to the people of the United States. The impression which prevailed at first, that England was prepared to offer the olive branch, and that mere quibbles would be discarded for candid and frank avowal of wrongs committed and damages to be adjusted, has given place to the fear that England is not disposed to make any magnanimous concessions, and that if any arrangement is entered into for the settlement of the pending questions, it will be on a basis of equivalent. The Commissioners seem to incline rather to the plan of purchasing the right of our fishermen to fish freely in Canadian waters without restriction. This is looked upon as an easy mode of settlement. On the other hand there is a decided popular sentiment against commencing the adjustment of our differences with England by our agreeing to pay England money. It is said that neither the revival of the reciprocity treaty nor payment of a considerable sum for the right to fish forever in Canadian waters, would be popular with our people.—There are 326 defaulting internal revenue collectors in the United States, and the total amount of their indebtedness foots up over $20,000,000. —It is very probable that the San Domingo scheme will be defeated in the Senate, as there is quite a majority against it.—The Senate, in Executive session, March 20, confirmed the naturalization treaty made by Mr. Motley with the British Government. By this treaty, Great Britain acknowledges the right of her subjects to renounce their allegiance and become citizens of the United States, and reciprocal provisions are made for conferring naturalization on Americans who may wish to become subjects of England.—The President issued a proclamation March 24, commanding the so called Ku Klux insurrectionists to disperse within twenty days from date; threatening, in case of refusal, to compel them to respect the laws by force of arms.

ABROAD.

France.

The reign of terror still continues in Paris. Scenes parallel with those of the revolution of 1793, are now daily enacted it its streets. Paris mobs form themselves ab libitum into accusers, courts and executioners, and destroy in cold blood any persons who are suspicioned to have intercourse with the Imperial faction or the Versailles government. The insurgents hold complete possession of Paris and the fortifications on the west and south. All overtures from the Versailles government are treated with contempt by the National Guard, and the proclamations of Theirs are met by counter proclamations from the insurgents. The first one in reply to a government proclamation is as follows: "The French people waited calmly until an attempt was made to touch the life of the Republic. The army did not raise its hands against the arch of the liberties of the Republic, the only Government that can close this era of invasion and civil war." The people of Paris are convoked for communal elections. The proclamation is signed by the Central Committee of the National Guard The second proclamation is headed "To the People of Paris," and is as follows: "You have entrusted us with the defense of the rights of Paris. We have driven out the Government which betrayed us. Our mission is fulfilled, and we now report to you. Prepare for communal elections. Give us as our only recompense, the establishment of a real Republic." Some signatures, thirty in number, are appended. Versailles is strongly protected by troops, variously estimated from 30,000 to 60,000, and it is supposed the insurgents have about the same number in Paris. But while the mob is as violent as ever, the people of Paris are recovering from their bewilderment and lethargy, and the change of sentiment is so marked, the condemnation of the mob so unequivocal, and the government so popular with the Mobile Guards and regular soldiers, who are flocking to its support, that the leaders are beginning to take warning. In Rouen and other cities the insane action at Paris is strongly condemned, and the revolt shows but few signs of extending to other cities or to the provinces There is reason to hope that the rule of ruin will come to a short and full stop. The reaction in favor of the empire gains strength hourly, and unless the present government take active steps for the enforcement of order, the more peacefully disposed may require a power that is not afraid of using violent means to enforce it.—In the National Assembly of March 22, Jules Favre read a letter from Count von Bismarck, who says events in Paris do not indicate the execution of the convention entered into with the German commander, which forbids any approach to the line before the forts occupied by the Germans. Count von Bismarck claims the restoration within twenty-four hours of the telegraph which has been destroyed, or Paris will be treated as an enemy, and should there be any more proceedings in violation of the preliminaries of peace, the fire of the forts will be opened on the city. Favre stated to the Assembly that he had replied to Count von Bismarck that the insurrection in Paris was a surprise to the Government, but would be repressed. If there was delay in its suppression it was because the Government was still hopeful of avoiding bloodshed.—It is announced that the Nationals at Lyons only await the arrival of a delegation from Paris to form a Central Committee on the plan at present operating in Paris.—Menotti Garibaldi, it is reported, now commands the Montmartre insurgents.—Ex-Emperor Napoleon is at Chiselhurst, Eng., where he was enthusiastically received by the inhabitants; indeed, his journey from Dover to Chiselhurst was a continued ovation.

March 26.—The situation in the main is unchanged. The government has taken no decided action against the insurgents, other than distribute more proclamations. But the insurgents themselves are becoming disaffected, and numerous divisions occur among the leaders, which are rapidly spreading to the troops. The Insurgent Central Committee have given an explanation of the reasons for their course, which is as follows: "We organized in the first place on account of information that Thiers was cooperating with Bismarck for the overthrow of the Republic, the evidence of which was overwhelming. Thiers had endeavored to provoke the Committee to acts of violence, but they waited, and he had himself committed the first outrage by attacking Montmartre. The objects of the Committee are to secure municipal rights for Paris, free elections, and the abolition of the payment of rent due during the siege; to form one vast republic, under the regime of the commune, which is to be more comprehensive than ever, as advocated by Louis Blanc and Victor Hugo, and to be based upon compulsory education.

Germany.

The glaring contrast of the scenes in Berlin with those in Paris cannot but strike every reader. While anarchy reigns in Paris the new Parliament of United Germany meets peacefully in Berlin, and listens enthusiastically to a speech from the newly-created Emperor breathing only of peace and unity.—Count von Bismarck has been elevated to the rank of Prince of the German empire, and Gen. Count von Moltke has been presented with the grand cross of the Order of the Iron Cross.—The semi official Provincial Correspondentz to day in an editorial on the troubles in Paris says Germany will not interfere with affairs in Paris now, but she will know how to guard her interests and press the engagements entered into by France.

March 24.—The statement comes from a reliable source that orders have been issued to stop the return home of French prisoners for the present.

Spain.

MADRID, March 23.—The result of the elections to the Spanish Cortes is as follows: Chamber of Deputies—Carlists, 30; Republicans, 96; Moderates, 15; Montpensierists, 13; Ministerialists, 200. Senate—132 Ministerialists, and 19 opposition members.

Rome.

One of the most striking results of the change of rule at Rome, is the establishment of a church of the ancient Waldenses, whose persecutions form a strange chapter in the romance of church history, within the limits of the Eternal City. The Baptists also have a house of worship in Rome, and there are two Episcopal Churches, an American Protestant Church, and an organization under the patronage of the Church of Scotland.

The Finances of Germany.

Great as have been the victories and the successes of the Germans on the field of battle, they are not the only triumphs achieved by their Government in late years. Although their country is naturally not as rich as France, England, or the United States, it is financially much better off; and this is the case, not because the last-named countries have more expenses, or, rather, ought to have if they were managed rightly, but because the administration of North Germany is a model of economy. Although Prussia, the main power of the Confederation, has always maintained an enormous military force, proportionally much too large for its population and resources, although it has of late made extraordinary efforts to increase its naval establishments, and has waged several gigantic wars in the past few years, its debt remains to-day one of the smallest of any State, large or small, of Europe. And this is not on account of heavy taxes that crush the people, and paralyze all industry. The taxes in Prussia are much lower than in our country, or in England or France. But the Prussian rulers have, ever since Frederick William I., the father of the great Frederick, been characterized by an extraordinary spirit of economy, and a most rigid supervision of the finances of their country, which prevented the harpies of the public treasury, and fraudulent contractors, from pursuing their nefarious work.

Much has been said and written about the Prussian military system and the Prussian system of education, but we believe that the excellent management of the German finances has just as much to do with the successes of the German nation as the deeds of valor of her soldiers. This has always been recognized by Prussia's sovereigns, as is shown by the remark of Frederick the Great, who declared, during the bloody seven years' war for the possession of Silesia, that that nation would come off victorious which had the last dollar in her treasury.

Prussia and Germany have waged three large wars, with an unheard-of number of soldiers, in the last seven years; she has been victorious in each of them, and now stands pre-eminent among the military nations of the world, and to-day her debt and that of the North German Confederation is not quite four hundred and fifty millions of dollars currency. Never has her treasury stopped specie payments, and no issue of paper money has been thrown upon the people. Her credit is so good that at a recent subscription for bonds, at a low rate of interest, and contracted in the midst of a desperate war, the amount subscribed exceeded the demand, and her securities were sold above par, gold value. Besides, these bonds do not represent an absolute debt; the greater part is only invested capital which the Government has laid out in railroads and mines, that pay greater dividends than the Government pays interest for the capital they represent.

Low as is this debt, the immense war indemnity which France will be obliged to pay will most probably decrease it to a small figure, or wipe it out altogether, and if we may trust the report that France will, besides the cession of Alsatia ar[illegible] also surrender some of her colo[illegible] part of her fleet, we see the n[illegible] under the most favorable fina[illegible]

Leaving its country [illegible] unfettered by debt, it will stand powerful after having floored its rivals. It will own a large fleet, and its arsenals will be filled to overflowing with splendid arms and equipments. It will be mighty on land and sea, without being crushed to earth by a terrible debt, and an immense flood of paper currency. Such are the fruits of an economical management of finances.—Chicago Republican.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

The late war gave opportunity for the circulation of over 1,000,000 volumes containing from one book to the entire Bible, and in a half dozen languages. Romanists gladly received copies, and promised to preserve them. —The Baptist Missionary says that the executive committee "will take the responsibility of sending seven men to Burmah, three to the Teloogoos, one to the Garos, two to the Assamese, two at least to China, within one year from this date, if the men can be found." The members of our churches will provide the means, if there are found fifteen young men willing to devote themselves to this work.—An exchange states that so far as can be ascertained, the entire expenditure in the United States, last year, for church buildings, ministerial education, home and foreign missions, and the publication of Bibles and religious books, amounted to less than eight million dollars. But the consumption of artificial flowers by American ladies in that same time is put at fifteen million dollars!—Mr. Mundella, M. P. for Sheffield, has delivered two lectures to his constituents, describing his late visit to America. Mr Mundella, who is a member of the Church of England, says: "My experience of the American people has satisfied me that there is as deep—I do not know whether I should be justified in saying a deeper—religious life in that country than in any other country in the world." (What then must we think of the rest of the world?)—The house of worship of the flourishing church for freedmen at Dudley, N. C., of which the Rev. John Scott, formerly of Waterbury, Conn., is pastor, was burned by the Ku-Klux on the 21st ult. Mr. Scott, after giving some incidents of the fire, adds: "By its blazing timbers we knelt down that night and prayed that God would help us; prayed for the 150 pupils that would come in the morning and find neither house nor books; for the 200 people who, next Sabbath, would look for a place to worship and find none. Books, papers, all were lost. The Secretary of the Society was coming next week, when we intended to dedicate the house and insure."

New Appointments.

Preaching brethren will please make this department interesting by sending in their appointments, for new fields especially. In appointments, give place and date of meeting; and make "notices" brief pointed and stirring.

☞ Always write appointments on a slip of paper by themselves.

Advent meetings are held in the S. H. at Hesperia, every Sunday at 10.30 a. m., and 7 p. m. Prayer-meeting every Wednesday evening.
F. B. SCOTT.

I will commence a protracted meeting on Tuesday evening, March 28, in Aurora, Ill., holding over the following Lord's day, and as much longer as the interest of the meeting may demand. Brethren and friends in the vicinity, come in and help us. J. W. BURNHAM.

NOTICE.

There will be a special meeting of the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association at Earl, Ill., commencing Wednesday, May 31, 1871, for the consideration of the following proposed amendments to the constitution, and such other business as may come before the body:

On Art. I. The propriety of shortening the name, as a matter of convenience.

Art. III., Sec. 2. Leaving out the words—"and shall be the General Business Agent of the Association, amenable to the Board of Trustees."

Add to Art. III., Sec. 9, as follows.

Sec. 9. The Board of Trustees (or the Association) shall annually elect a General Business Agent, from their own number, or from the membership of the Association, who shall hold office until his successor is chosen, and be responsible to the Board of Trustees for his official conduct. If in any case the Business Agent be not already a member of the Board, he shall be a member of the same while holding that office, ex officio.

Another proposal is as follows:

Add to Art. III., Sec. 2. But the person filling these two offices shall not at the same time act as Editor of the periodicals published by the Association.

Omit all of Art. III., Sec. 3, except the words "The Secretary shall keep a faithful record of the proceedings of the Association," and add, "and make a report of the same at the Annual Meeting."

Make Sec. 5 read: The Publishing Committee shall decide upon the question of the publication of such books and tracts as may be offered to the Association for that purpose; and shall also act as Editorial Committee for the organ of the Association.

That Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV., Sec. 1. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; and of all persons holding certificates of membership in this Association at the date of the passage of this amendment.

Sec. 2. No member shall hereafter be entitled to more than one vote.

Sec. 3. Voting by proxy shall not be allowed.

Sec. 4. Churches having fifty members or less shall be entitled to one delegate, and churches with more than fifty members shall be entitled to an additional delegate for every additional twenty-five members.

Or, Art. IV. be amended to read:

Art. IV. The membership of this Association shall consist of all ministers of the gospel in good standing in our State Conferences, sympathizing with the objects of the Association and co-operating therewith; and of delegates of the various churches connected with said Conferences; each church being entitled to one delegate.

Add to Art. X. these words: The Treasurer shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to such amount as the Board (or Association) may elect.

Make Art. XI. read: This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any Annual Meeting of the Association: provided, notice of the intended alteration shall be given in the organ of the Association at least — months previous to such Annual Meeting.

Or, let it read: This Constitution may be amended by a vote of four-fifths of the members present at any Annual Meeting.

To make whatever changes in the Constitution may be necessary in order to legalize the transfer of the offices and all the property of the Association to the control of the new membership.

By order of the Board.

To a Methodist Minister.

Dear Brother H—: You express a determination to do all in your power to turn me from what you deem to be "false doctrine." This, of course, is very commendable in you. I should respect your motive, whatever I might think of the strength of your argument. I regret, however, that you should prefer the "psychological" to the Scriptural method, in dealing with my case. "If false doctrine" is my disease, a direct appeal to the Scriptures would be more effectual in describing the symptoms and prescribing a remedy, than all the psychology in creation! I would not take advantage of a technical term. I think I understand something of the latitude that legitimately belongs to this subject. In full view of the facts, then, I must be allowed to insist that the method of argumentation you choose to adopt is neither satisfactory nor adequate. Nevertheless, I am more than willing to have you push your point to the utmost limit.

Your appeal to my personal experience is quite in place, provided experience is the matter to be surveyed and settled. But the appeal is not exactly relevant if the issue is of a doctrinal character. You cannot safely decide upon the correctness of my views by knowing the state of my heart. Hypocrites, backsliders, and persons of the most shallow and defective experience, sometimes stand upon a platform of "sound doctrine." On the other hand, many whose hearts are warm in the love of Jesus have heads as crooked, on various matters of doctrine, as one could well conceive. John Wesley truly said that "much love does not imply much light." Suppose you could know that I had lost every particle of saving grace, and was now occupying a position of spiritual destitution, darkness, and death. Would you be authorized in deciding that my degenerated experience was the result of a change of views! Not unless you could prove two things: (1) That I had embraced sentiments of downright infidelity. (2) That no other cause had operated to produce the sad result. Is false doctrine the most prolific source of backsliding? Are there not Calvinists and Arminians, Anabaptists and Pedobaptists, Arians, and Trinitarians, and persons of diametrically opposite sentiments on a score of doctrinal issues, who give equally good evidence of being the Lord's real children? How, then, can you judge of the soundness of my theology by inspecting my inner experience? I fear that conclusions reached by such a process would be founded more fully upon fancy and fanaticism, than upon sober, Scriptural facts.

You think you detect a wrong spirit underlying the following expressions in my last: "Glory to God! I know I love him, and he loves me. We are on excellent terms!" You fancy the last utterance indicates an improper state of heart. If your conclusion is just, you must surely have the "gift of discernment." But on carefully reviewing the language, as well as the feeling that prompted it, I am unable to discover the wrong. If the above testimony is not true, it ought to be. I believe with all my heart it is true. The chanel of communication is open, and refreshing streams of life are flowing. My own poor heart drinks in the currents of heavenly love, and rejoices to know that God really loves his child! Though sometimes grieved, and often misunderstood, I can—I do cast my burden down at my loving Father's feet, sweetly conscious that "I love him, that he loves me, and that we are on excellent terms;"—that while others prejudge, misjudge, unchristianize, and anathematize, God knows me better, loves me better, and treats me better! Praise his name! I am not an "infidel," and he knows it!

O my dear brother, I wish you could see the difference between the muddled, mutilated, murdered theology of the day, and the clear, glorious, thrilling truths of God's word. "What is the chaff to the wheat?" And what is human tradition, though tinged in glittering colors, compared with a pure, divinely-inspired Bibleism? Away with a misnamed "orthodoxy," made up of mystification, moonbeams, and heathen philosophy, and give us a living Christianity, luminous with heaven's own sun-light, and founded on eternal truth! Give us Jesus instead of Plato—facts instead of fables—substance instead of shadows. What harmony pervades the Bible, and what glory crowns the character of God, when we come right to the fountain of truth and get our theology first-handed! Never did I appreciate the glory of the Gospel, or see the vastness, richness, and perfection of the redeeming scheme, as I have since I learned the dependence of the race for immortality upon Jesus Christ, as the world's great Life-giver. This central truth of revelation is a key that unlocks the treasure-house of spiritual knowledge, and lets a flood of light upon the whole subject of human redemption. It is a key-stone to the arch—very much depends upon it. Will you lay aside your prejudice and dare to accept the Bible itself, in the place of all human constructions of it? I feel that God wants to shake you loose from the blinding, cramping, spiritualizing influences and teachings of a heathenized theology, and send you out a flaming herald of Bible Christianity, to travel a wider circuit and wield a mightier power than ever before! Whether I have fallen a victim to the "psychological" argument, or feel the touches of God's inspiring Spirit, my yearning heart craves for you a nobler mission than you have ever yet entered. I seem to see before you a brighter pathway, and to hear you exulting in clearer visions of God and heavenly things. The day may not be far distant when you will thank God that you did not succeed in turning me from what you now suspect to be "false doctrine." Walk in all the light that shines. I pledge you to do the same.

Your Brother in Jesus,

A. A. PHELPS.

Rochester, N. Y., March 28, 1871.

Father, when the soul is struggling
Mid the surging seas of life;
And the heart lies crushed and bleeding,
Weary of this fearful strife—
Then, oh! give each struggling Spirit
Strength to breast the fearful tide,
Strength to mount the surging billows
That arise on every side.

That Which Was Lost.

"For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost."

Since the transgression in the Garden, and the banishment from Eden because of that transgression, man has been in a lost condition. The term "lost" signifies: obscured, covered up, gone away, bewildered. In his moral condition, he was obscured, covered up, lost to the good and the right. By his own act he plunged himself into a ruin from which he had not the power to extricate himself. In this condition, "gone away" from his loyalty to his Creator, and sunk in sin he became so bewildered, that he could find no way to get back to the beautiful home which was provided for him at the first. In this bewilderment, the only light that shines on his pathway, is by revelation from heaven. The all-wise God must tell him where he is, and what he is, and point out the way by which he may return to that home from which he is an alien. In his banishment he is exposed to death. Hence in the prospect his life is lost. In his guilt, he is declared to be "dead in trespasses and sins." In order to live forever, his sins must be taken away, and he must become morally alive. "The Son of man has power on earth to forgive sins." This Son of man declares: "I am come that they might have life;" and "there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." We are lost by sin. Sin is of the devil. "For this cause was the Son of God manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." When the power of Satan to control us is overcome by the grace of God, we share the first degree of salvation; and when the last enemy, which is death, shall be destroyed, and we changed to the likeness of the Savior, all of "that which was lost" will be restored, and salvation will be complete. "Oh! hail happy day!"

"Look Straight Through the Middle."

In a short story that I read this morning there was an account of a man, who, in his selfishness questioned the propriety of benevolence to his poor neighbor. He said he had "looked at both sides of the question." His little boy who overheard the remark asked him why he didn't "look straight through the middle." And I thought it would be well for many people to take the same advice and look at most things straight through the middle rather than be all the while looking on the outside.

Some think they cannot give to the cause of Christ because they are too poor, and their family needs all their earnings. Well, those are the two sides. Now look through the middle and see how much is spent for tobacco and other things needlessly. Don't cover up these things in the middle. Look at them straight and see how they look. Other folks will look through the middle of the question for you, and see just how it appears, if you don't. And above all God will look upon the inside and judge accordingly. Then again, on the immortal soul question, men will look on both sides and see on one side eternal torment for the wicked as a result, and thinking that is very unlike God, they look at the other side and see the salvation of unrepentant men as a result, and this certainly cannot be so, and what shall they do? Why, look straight through the middle and you will find the whole immortal-soul theory baseless. You will find that "God only hath immortality," and "all the wicked will God destroy." That makes the matter look reasonable and consistent with God's character of justice and love.

Don't be afraid to look straight through the middle of all questions. That is the place to look to know the truth. Scanning the outside won't do. See what's in the middle. Look straight through. F. BURR.

Unrecognized.

A man told me a few days ago that he could not recognize me as a Christian, because, I did not believe in the immortality of the soul. This man tried to prove his position correct: when he got through he had made out that God punishes a part of himself. He quoted Gen. 2: 7—"and the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul;" also, Gen. 1: 26,—"And God said, let us make man in our image, after our likeness," and claimed that when God breathed into Adam's nostrils the breath of life, that he imparted to Adam an immortal soul; and it was this soul that was made in the image and likeness of God, and not the material man. He also claimed that the soul is a part of God, and because God is immortal therefore the soul is immortal.

I asked him if he believed the soul that sins would be punished? "Yes." Do you say that which was made in the image and likeness of God was the soul, and it was imparted to Adam when God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life? "Yes." You also say the soul is a part of God, and is immortal? "Yes." And you believe the soul that sins will be punished? "Yes." Well, then according to your reasoning, God punishes a part of himself to all eternity, does he not?

I believe that the two texts above quoted mean just what they say and say just what they mean, no more, no less. And when God made man from the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, it was the man that became a living soul, and not a soul in the man. I also believe that it was the man that was made in the image and likeness of God; and instead of God punishing a part of himself, he only punishes the man he made from the dust of the ground. I am glad that my eyes have been opened to see the truth on the nature of man, and all the truths connected with it. I bless the Lord that I had the moral courage to embrace it. Notwithstanding some will not recognize me as a Christian on account of my change of belief, and others think me deluded and crazy, I shall continue to hold fast to the "blessed hope," and to all the truth regardless of what man may say, or do unto me.

I remember well the time (about four years ago,) that I gave up errors for the truth. What a joy I received no tongue can express. I felt as though I had been converted over again. The Bible became a new book to me, for it was in harmony. I have never for a moment repented of the step I then took, and I do not expect to. The way grows brighter and brighter, and the Lord is with me, and will be to the consummation of my hope, if I trust in him. G. E. MERRILL.

BRIEF EXCERPTS.

Let us not be misunderstood. Our high respect for Mr. DARWIN himself extends to his researches. When he deals with facts we welcome his additions to our knowledge. Our controversy lies exclusively with his theories. And his theory of the Descent of man—after eleven more years of patient labor—is not only "not proven," it is absolutely as conjectural and as baseless as ever. The Rock. Dr. CARPENTER, and there can be no better authority, distinctly says: "There has been no advance in the foraminiferous type from the Palæozoic period to the present time." And he states it as his "conviction that the present state of scientific evidence, instead of sanctioning the idea that the descendants of the primitive type or types of Foraminifera can ever rise to any higher grade, justifies the Anti-Darwinian inference, that, however widely they diverge from each other and from their originals, they still remain Foraminifera." The Baptist Union says: "Union and uniformity are by no means synonymous. The Christian idea of union admits of great variety of opinion and practice." Yes, but it does not admit of variety of aim and purpose. "How can two walk together unless they are agreed?" Multitudes of Christians are getting rich. Five thousand dollar incomes are common, ten thousand not rare, and larger ones are frequently met. How to manage this fortune is the question, while it should be, how to keep it from managing us. A good brother said, in Philadelphia, not long since, I promised the Lord if he would give me $50,000 I would give him all over, and he has given me twice that. He never thought how he was condemning himself. Zion's Herald.

All our papers report extensive revivals. We object however, to such a statement as we frequently find, namely: "A wonderful revival has just closed," as if it was the conclusion of a theatrical season. A revival should never close. What are churches kept open for? Show? Ibid. The only real and formidable peril from Americanized Romanism lies in the direction of political chicanery and consequent legislative action. The consummate arts and most elaborate efforts of the Romish priesthood are now devoted to the subjugation and control of party leaders. Until their purposes and plans are fully exposed to the great body of the American people the supreme interests of civil and religious liberty must be seriously threatened and imperiled. It needs only that the press and the influential men of the nation watchfully note and widely expose these purposes and plans, and the danger will be met and counteracted.—Christian World.

A little Sunday school scholar, when asked to define chaos, answered, that it was "a great pile of nothing, and no no place to put it." Another, when asked to define Slander, said that it was "when nobody did nothing, and somebody went and told on't."

Dr. L., of St. Louis called on a colored Baptist minister and propounded a few puzzling questions. "Why is it," said he, "that you are not able to do the miracles that the Apostles did? They were protected against poisons and all kinds of perils. How is it that you are not protected in the same way?" The colored brother responded promptly, "Don't know about that, Doctor. I 'spect I is. I have tooken a mity sight of strong medicine from you doctors, and I is alive yet."

Select Poetry.

MORNING AND EVENING.

Pray at the morning hour;
Grace, like the light and dew,
Is richest on the spirit shed
When thoughts are fresh and new.
The rising light lights up the heavens
Before it shines below;
So first on God, and not on earth,
Should we our thoughts bestow.

Pray at the evening hour;
Grace like the golden light
That opens when the sun is set
Will smile upon the night.
The light still lingers on the sky
When all is dark below;
So last on God, and not on earth,
Should we our thoughts bestow.

THE TRUE PRIEST.

Whom hath God called to be a priest,
His minister to erring men,
To point them to the Gospel feast,
To win them to his fold again?—
Can learning give—a little Greek—
The right in such a name to speak?

Is it the wisdom of the schools,
Art, wit or eloquence alone,
The poet's, the logician's rules,
These—only these—that God will own?
Is it enough the Church's call,
Succession apostolical?

Is it to seek for ease,—apart
From earthly cares to live withdrawn?
Lies it in purity of heart,
Or in the whiteness of the lawn?
To be arrayed in gown and stole—
Does this make up the care of souls?

Oh no! a righteous God disowns
Such shepherds; they are none of his.
Away with trifles, knaves and drones!
God's call the only calling is.
Faith is worth more than cambric bands,
And love, than laying on of hands.

How vain are talents—aye, how small
The power of language—taste refined,
To him who seeks not first of all
God's blessing and a lowly mind!
The noblest gifts to mortals given
Seem paltry in the sight of Heaven.

The man of fervor—apt to teach,—
He is the true, accepted man;
And he may pray and he may preach,
Though Pope may curse and bishop ban.
If God but give him leave to toil,
He needs not the anointing oil.

He scorns the sins of baser minds,
Disdains to seek for worldly pelf;
He weeps for others' sins, but finds
The "chief of sinners" in himself.
Who seeks not to be first, but least,
Behold in him God's chosen priest!

The Wicked Dead.

I think the resurrection of the wicked is as certainly taught in the Scriptures as the resurrection of the righteous. I offer a few proof-texts. I will look first at the testimony of Balaam (Num. 24: 17), when the Spirit of God was upon him. See v. 2, "I shall see him, but not now: I shall behold him, but not nigh." This portion of Scripture, given by inspiration of God, cannot be true if Balaam is not raised from the dead. Here we have the testimony of one that "heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the most High, who saw the vision of the Almighty." His confident expressions in relation to seeing Christ certainly looked into the future, and reach to the second coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead. He never saw him while he lived, and, therefore, if his words be true, he must be raised from the dead. I think none can doubt but that Balaam was a wicked man, and loved the wages of unrighteousness. Yet in uttering this prophecy, God guided his tongue aright, as he did the tongue of his ass, on a certain occasion.

We will now see what Job says. (ch. 30: 21): "The wicked is reserved to the day of destruction, they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath." We have the testimony of the wise man on this subject in Eccl. 3: 17: "I said in mine heart, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked; for there is a time for every purpose and for every work." The time for this work of judgment is when Christ the judge shall come. (2 Tim. 4: 1.) In Eccl. 12: 14, we read: "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." Daniel (ch. 12: 2) says: "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." No quibling can overthrow this positive testimony.

I will now turn to the New Testament. "The men of Nineveh shall rise in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it, because they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and behold a greater than Jonas is here. The Queen of the South shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it; for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon: and, behold a greater than Solomon is here." (Mat. 12: 41, 42.) In these last portions of Scripture we are plainly told that the men of Nineveh and the Queen of Sheba, shall rise up in the judgment with the generation to whom Christ spoke. Now if they do not rise from the state of death and the grave, Christ's words will fail. Perish the thought!

Again we read (Acts 24: 25): "And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come, Felix trembled. And answered, go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee." I would ask here, what made Felix tremble in view of judgment, if there is no judgment beyond this state of probation?

Mat. 26: 63, 64: "And the High Priest answered and said unto him, I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God. Jesus saith unto him, thou hast said. Nevertheless I say unto you, hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven," how can the High Priest see Christ coming in the clouds if he is not raised from the grave? I cannot tell.

Again we read (John 5: 28, 29): "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth! they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." Has our Lord spoken the truth or made a mistake? I believe he knew what he was talking about. Again we read (Jude 14): "And Enoch, also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds, which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." This Scripture applies to all, at least in the gospel age, including the man of sin, and all his followers. I think the judgment here spoken of as being executed upon the ungodly has not been executed in any sense upon the wicked more than on the righteous, up to the present time. Nor can it be, unless there is a resurrection of the wicked. I have the kindest feelings for our brethren who differ from me in this matter; but I fear the doctrine of no resurrection of the wicked dead, in the place of such plain Scripture as we have quoted, is calculated to sap the foundation of the Christian faith, and the hope of the resurrection of the righteous: for the resurrection of the one class is as clearly taught in the Bible as that of the other.

H. CAMPBELL.

Green Point, L. I.

Comments on Revelation. No. 5.

In No. 4 I presented my reasons for believing the Popedom to be the power symbolized by the beast with two horns like a lamb, and also, identified the woman and the image therewith.

I now invite your attention to a few prominent, predicted deceptions that have been practiced in this stupendous stronghold of iniquity. 'Tis written —He doeth great wonders, so that he maketh the fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men." Query. In what sense are we to understand "heaven" and the "fire" emanating therefrom. Most certainly as metaphoric, as in ch. 9: 1, "I saw a stone fall from heaven." Also ch. 12: 1, 3, 4, 7. "War in heaven," etc.

In an article on "The Holy Sepulcher," credited to the National Intelligencer, there is a vast amount of disgusting fanaticism and deception, in perfect keeping with the "golden-cup" filthiness of the harlot's abominations after her devotees had "been made drunk with the wine of her fornication." Subjoined is a brief extract:

First.—"During the ceremony of Holy Fire, which takes place once a year, the scenes of ferocity and violence that occur are indescribable. Religious insanity, and all the horrors of blood-thirsty fanaticism, destroy many of the devotees. Crimes of the darkest character are committed with impunity. Half naked men and half frantic women struggle madly through the crowd with live coals of fire pressed to their breasts. Bodies of the stabbed and maimed are dragged out dead; the chanting of the priests, the howling of the burnt, the groaning of the crushed fill the thick, suffocating air; and from the swaying mass arises dying shrieks of 'Immanuel! Glory to God! Sickened with the disgusting and humiliating spectacle, the beholder turns away with the startling words of Ferdinand upon his lips—'Hell is empty, and all the devils are here!'"

The above and similar instances I could cite may be in part a fulfillment of the prophesied wonders. But I am inclined to believe that the consuming of heretics by fire, at the stake, for not accepting the horrid system of idolatry and image worship, set up in the Babylon of the Apocalypse, by the imperial monsters of Rome, constitutes the great deception of the two horned beast causing fire to come down from heaven. Please notice the following: "And DECEIVETH THEM that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast. (v. 14.) This is a comment in some sense on v [illegible] "He exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him." The delusions are evidently enforced by the power he received from the civil arm "in the sight of the leopard beast; consequently they both exist during the forty-two months. On this point the testimony is positive for this reason: the two horned deceiver exercised his power by proxy. Of this fact no one that readeth the prophecy carefully can doubt. Therefore when the limited period allotted the first expired, most certainly the lamb horned power terminated with it. History is explicit on this point.

The influence of this beast and his idolatrous image worship, is set forth in decided language in v. 15. "And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed." The idolatrous system of Romish worship infused a dread into the hearts of all its devotees, from the monarch on his throne to the lowest menial. The kings feared "excommunication," and myriads of the image worshipers were horror struck at the idea of purgatory and eternal hell fire. The Pope threatened monarchs for insubordination, and his subordinates menaced his pusillanimous dupes, by what the apostle designates "all power and signs and lying wonders." How literally was the prediction fulfilled! By these means, in the language of the text, "he had power to give life unto the image of the beast."

It may be interesting to insert a few historical testimonies corroborative of the above statements. As early as the days of Pepin we find an eruption of the Papal Vesuvius, in these words of blasphemy:

"I, Peter, called to the apostleship by Jesus Christ, the son of the living God, beseech you, Pepin, Charles, Carloman, and you, lords, clerical and lay of the kingdom of France, not to permit my city of Rome and my people to be longer rent by the Lombards, if you wish to shun the leaving of your bodies and souls in eternal fire, by the forks of Satan.

I command you to prevent the residue of the flock which the Lord has committed to me, from being dispersed, if you do not wish [illegible] [illegible] you as he did the children of Israel.

Do not abandon yourselves to criminal indifferences, but obey me promptly. Thus you will surmount all your enemies in this world; you shall live many years, eating the good things of the earth, and after your death you shall obtain eternal life. Otherwise, know that by the authority of the Holy Trinity—in the name of my apostleship, you shall be deprived forever of the kingdom of God."—De Cormenin, Vol. 1, p. 192.

Pope Boniface in his famous constitution denominated Unam Sanctum, says the historian:

"Under its command are two swords, the one spiritual and the other temporal. But I will let the decree speak for itself: Either sword is in the power of the church, that is to say, the Spiritual and the material. The former is to be used by the church, but the the latter for the church. The one in the hand of the priest, the other in the hand of kings and soldiers, but—at the will and pleasure of the priest. It is right that the temporal sword and authority be subject to the spiritual power. Moreover we declare, say, define, and pronounce that every human being should be subject to the Roman pontiff, to be an article of necessary faith."—Dowling's Hist. of Romanism, p. 353.

Thus did the Pope, the two horned beast, give power to his image, his idolatrous worship, and terrify and intimidate all that would not bow down and worship.

RAWZAAN.

A Good Resolution.

I mean that one among other good ones adopted by the Minnesota Conference relating to Marriage and Divorce. Others may be as good, but my special word now is for this one. The preamble sets forth the frequency of divorces granted to parties for other causes than that specified by the Savior, and the undermining thereby of the marriage relation; and then the resolution is as follows. I hope all will read it carefully.

Resolved, That we, as ministers of the gospel, cannot knowingly unite such parties in a new marriage, contrary to the teaching of the Savior.

I call that good because it strikes a vital point, and one that has to some extent been unnoticed. I shall express my hearty sympathy for these good brethren who adopted it. I feel free to say honestly, but with a feeling of warm indignation against the practice, akin to "the scourge of small cords" practice of the Savior, that we cannot and will not fellowship any man, whoever he be, who knowingly unites in a sham, mock marriage (and it is nothing else), those who have broken altar-spoken vows, and come to plight others, doubtless to be as lightly regarded. Nay I cannot fellowship the minister who thus unites them, any more than the parties themselves. A general disfellowship of such characters would be just such a "scourge of small cords" as would effectually rid the church of all such persons.

I have a case in point, in which, for obvious reasons, I withold names and localities. "A." was, and for aught I know, is to-day, a zealous professor of faith in Christ. His wife was a good Christian woman, above reproach. So said those well quallified to judge. The house where they lived was a double tenement. In the other part resided "B.'s" wife. A feeling sprung up between A. and B.'s. wife. On a certain Saturday A. applied to the courts for a divorce from his wife. On Monday B.'s wife made a similar application. The courts did not fail to decree divorces in both instances, and the parties were legally free from their partners, and were doubtless, intending marriage; at least such was the woman's expectation. For this purpose she, at least, had sundered the old ties of marriage, and doubtless A. had at the time similar intentions. But before the marriage day arrived, he saw one he fancied better, and behold the sequel. He applied to a preacher, [illegible] was well acquainted with the parties, and this man of God (?) performed the marriage ceremony.

All such parties are a scandal on the church of Christ and ought to be denounced, not only by the Minnesota Conference, but by all ministers all over the land and world. Brethren in the ministry, everywhere suffer a word of exhortation. Cleanse yourselves from all such endorsement of adultery and adulterers. Pass resolutions, follow them up by acts.

The Lord Jesus Christ is coming soon to judge the world. Solemn thought! Awful consideration for those who are winking at sin, tampering with, endorsing it, and yet professing to be ministers of Christ. We are in the last days; days when men are "without natural affection," when courts are ready to sanction for trivial causes the separation of those who ought to love and cherish each other, having plighted their faith at the marriage altar. Miserable festering corruption is stalking abroad unblushingly everywhere, apologizing for itself by claiming a legal sanction of its guiltiness, by a sham marriage of those who in the sight of heaven are not and cannot be "one flesh." The bed of such is as surely the adulterer's bed as that of those who make no attempt to disguise their crime, and is not half so honorable, if there could be honor about sin in any form. We shall all be lost if we are not pure and free of all stain from this and every other form of sin and pollution.

The Christian's Peace.

"Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth give I unto you," was the legacy which our blessed Redeemer bestowed upon his sorrowing disciples, just as he was about to bid them farewell. Our Lord could have chosen any other gift for them just as well; but he knew that that gift would be the most precious to them in their hours of need, and that no blessing on this earth could be more valuable to man than peace with God. To be happy with God's peace we must be made partakers of God's nature, and to do this we must believe in Jesus and his promises. "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might be partakers of the divine nature."
